Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; but here is something everyone acknowledges—the conditions that prevail everywhere in regard to the mosquito are known to all of us—everyone is afflicted alike—and yet we hesitate to make provision that there shall be Government cooperation with the States.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I come from a place where they do not have mosquitoes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh; I have been bitten by mosquitoes in Chicago.

Mr. MANN. Nearly all such get bitten [laughter], but what I wanted to inquire is whether the object of the appropriation is to discover if mosquitoes will bite; and, secondly, if the way to get rid of them is to abolish the water courses of the country because that is where they all breed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If you keep your water courses clear—if the channels are deep—you will help to eliminame the mosquito, because a mosquito thrives where water is stagnant, where the water is not moving, and where there is miasma.

Mr. MANN. Dry up the water courses and you get rid of the stagnant water.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, but brush will remain, and old tomato cans will fill up with rain water, and mosquitoes breed in them.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, the department has been doing some work with the money appropriated for the purpose. I do not know really how we can meet the situation submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He says the States seem to be able to take care of the mosquitoes while they are in the States, but they have no control over mosquitoes coming from other States. I do not know how he can meet that situation unless he will propose and secure passage of an amendment of the migratory bird law and make it include mosquitoes. I suppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania is equal to that task, because he has been able to engraft a mosquito provision on the river and harbor bill. [Laughter.] I believe, by his persuasive eloquence, he could get a mosquito amendment on the migratory bird law to take care of the migratory mosquito.

Mr. TILSON. The interstate commerce law has been made to do duty in everything else; might he not use that?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Evidently a good way to take care of the mosquitoes has been found. The gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks of it—putting oil on the water and taking care of the stagnant places. With the aid of the Federal Government, the difficulty has been located and a remedy has been found, and nothing remains to be done except to spend a little money and use a little effort, and it is up to the States and the people of the localities to furnish the money and do the work themselves. It is not incumbent on the Federal Government to follow either one of these troubles in the States, to find not only the cause and discover the remedy, but actually furnish the money to do the work of overcoming the trouble and eradicating this difficulty. There is surely a limit to the kind and amount of work the Federal Government should be asked to do, and a limit to the amount of money it should be asked to contribute for the relief of troubles existing in the States. After a remedy for evil conditions has been found the people of the States ought to spend their own money in applying it.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. One trouble is that the mosquitoes refuse to respect State lines; they do not hesitate at all to go from one State which may eradicate a part of them into another State which takes no means to eradicate them at all.

Mr. MANN. Forbid them by law.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Well, the gentleman will have to have something like the migratory-bird law. I can not think of anything better. The remedy suggested is as reasonable as the question which the gentleman asked.

I wish to state what is being done with the $7,000 of this appropriation.

The department says the object is to determine the requirements for the protection of individuals on plantations and elsewhere against malarial mosquitoes.

The procedure is as follows: An estate of 20,000 acres situated at Mound, La., has been selected for an intensive study of mosquitoes of that region and their relationship to agricultural problems. Comparative studies will be made at other points.

As to the result, a careful preliminary survey has already been made of the plantation and the past malarial history correlated with the productiveness of the plantation. A careful estimate has also been made based upon observations of the actual cost of malaria to one of the plantation units in the reduction of productiveness.

That is a statement in general terms of what the department has done and is doing. Perhaps the gentleman from Pennsylvania can understand it better than I can, but that is what the department says about it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there any specific appropriation in this bill for mosquito investigation?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Out of this appropriation the department proposes to expend $7,010 on the mosquito proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is nothing here to show it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is what the department says it will do with the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE) there were—ayes 14, noes 21.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general administrative expenses connected with above lines of investigation, and for miscellaneous expenses incident thereto, $3,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in 1912 I introduced a bill in regard to the investigation of rubber, again in December, 1915, and I will read it. It is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 369) making an appropriation for the investigation, study, and testing of sagebrush and greasewood which may be used for producing rubber, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the investigation and study of methods and testing sagebrush and greasewood which may be used for producing rubber, alcohol, and acetic acid, including their utilization.

Mr. Chairman, this subject has been taken up with the Department of Agriculture in the Bureau of Chemistry. I have furnished to the department on several occasions the raw sagebrush and raw greasewood from the West, also samples of rubber extracted from sagebrush and greasewood. This country at the present time is paying exorbitant prices for rubber of all kinds to make rubber goods, tires for automobiles, which are exceptionally high and expensive. The field from which this material can be produced, if a proper process is found, is enormous. Practically all of the Rocky Mountain and the Pacific coast States have millions of acres of sagebrush lands, which brush is not only of no present known value, but a detriment to the country, so far as we have been able to discover at the present time. It can be cleared, and it reproduces itself in a year and a half or two years. In other words, the supply is enormous. There is practically no limit to it. The samples presented to the Bureau of Chemistry produce a fair quality of rubber. We have no rubber plants in this country, and it is well worth a small expense in making investigations to find out a process by which this product can be extracted from the sagebrush and the greasewood, the quantity of which is so enormous in the Western States.

I am getting further data also of material, and believe that by the time the committee again takes up this subject under the proper head I will be able to get a favorable report from the Department of Agriculture and a report of the committee to the end that this enormous product, so extensive, might be utilized instead of going to waste, as is the fact to-day.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that private parties have been making investigations along these lines for quite a number of years and is it not also true that some rubber or product resembling rubber has been produced from these plants?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. There are men at the University of Nevada and in Carson and down in the southern part of my State who have sent me samples, and who believe that if the Government, through its many agencies, with its ability, would investigate the subject, they would be able to devise some method by which this valuable and now extensive product might be taken from what to-day is a useless thing, scattered over so many million acres in the West.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. In view of the probability of the investigation resulting favorably and supplying this very much needed article, does not the gentleman think that we ought to quit giving away these public lands that are covered with sagebrush?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no; because——

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman does not have much faith in the experiment, I am sure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in regard to giving away the public domain, in the first place, it would be an incentive to place hundreds of millions in the West, because the product is becoming valuable, from which we could extract rubber, would result in clearing the land and in helping the settler. In other words, he would get some return from the clearing of the sagebrush and the greasewood, and thereby make it answer two purposes. After the land has been once cleared of sagebrush and plowed, in two years you will find a growth again of sagebrush 2 or 3½ feet high covering the entire tract, and in three years, except for the old stock, you would not even know that the land had ever been cleared. So, as a matter of fact, it will answer to the advantage of the Government, first, in assisting in clearing the land, and, second, in getting a by-product that now is destroyed, and hence it would be an incentive to fill these arid and semiarid tracts of land in the West and bring about crops of wheat and rye and hay, whereby we might increase our food supply and reduce the price; and I have such unlimited confidence in the chairman and the members of this committee that upon the presentation of the facts at their next consideration of this bill, knowing the importance of it and what it means to the development of the West, I believe we will eventually have an item in the bill that will authorize the department to go into this great enterprise.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I believe the paragraph is new in the bill?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the purpose of providing specifically for general administrative expenses connected with these various lines of investigation, when the department now has authority to expend any or all sums out of the preceding items for a like character of work?

Mr. LEVER. The committee and the department felt that the administrative expenses ought to be set out in this bureau as it is in practically all other bureaus. Heretofore this amount and this authority have been carried in the item immediately preceding, and we felt that we ought to know what they are spending from time to time in general administrative work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will this item in the bill prohibit the bureau from expending any sums whatsoever from prior sums for administrative work?

Mr. LEVER. It will not change existing law.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, when an item is carried in an appropriation bill specifically designating the character of work for which the appropriation may be used, no other item may be utilized for that same character of work. I am in sympathy with that construction and with the purpose of this amendment, if that is the intention.

Mr. LEVER. The intention of this item is to provide a specific appropriation for general administrative expenses of the bureau itself. As I understand it, in the item above, for instance, where you have a $57,000 appropriation, there may be expended from that item certain administrative expenses, but they are not general administrative expenses, and all general administrative expenses for the bureau; that is, for work immediately connected with the chief of the bureau and which is not carried elsewhere must be carried in this item.

Mr. STAFFORD. I take it this is a limitation on the bureau's activities for expending any of the foregoing appropriations for administrative expenses?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that the comptroller will not visé any appropriation out of the other respective items?

Mr. LEVER. It would not be authorized by the appropriation.

Mr. WINGO. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. Does the chairman think that $3,000 will be sufficient to cover the general administrative expenses of this department?

Mr. LEVER. That is all they estimated for; that is, for this bureau.

Mr. WINGO. I think there is something in the suggestion of the gentleman that where you specifically put out an appropriation for general administrative expenses, then they could not use, for instance, any preceding amount authorized for the general expenses of the work, such as, for instance, paying the salaries of employees.

Mr. LEVER. No; they would not have authority under this item, and I do not think they should have it.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the chairman——

Mr. LEVER. I think it ought to be segregated.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the chairman that you ought to segregate and specifically limit the amount of expenditure for administrative purposes, but it occurred to me possibly in connection with the idea that they could use, for instance, some of the preceding item of $57,000, they might be led into a position where it would be such as they would not have sufficient funds.

Mr. LEVER. I think we can risk the department's judgment on that, and they only ask for $3,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preventing spread of moths, Bureau of Entomology: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths by conducting such experiments as may be necessary to determine the best methods of controlling these insects; by introducing and establishing the parasites and natural enemies of these insects and colonizing them within the infested territory; by establishing and maintaining a quarantine against further spread in such manner as he shall deem best, in cooperation with the authorities of the different States concerned and with the several State experiment stations, including rent outside of the District of Columbia, the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and for medical supplies and services and other assistance necessary for the immediate relief of foremen, scouts, and laborers, and other employees injured while engaged in hazardous work under this item of appropriation, and all other necessary expenses, $305,050.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the language in lines 4 to 7, page 53. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested, as I have no doubt other Members were, in the statement made a few moments ago by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], a member of the committee, giving his views as to the proper limit of governmental activities under the appropriations carried in this bill. He expressed the opinion that the Government should investigate thoroughly, should disseminate information, should inquire into causes and develop remedies, and should leave the States and individuals to apply the remedies. Now, I am wondering why the committee in considering this matter of the brown-tail and gypsy moths, are not following up the policy thus outlined or suggested by the gentleman from Michigan? As I understand it, in the case of this appropriation the Federal Government has not only sought the cause, determined the remedy, but proceeded to apply it. As I understand it, under this appropriation the Federal Government for a number of years has hired large forces of men to destroy the moths, and actually entered upon the work of applying the remedy.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit, let me say that the department has cooperated with the States in which the gypsy and brown-tail moth occur. The States involved are appropriating, according to my recollection, almost the amount appropriated by the Federal Government. The statement was made before the committee by Dr. Howard, who has charge of this work, that they had about determined in their own minds that there was no hope in the immediate future of exterminating or eradicating the brown-tail or gypsy moth and that the present plan was to continue their quarantine and control of this as much as possible, with a view of holding it in check, in status quo, as it were. Now they have discovered, however—and they think it is promising—a parasite for the gypsy moth, I think it is, and last year they turned loose upon the gypsy moth 17,000,000 of these little parasites, and the result so far, in my judgment, from the testimony before the committee, is promising; and it is possible, if we can keep up the control over and a strict quarantine with this appropriation, that the time may come when the parasite will take care of the gypsy and brown-tail moths. It is a curious thing in insect life that nearly every insect has an enemy which will in time prevent or destroy it. That is the thought of the committee in this matter.

Mr. MONDELL. But at the present time and under the appropriation carried in the bill the department does actually engage in the work of destroying these moths?

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. This particular problem is one of the most serious that we have to deal with in this bill. These moths eat the leaves on the trees, multiply in great numbers, and can reproduce themselves in every section of the United States. We are endeavoring strictly to limit the territory which they may infest. If we should relax our diligence and these moths should be spread by vehicles, such as wagons or automobiles, or on lumber or through materials in transportation, or by other means, and should get into the southern forests and then out into the western forests, they would not only destroy the great timber product of the United States, but they would destroy the fruit-growing industry.

Mr. MONDELL. That is a pretty broad statement——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. How many varieties of trees do these moths attack?

Mr. HAWLEY. They attack all deciduous trees, and they attack the evergreens when there are no deciduous trees for them to live upon.

Mr. MONDELL. Has that latter fact been determined?

Mr. HAWLEY. I asked that question of the representative of the department when he was before the committee at this last hearing, and he made that statement. Some of the evergreen trees are attacked more readily by them than others.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, does the gentleman believe that we should continue to appropriate something like $300,000 indefinitely on this work, in view of the fact stated by the chairman of the committee, that it has now been demonstrated that it was impossible to eradicate the moths?

Mr. HAWLEY. I believe we should appropriate the money necessary to confine these moths to the localities where they now are until such time as the parasites may be multiplied in sufficient quantities to reduce them below the harmful point, as they have been reduced in the European countries from which they came, or until the moths have been reduced by other means.

Mr. MONDELL. And as they probably would be here if the moth got out of this particularly favored locality into a region less favorable, where nature would develop the parasite.

Now, as an illustration, I think we sometimes get overexcited about these things. I remember when Western States proposed appropriations of $1,000,000 a year for the eradication of the Russian thistle. Well, we did try to eradicate the Russian thistle, but we did not make very much headway, and it spread all over the country. It has not proven such a terrible pest as we had supposed it would be, although it is bad enough, in all conscience. The migratory grasshopper develops in the Rocky Mountain region, along the foothills of the eastern slopes of the Rockies, and when we have a few favorable seasons, warm, dry springs, those insects increase in such numbers that they migrate in great numbers to the eastern regions. But as soon as they reach humid territory nature develops in these migratory creatures certain parasites that kill them. While they may do great harm for a year or two, and formerly, when our fields were few and far between, the grasshopper frequently cleaned up great communities, in later times, when our grain fields are more widely extended, the damage is not so great. In no case do these hoppers flourish more than two or three seasons when they reach the humid regions.

Now, we might have started in to expend millions of dollars annually to exterminate the migratory Rocky Mountain grasshopper. We would not have gotten anywhere. By leaving him alone, nature provides a remedy. Would not nature provide a remedy for this moth before its ravages become extensive.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. The two illustrations the gentleman has chosen, I think, are not apt in their application to the difficulty raised by these two moths.

Mr. MANN. Well, are they not very apt to show that if you find the proper parasite and develop it, it will destroy much trouble from these insects, and is not that what we are trying to do here?

Mr. MONDELL. Nature develops these parasites whenever the creature gets out of the favorable environment.

Mr. MANN. Not unless the parasite is inherent in the locality.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask to close debate on this in 12 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to close debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto in 12 minutes? Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] referred to the Russian thistle as possibly to be comparable in destructive agency to the moths which this paragraph relates to. The Russian thistle does not go out throughout the country and live on trees by eating the leaves off.

Mr. MONDELL. I think "the gentleman from Wyoming" made no such suggestion as that.

Mr. HAWLEY. But I was going to prove to the gentleman that his illustration was not valid.

Mr. MONDELL. But the grasshopper illustration is.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will come to the grasshopper.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. In a moment. These moths migrate for a considerable distance, and they spread, if not hindered, with considerable rapidity, and they live on the leaves of the trees and kill the trees. A gentleman who was formerly a Member of this House, now a United States Senator from Massachusetts, said to the committee during the hearing on this subject that despite his best efforts a number of trees on his own estate had been killed by these pests.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. A large number of beautiful pines on my place at home have been killed recently by a beetle, but I do not believe the Federal Government should be called upon to come out there and exterminate those pests.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, if the gentleman will allow me to proceed, if these moths are not confined to the territory where they now are, but spread throughout the Appalachian region, which will be a native habitat for them in a short time, they will destroy all the deciduous trees and the fruit trees, including the great peach orchards in Georgia and other Southern States. They have been found in a few instances far West, according to the statements that have been received. They are sent there on nursery stock.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman inform the committee whether or not the spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths has been practically stopped by virtue of the bill that passed your committee and finally became a law? I refer to the quarantine bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. The danger from it has been reduced, but you can not say they have been absolutely stopped. It depends on the efficiency of the enforcement of the law.

Mr. RAKER. Could the gentleman inform the committee whether or not there is considerable nursery stock going from State to State that does contain the gypsy and brown-tail moths, which is not prevented by the present quarantine bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. We have only had one or two instances that I now recall where there was a little outbreak in any place, but it was readily detected and the trees all destroyed and the place cleaned up.

Mr. RAKER. Does the same condition apply to some importation of foreign stock?

Mr. HAWLEY. They originally came with the importation of foreign stock, but there is now no more of that being delivered in the United States from infected districts abroad.

Mr. RAKER. It is practically eliminated?

Mr. HAWLEY. They are not allowed to ship infected stock from infested districts in the Old World unless there is no danger of the stock being infested, and when it reaches here it is examined again, and if there has been any moths overlooked in the preparation of the shipment those shipments are seized and destroyed.

Mr. RAKER. Then the importation of these various insects, by virtue of the various quarantines, so far as the imported stock is concerned, is practically eliminated?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it is practically eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. I had some more remarks to make in answer to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I may want a little more than five minutes.

This is an appropriation for the control of the gypsy and brown-tail moths. I am not familiar with those moths, and I hope I will never have the privilege of seeing either one of them in my own section of the country. They are exceedingly destructive. Nothing in the way of trees can live against them unless you can destroy the moths and in some way prevent their propagation.

Now, that is true of a good many insects that are destructive of certain plants. Those insects which are native in the country never bother us very much, because it is the law of nature that wherever a pest occurs, it must either become supreme and kill everything within its range, or else it must be controlled by some pest, which attacks the first pest; and throughout the world, wherever there is any animal life which is a pest or dangerous, it has an enemy which attacks it in its native habitat. But you can move the pest animal or insect from one country to another without carrying with it its enemy, and whenever you do that you are liable to get to the point where the pest becomes of such destructive power that there is hardly any way to control it unless you can find the parasite which attacks it.

I spoke a moment ago of the experience in the Hawaiian Islands, and I am going to say a word more about it. The brown-tail moth and the gypsy moth are imported. They have in this country no natural parasite which attacks them. The Agricultural Department has been engaged in a search in the original habitat of these moths endeavoring to find and bring here and acclimate a natural parasite enemy. Whether they have yet succeeded they do not know. They have the parasites. They have introduced a number of parasites here. Whether they will prove successful in exterminating the gypsy moth and the brown-tail moth I do not know.

I am going to narrate very briefly a fairy story. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] referred to the grasshopper. The sugar planters out in Hawaii were met with what is called a leaf hopper, a very small insect, which propagated rapidly and threatened the absolute destruction of the sugar cane in the Hawaiian Islands. They tried every method they could, and they could not control it. They commenced to give up their sugar plantations. They finally found an entomologist who said that he thought the only course to pursue was to ascertain the original habitat of the leaf hopper and there find the leaf hopper's parasite. They did not know where the leaf hopper had come from.

This entomologist went to China, and went all through China in the regions where sugar cane is produced, and found parasite after parasite which lived upon a leaf hopper somewhat similar, and he sent the parasites to Hawaii. It was not the parasite of this leaf hopper, and it did no good. He went to the East India Islands and met with the same experience. He worked at this year after year, incurring all the dangers that a white man could incur in tropical jungles, looking for a leaf hopper, not merely upon the sugar cane, but upon various other things that leaf hoppers live upon, as, for instance, various kinds of palms. He went to Australia, and went beyond Australia, and in a little island some distance from Australia he found the original habitat of this leaf hopper that was absolutely destroying the sugar cane in Hawaii.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask for five minutes, notwithstanding the limit of time fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. He started home with the parasites; he was taken down with typhoid fever in Australia and nearly died, and lost his parasites. He went back the next year and obtained more of the parasites, but found that he could not probably take them as far as Hawaii without their dying on the way. He obtained the consent of the Australian Government to propagate those parasites in Australia and set up a plant there and propagated them and obtained a new brood, and landed finally in Hawaii with a small number of the parasites of this leaf hopper.

By that time the planters in Hawaii had given up hope. They had tried parasite after parasite with no effect, but they had finally found the real parasite. This little incident discloses the value of entomological work, because this man's discovery of this parasite has saved hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of land and sugar-cane land and sugar cane in Hawaii which they had given up as practically lost. They could not have continued the production of sugar cane in the Hawaiian Islands with success if they had not found the parasite of this leaf-hopper, so small that it can hardly be detected by the naked eye; the leaf hopper itself is so small that it is hardly noticeable. They have done that by scientific research and study along scientific lines, and have demonstrated the possibility of controlling all of these natural enemies imported from another country if we can only find in the original habitat the enemy which followed each enemy and killed it off—the parasite. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF BIOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Salaries, Bureau of Biological Survey: One biologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $3,500; 1 chief clerk and executive assistant, $1,800; 1 administrative assistant, $2,250; 1 financial clerk, $1,600; 3 clerks, class 3; 5 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,260; 5 clerks, class 1; 1 clerk, $1,080; 3 clerks, at $1,000 each; 2 clerks, at $900 each; 1 clerk, $840; 1 clerk, $720; 1 preparator, $1,200; 1 preparator, $900; 1 messenger, $720; 1 photographer, $1,300; 1 game warden, $1,200; 1 draftsman, $900; 2 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $480 each; 1 messenger boy, $360; 1 laborer, $600; 1 charwoman, $240; in all, $44,030.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word. The Chair desires to state that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] reserved a point of order on the new words on page 53.

Mr. MONDELL. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question in regard to the salaries mentioned in this particular paragraph. I find it also running all through the bill—for a laborer at $600 and at another place a laborer at $480. What is the explanation of such low salaries for laborers?

Mr. LEVER. As the gentleman will notice, there are "two messengers, messenger boys, or laborers at $480 each" and one laborer at $600. One is a laborer, and the others have a dual capacity. They may be laborers or messengers.

Mr. DILL. I understand that; but as to the other one there is no limitation. It says "laborer."

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Do I understand by that that the man draws only $50 a month?

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. DILL. And he works a full day?

Mr. LEVER. He works eight hours a day.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I notice running all through this bill that there are provisions for the payment of just such low wages to laborers.

Mr. LEVER. I wish the gentleman would say "and through every other bill."

Mr. DILL. I think that is true; through every other bill also. Now, I understand from reports that an investigation is going on before one of the committees of the House as to the wages received by Government employees, and the testimony adduced before that committee shows that this Government is paying wages on which it is practically impossible to support a family. It seems to me that such a condition ought to be remedied, and I think that a Government with the wealth, power, and standing of the United States when it pays employees at the rate of $40 or $50 a month is doing a thing that it ought not to do. It seems to me this condition should be remedied, and we should begin in this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the gentleman believe that an increase of wages on the part of the Government would tend in any way to increase the wages that are paid generally over the country.

Mr. DILL. I am not certain that it would increase wages over the country, but it seems to me it would have a good effect. At any rate it does not seem to me that this Government ought to set the example of paying wages as low as the wages mentioned here when we criticize corporations for paying the same wages.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Government should increase wages, would not that have the effect of decreasing the wages of the people who furnish the money to pay the wages of Government employees?

Mr. DILL. Gentlemen who criticize great corporations for paying such low wages would certainly stand in a much better light than they do now when they vote for appropriation bills which authorize the payment of wages so low that no one can support a family on those wages.

Mr. BAILEY. Would not the gentleman prefer to do something that would tend to advance wages in general?

Mr. DILL. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. How would the gentleman do that?

Mr. DILL. That opens up a great question, and I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania will agree with me that this is hardly the place to discuss that great economic problem; but I do want to register my protest against the payment of salaries so low as some of those contained in this bill to men who work six days a week and regular hours every day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Biological Survey: For salaries and employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, furniture, supplies, traveling, and all other expenses necessary in conducting investigations and carrying out the work of the bureau, as follows:

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. LEVER].

I have assisted in the preparation of nine appropriation bills in support of the Department of Agriculture for the promotion of the agricultural development of the United States. During that time the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has been a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and in the preparation of the last three bills, including the one now pending, he has been its chairman. By reason of his vigor and ability he has been an important member and worthy of study. In addition to the appropriation bills several measures of general legislation of great importance have been considered by the committee, and a number of them reported to the House and passed. Others are pending and active. Mr. LEVER has been a decided factor in all this legislation. While he has always shown a commendable and effective interest in the solution of problems affecting southern agriculture, and deserves the everlasting gratitude of that portion of our people for his services to them, he has been friendly to the study of and taken an intelligent interest in the problems confronting all other sections of the country.

He has the love, confidence, and admiration of every member of the committee, as he has of the House, because of his ability, diligence, efficiency, and broad sympathies.

Several laws of great value bear his name or owe their existence to his indefatigable energy.

If statesmanship consists in a painstaking analysis of questions relating to the public welfare and in submitting solutions that will result to the public good and securing their adoption, Mr. LEVER is a statesman. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the maintenance of the Montana National Bison Range and other reservations and for the maintenance of game introduced into suitable localities on public lands, under supervision of the Biological Survey, including construction of fencing, wardens' quarters, shelters for animals, landings, roads, trails, bridges, ditches, telephone lines, rockwork, bulkheads, and other improvements necessary for the economical administration and protection of the reservations, and for the enforcement of section 84 of the act approved March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," $21,000, of which sum $2,500 may be used for the purchase, capture, and transportation of game for national reservations.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this provision includes the bird reserves as well?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; this provision takes care of them.

Mr. RAKER. There are 69 of these bird reserves, created for the purpose of protecting native birds. The first Executive order creating a reserve for the protection of native birds was dated March 14, 1903, when the Pelican Island Reservation in Florida was established. Native birds in the Canal Zone were protected by Executive order of date March 19, 1913. These 69 bird reserves are scattered all the way from Midway Island in the Pacific to Alaska and Porto Rico.

I ask unanimous consent that I may insert at this point an article prepared by Mr. Frank Bond, chief clerk, General Land Office, on the subject of bird reservations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the article to which he refers. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, is this article already published?

Mr. RAKER. It has not been published in the daily papers.

Mr. MANN. I mean by the department.

Mr. RAKER. No; this is not a department matter. This article was inserted in the Reclamation Record for April, 1916. It is only a column and a half long.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article is as follows:

BIRD RESERVATIONS: THEIR PURPOSE AND FUTURE.

[By Frank Bond, Chief Clerk, General Land Office.]

Beginning with the first Executive order creating a reservation for the protection of native birds, dated March 14, 1903, when the Pelican Island Reservation, Fla., was established, there have been created by action of the President 69 reserves for this purpose, and in addition the birds upon the Canal Zone were protected by an Executive order of March 19, 1913. These 69 reservations are scattered all the way from the Midway Islands in the Pacific and Alaska to Porto Rico, and are divided among States and possessions as follows: Alaska, 10; Arizona, 1; Alabama and Mississippi, 1; Arkansas, 2; California, 3; California and Oregon, 1; Florida, 10; Hawaii, 1; Idaho, 2; Louisiana, 4; Michigan, 2; Minnesota, 1; Montana, 2; New Mexico, 2; Nebraska, 1; Nevada, 1; North Dakota, 2; Oregon, 3; Porto Rico, 2; South Dakota, 1; Utah, 1; Washington, 11; Wisconsin, 2; Wyoming, 3.

The purpose of some of these reserves is to furnish safe winter refuges or refuges for migrants, both spring and fall; of others to provide breeding grounds and their protection. Roughly speaking, the kind of birds protected are the plume birds and the edible waterfowl and shore birds. There are also protected upon some of the reserves waterfowl that may not be classed either as edible, for they are not edible, or as plume birds, strictly speaking, although millions have been slaughtered for their quills and wings. These birds embrace the sea birds, whose usefulness as scavengers makes them economically worthy of protection. From an economic standpoint the most important reservations are those which protect the edible waterfowl during the winter, breeding and migrating periods. These birds of course are the prey of the cold-storage and market hunters, and their winter feeding resorts became in the past veritable slaughter grounds.

Among the breeding reserves, which also are resting places for migrants in large numbers, are Klamath Lake and Malheur Lake, in California and Oregon, and among the reservations, used largely by birds which have gone South to spend the winter season, are some of those along the Gulf coast, such as Breton Island Reservation, northward from the mouth of the Mississippi River. Prior to the creation of the Breton Island Reservation in 1904 reports of special agents of the Audobon societies and others indicated that upward of 200,000 wild ducks were slaughtered during the winter seasons for cold-storage purposes. This, of course, has all been stopped within the limits of the several reservations where edible waterfowl winter. The two greatest slaughter grounds in the West—Malheur and Lower Klamath Lakes—were covered by reservation orders in 1908, and one of the purposes of this article is to call especial attention to these two, because they are fields of great local activity to secure the abandonment of the reservations or such modifications of their boundaries as will render them practically useless for the purposes for which they were created. It should be borne in mind that territory of value for bird-reservation purposes is becoming more and more rare, and it is probable that comparatively few new reservations of any great value will be created hereafter, especially reservations for the protection of the edible waterfowl. There can be no doubt that reserves of this character, while valuable now, can be made very much more valuable in the future by proper care and administration, and it is the belief of all who have made a study of the bird-protection movement that the reservations now created should be maintained without the surrender of any territory or further modifications of their boundaries unless there are very grave reasons therefor. It is not believed that throwing open any part of such reservations for the use of a few settlers, who probably without exception will be required to supplement what they can raise in the way of farm products by what they can collect with their guns and traps, is in any degree a fair exchange for what the people of the United States, as a whole, have a right to expect and will receive if these reservations are maintained intact and properly administered.

Special effort is now being made to throw open to settlement large tracts of the tule lands within the Klamath Lake Reservation, and the propagada therefor indicates that as a preliminary step toward such action, which will destroy the usefulness of the reserve as such, a considerable number of persons have gone within the reserve, and it is now proposed to give them the marsh lands which they have unlawfully entered. Of course these people are not interested in the birds except to the extent that they may be able to hunt and kill them when they get a footing within the reservation, but a wise public policy will not permit a very few persons thus to destroy a reservation which is not only a valuable source of food supply for thousands at the present time but is bound to become much more valuable in the future.

Mr. RAKER. This article shows the purposes of these bird reserves. We appropriate $21,100 for these 69 reserves, 2 of which are in my immediate locality. This appropriation is wholly inadequate to carry out the purposes of the Executive orders. I have been in communication with the departments having charge of these bird reserves, in the hope that we may get an adjustment in some 35 to 45 homestead claims located in what is known as the Klamath Lake Reservation. These claimants insist that this land is valuable for agricultural purposes. Most of them are living upon the land. My purpose is not to destroy game preserves at any time or under any circumstances, if they are necessary for that purpose, but when the land is more valuable for agricultural purposes, for homesteading, it should be so used. I have great hope that the Department of Agriculture, and in this particular instance the Biological Survey, who have control of the bird reserves, in connection with the General Land Office, may be able to have a commission appointed from that department to make an investigation to determine this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I can not afford to object, but I will ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a part of this article relates to the territory in my district. Some 35 settlers have gone on the land where the reserve has been created, and some onto reclamation projects. I want to take this opportunity, without any criticism of the department, to the end that my people may be properly sustained in their rights to say that behind them stands the entire body of citizens of Siskiyou County—the judge, the board of supervisors, the grand jury, and the people—believing and insisting that this land is valuable for agricultural purposes and that no part of it will be used or taken from the bird reserve that might be necessary for that bird reserve.

Personally whatever land is necessary for the bird reserve and for the protection and propagation of edible fowl, ought to be maintained, and that which is not necessary but is more valuable for agricultural purposes, ought to be used for that purpose.

But I do not feel justified in submitting to this article, to the indictment of my people and those who are desiring to obtain a homestead upon Government land, that their one object and purpose is that they may destroy the edible wild fowl and thereby destroy a bird reserve or a proper location for a bird reserve.

Some might desire the land, thinking it is located in a good position, but the department I am satisfied is trying to arrange this matter without any antagonism either for or against the settlers, and that they will be able to come to some adjustment. I felt as though I could not let this pass without calling it to the attention of the committee.

In discussing the matter with the department they say that one of the reasons, and I am satisfied that it is true, that a proper result has not been had at the present time is a lack of funds. There are 69 reserves from Alaska to Florida, some of them covering a territory of a hundred thousand acres, and sometimes one man has to look after a reserve of a hundred thousand acres, and you can readily see that this wild life that ought to be protected, which is of value to the country, should have, if we are going to maintain this reserve, sufficient men to maintain them properly, give them proper protection, proper regulations, and a sufficient number of men, so that the regulations may be enforced and the bird preserves, because of their great value, properly looked after by the general public. Many thousands and even millions of edible fowl are reared on these preserves.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, in line 1, after the word "States" strike out the figures "$21,000" and insert "$25,000."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation carried in this item for which it is expected to accomplish is ridiculously small. It is something like $300 for each reservation, and the reservations are not all bird reservations. The item includes the big-game preserves at Dixon, Mont.; Wind Cave National Park, S. Dak., and Jackson Hole, Wyo. On one of these preserves the United States Government has spent $50,000, and one of the bird preserves is a large group of islands in the Hawaiian group called the Laysan Island Reserve, which covers 5 degrees of longitude.

A year ago poachers got on the islands and killed over 300,000 albatrosses for their breasts, leaving the bones and dead birds strewn around over acres of ground. This great reservation has no warden and the devastation was not discovered until an expedition went there some time after. There were some birds left, and in the course of time I suppose they will repopulate the islands if not again destroyed.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Of what economic value are these birds when they are off on this island where nobody can see them?

Mr. PLATT. I do not know what the economic value may be of the birds on this particular preserve. The geese and ducks on the great Laysan reserves are of immense value.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand that; but I am speaking of these birds that you say were killed on this island.

Mr. PLATT. They had an economic value to the people who killed them, or they would not have gone there after them.

Mr. MANN. Were they of any economic value living? Do they add anything to beauty or anything else? What value is it to have a lot of birds on an island that no one visits, and these birds do not go anywhere else but stay there?

Mr. PLATT. I do not think it is true that they go nowhere else.

Mr. MANN. Where do they go?

Mr. PLATT. Some of them may not be migratory, but others fly back and forth between the islands of the Hawaiian group, and perhaps farther.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the island to which the gentleman refers is a little island five or six or seven hundred miles away from the large island of Kawaihae. I do not understand that those birds go anywhere else.

Mr. PLATT. The reserve includes a number of small islands extending over 5 degrees of longitude. The birds go back and forth among that group of islands, and some of them farther.

Mr. MANN. They may go back and forth among some of the smaller islands in the group where no one lives. They do not go to any island where anybody lives. That is my information, though I may be wrong about it.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman from Illinois knows much more about the Hawaiian Islands than I do, for I have never visited them. I am not sure about the habits of the albatross, but I know some of the birds of those islands fly considerable distances.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I quite agree with the gentleman generally.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman refer to Laysan Island?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Those birds, I understand, travel all over the South Sea Islands.

Mr. MANN. Oh, they do not go anywhere. They go out in the ocean and fish and then go back home.

Mr. PLATT. The economic value of the bird reservations lies largely in the reservations along our coasts or off the Delta of the Mississippi, where thousands and thousands of ducks and geese which nest in Canada and North Dakota and other Northern States, but mostly in Canada, congregate in the wintertime. There are a few of these bird reservations on the Atlantic seacoast. There is one in Wisconsin, which is a rock in Lake Michigan, I believe. Some of the reservations are small and some of them large.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman suggests an increase of $4,000 for what particular purpose?

Mr. PLATT. To provide wardens for a few of these reservations which have no protection at all now. Anybody who wants to go and kill the birds can do it without let or hindrance.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Has the gentleman any communication from the bureau to know whether they can use the money for that purpose?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that I have talked with the bureau officials. I am very well acquainted with several of the officials of the Biological Survey, and they have told me that they have been severely criticized for not protecting the birds on these reservations, though it was impossible to do more than they have done with the appropriation set aside for this purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more. He is the only authority in this House on birds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that the time is limited.

Mr. MANN. Then I ask unanimous consent that that time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does the gentleman know at what places these wardens would be put?

Mr. PLATT. Some on the Atlantic coast reservations, which are generally barren marsh islands where no one lives, and they need patrolling. There is no money now to provide anybody to go from one to the other except at long intervals. They need a motor boat, among other things, so that they can get from one island to another.

It is not necessary that each island in the coast reservations should have a separate warden, but they should be visited frequently to see whether any damage has been done and to punish those who kill the birds. I may say that the bird reservations are all mapped in one of the Biological Survey bulletins, though it does not include the last few established. There were two or three new reservations put in within the past year or two, and one which was adopted last year had to be abandoned for lack of funds. Another has been turned over to another bureau. It will be noticed that there is a little variation between the report of the committee, which says there are 69 bird reservations, and the hearings, which put the number at 68. There were 70. One had to be abandoned and another was turned over to another department because of lack of funds. They have done a great deal of good. There is no doubt that some birds are actually being saved from extermination by these bird reservations. Take, for instance, the heath hen, which used to be abundant all over the East. It is now to be found only on the island of Marthas Vineyard, where it is under stringent protection by the State of Massachusetts and is slowly increasing. A good many other birds are being saved in the same way where they can collect in the winter or at certain times. Most of them are winter reservations, though a few reservations in the North are nesting reservations. The birds concentrate closer together in the wintertime, and they need places where they can not be slaughtered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows a great deal about birds, and his information has a good deal of weight with me. Does the gentleman think that this additional money can be used profitably so as to save and protect birds?

Mr. PLATT. I am very sure that it can. I am sure that this little increase of only $4,000 more will do a good deal of good. It will just about provide salaries for the three or four wardens who are most needed.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman state whether or not the committee reported the number of wardens or made an appropriation for the full number of wardens that the department estimated for?

Mr. PLATT. I know that the Biological Survey asked for more money than the committee gave it, as will be seen from the hearings.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to inquire if there is anything being done looking to the destruction of squirrels, that are the greatest enemy of song birds that we have?

Mr. PLATT. The greatest enemy of the song bird is the domestic cat, which ought to be destroyed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon, because the domestic cat has to be somewhere near a house, while the squirrels are scattered all around. For example, take the Capitol grounds. We have lots of squirrels here, with the result that you can not find a bird's nest in all these trees.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, yes, you can. I think there are too many red squirrels that are destructive of birds. The gray squirrel does occasionally destroy birds, but not generally, if my information is correct.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman what is the aggregate area included in the various bird reservations throughout the United States?

Mr. PLATT. I shall have to refer the gentleman to the bulletin of the Biological Survey for that. I do not remember the figures. I think perhaps the gentleman from North Dakota can tell him.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has announced that he recognizes the gentleman from North Dakota for five minutes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from New York. Is it not a fact that the item of $21,000 provided in this paragraph also includes work in respect to wild animals?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. In addition to all this work about which the gentleman has been talking in connection with the preservation of bird life?

Mr. PLATT. It does. The item includes the work of hedging, ditching, telephone lines, and all sorts of things in connection with the preservation and maintenance of the Montana National Buffalo Range. It is not only a matter of bird preservation, but is spread over these thousands of acres in reference to animals.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman expects the $4,000, if he gets it, to be used specially for bird preservation.

Mr. PLATT. That is what the Biological Survey wants it for.

Mr. MANN. I will not vote for it unless that is the expectation.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The buffalo, which once thickly populated the western plains, has became almost extinct. The Biological Survey is entitled to much credit for the excellent work done in picking up and caring for the few remaining specimens. The buffalo in the various herds in the United States and Canada number a little more than 4,000. About half of them are in Canada, and of the Canadian supply most of it was obtained from herds purchased in Montana. It was a mistake to let them get out of our country. Those we have left are receiving the most careful attention and every effort is being put forth to guard against losing them through disease or otherwise. For that reason the buffalo have been cared for in more than one park, so that an epidemic could not carry off all of them. That was the chief reason for the establishment of Sullys Hill National Park, located on the shores of Devils Lake, N. Dak. It was also recognized that North Dakota was a portion of the region where the buffalo thrived before the advent of the white man. It is the habitat of the buffalo, and the herd to be transferred there from Montana will doubtless increase rapidly, and later help fill the growing demand for buffalo in the municipal parks of our country.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will act favorably upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. With proper care and encouragement the time will come when the buffalo will be found outside of the parks. They will be found on the farms, helping to take care of the meat supply and furnishing those delightful robes which contributed so much snugness and pleasure to the sleigh rides of long ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ].

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, what I desire to inquire is in connection with the next paragraph.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. There is an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. LEVER) there were—ayes 39, noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 55, in line 3, after the word "reservation," insert:
"For the purchase of what is known as the 'Scotty Phillips' herd of buffalo of South Dakota for distribution among the national parks and national monuments, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, such purchase to be made by and in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this amendment and paragraph is closed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to address the committee for five minutes on this amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of information. Some time was reserved for gentlemen on this subject who did not use that time, and there must be five or six minutes left under the original arrangement.

The CHAIRMAN. If gentlemen did not use that time it is not the fault of the Chair. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the gentleman from Colorado would not offer on this proposition a separate paragraph to the bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have sent it up as a separate paragraph to come in at this place.

Mr. LEVER. Debate has been concluded on this paragraph.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me say to the chairman of the committee that I have not taken any time on this bill.

Mr. LEVER. That statement has been made by dozens of men on the floor——

Mr. MANN. I understand this is offered as a separate paragraph.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is offered as a separate paragraph to go in at this point.

Mr. MANN. Then debate is not closed.

Mr. LEVER. Then I ask unanimous consent that debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado and all amendments thereto shall close in 12 minutes, and I am reserving the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Colorado offers this amendment as a separate paragraph?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of making sure of the preservation and perpetuation of the American bison. I have all my life been a very great admirer of the buffalo. When I was a small boy I lived for several years at my father's cattle ranch on the plains of western Kansas. There were hundreds of thousands of buffalo in that country at that time, from 1870 to 1874, and I used to lasso buffalo calves. My father sent several pair of them to the various parks of Chicago, Cincinnati, and other places. We raised quite a little herd of them with our cattle. They are a noble animal of which I have always been fond. At the present time the only fine herd of pure buffalo in the world, or at least the best one, is at Fort Pierre, S. Dak., what is known as the "Scotty Phillips" herd of buffalo, of about 500 head. They are pure-bred, fine specimens of buffalo, and there will be about 100 calves this spring. Mr. Phillips died several years ago and, I understand, his heirs desire to dispose of this herd and close the estate. I have understood that unless they are purchased by the Government or somebody within some reasonable time that the animals, or many of them, may be butchered.

They can butcher and sell them for more than the price they offer to sell them to parks; but the owners naturally want to see them preserved. They hold them at $250 a head.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand there is a demand for pure buffalo from zoological societies. Do you understand in spite of that demand that these buffalo would be butchered by this family who own the herd?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have no personal knowledge or direct information, but I have several times heard that the family has been trying for several years to wind up the estate, and the demand from the various zoological gardens and parks is only for a small number for each place, which amounts to comparatively little, and that they want to close out the entire herd. The State of South Dakota purchased 24 head of them in the spring of 1915 and placed them in a State game park in the Black Hills. The State paid $250 a head for them. And I may say that a number of public-spirited citizens throughout the country have contemplated making a purchase of the entire herd and presenting it to the Government of the United States. That certainly would be a very patriotic and noble thing to do. And if the United States Government does not buy that buffalo herd I certainly hope some admirer of the buffalo will do so, because it would be the most colossal loss and grievous mistake of this entire generation if the American people would allow that herd of pure buffalo to be slaughtered. It might result in the extermination of the buffalo species. I do not suppose $100,000 would be enough to buy the entire herd, but that would buy enough to preserve them for all time if they are properly cared for.

Now, it seems to me that the Government of the United States ought to purchase them, if it can, at a reasonable figure. The amendment I offer would give the Secretary of the Interior discretion to go and buy that herd, or buy the major portion of it, and preserve them in the various national parks throughout the United States and breed them up and supply them to all the buffalo parks of the world. As a matter of fact, it would be an immensely profitable transaction for the Government of the United States to engage in, and we would at the same time preserve the buffalo. If I was a wealthy man I would buy the herd and present them to Uncle Sam.

I might say that I have a bill providing for the purchase of a few of them for our Colorado national parks, but, of course,

I do not know that we can pass a bill of that kind. My bill reads as follows:

A bill to authorize the establishment of game preserves and sanctuaries in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to reserve and set apart for a game preserve and sanctuary public and reserved lands of the United States in and adjacent to the Rocky Mountain National Park and the Arapahoe National Forest, in Grand County, Colo., and in and adjacent to the Colorado National Monument, in Mesa County, Colo., said reserves to be of suitable area and character to carry out the purpose and intent of this act.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to purchase, either at private or public sale, not exceeding 200 buffaloes from the "Scotty Phillips" buffalo herd in South Dakota, or from such other herd or herds as may be for sale within the United States, and to transfer and remove one-half of the buffaloes so purchased to each of the game preserves and sanctuaries herein authorized.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out and administer the provisions of this act, is hereby appropriated.

It is something that I think the Agricultural Committee, instead of spending so much money on some bird island in some place, ought to take up. There are dozens of items in this bill calling for more than I ask for, and scarcely any of those items are as important as this. If we can preserve the American bison we would be doing a hundred times more for the American people and future generations than we are by preserving some bird sanctuary out in some ocean.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman know that the United States Government owns 12 per cent of the American buffalo and that the Canadian Government owns 50 per cent of them?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Our Government ought to own more than Canada does. The western part of the United States was the native home of the American bison, and the last wild buffalo in this country was killed about 20 years ago in one of the remote and wild mountainous parts of Colorado. Colorado was, I believe, their last native stamping ground.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. It is a fact that the Canadian Government gets most of their buffaloes from Montana, is it not?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think that is true. And at the same time the Canadian Government is breeding up buffalo in the same manner that the American Government ought to breed them up and preserve them. I want sometime to address the House more at length on this subject. The robes of these animals are worth over $100 apiece, and the heads are worth from $100 to $400 apiece. The females bear a calf every other year.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Why provide in the Agricultural bill for $100,000 to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior? Why not by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, that is a mere matter of detail. I would just as soon the Secretary of Agriculture would buy them. I do not care anything about that. I am thinking about preserving the American bison. I do not care who buys them. My thought is that they ought to be preserved, and this bill is the place where Congress ought to consider it.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman in his amendment is taking it away from the Agricultural Department and putting it in the Interior Department.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The Interior Department has charge of the national parks, generally speaking, and I thought these animals, if they were put in those parks, would naturally come under his jurisdiction. But I want to preserve the buffalo, and I do not care who does it. I would be perfectly willing to have the chairman of the Agricultural Committee do the purchasing and have full discretion in regard to it. The only question is, I think, the committee ought to give attention to this matter, which is more important than the matter of some insects, where we are spending $400,000 on a blue-tailed coddling moth, where we could preserve the best buffalo on earth for $100,000. I earnestly feel that my amendment ought to be adopted, Mr. Chairman. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment is not in order on this bill and is not authorized by any existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] want to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No, sir. I do not care to argue the point, if the chairman insists upon it, because I presume that possibly it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The clerk will read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. Let the next paragraph be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The last word went out on a point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the improvement of the game preserve in Sullys Hill National Park, in the State of North Dakota, including the construction of all fences, sheds, buildings, corrals, roads, and other structures which may be necessary, in addition to the amount heretofore appropriated, $5,000, the same to be available until expended.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order for the purpose of obtaining information. I notice in the wording of the paragraph there is some money now available for that purpose. Will the gentleman inform the committee how much is available and what is the purpose of this additional amount that will remain available until expended?

Mr. LEVER. I will give the gentleman the information by reading from the report.

In the appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915 an appropriation of $5,000 was made for the improvement of the game preserve in Sullys Hill National Park, N. Dak.

That amendment was put on in the Senate.

A similar sum was included in the appropriation act for the present fiscal year It was thought at the time that $10,000 would be sufficient to provide for the fencing of the preserve and the construction of the necessary buildings, corrals, roads, etc. It was found, however, that the fencing alone would cost nearly $10,000. The contract has been let for the construction of the fence, which will be completed by June 30, 1916, but no funds are available for making improvements on or for stocking the preserve. An item of $5,000 accordingly has been included in the bill for the fiscal year 1917 to provide quarters, barns, animals, warden service, and maintenance expenses for one year.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is sufficient information, Mr. Chairman, and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. What was the original estimated cost of the fence?

Mr. LEVER. There was no estimate at all on this. The original item was put in the bill in the Senate and was held in conference. Then an appropriation of $50,000 was carried in the bill, again put in in the Senate. The department says that $10,000 has been found necessary for the fence alone. It is a tract of land of some 800 acres, as I recall.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that it was stated at first that the whole thing would not cost over $10,000. I may be mistaken about that, but that is my impression.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the Agricultural Department made an estimate or not.

Mr. LEVER. The Senate item was originally $10,000, and it was reduced to $5,000 in conference.

Mr. MANN. It would seem to be more than passing strange if the Department of Agriculture were not able now, with the enlightenment of the present day, to come within 50 per cent of the actual cost of constructing a simple fence.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think the Agricultural Department has ever made an estimate on the proposition.

Mr. MANN. Very likely.

Mr. LEVER. The committee took the matter into its own hands and put the sum in.

Mr. MANN. That estimate may have been made by a distinguished United States Senator; and if so, I think that, coming from that source, they did pretty well.

Mr. LEVER. I am inclined to think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, including experiments and demonstrations in destroying wolves, coyotes, prairie dogs, and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry, and for investigations and experiments in connection with rearing of fur-bearing animals, including mink and marten, $400,540: Provided, That of this sum $15,000 shall be used for the destruction of ground squirrels on the national forests and other public lands: Provided further, That of this sum not more than $5,000 may be used in investigating the disease of wild ducks in the Salt Lake Valley region of Utah: And provided also, That of this sum not less than $125,000 shall be used on the national forests and the public domain in destroying wolves, coyotes, and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry: And provided further also, That of this sum not less than $125,000 shall be used on the public lands, national forests, and elsewhere in the Western and Northwestern States for the protection of stock and other domestic animals through the suppression of rabies by the destruction of wolves, coyotes, and other predatory wild animals.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of amendments to offer.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not offer amendments when a point of order is pending.

Mr. COX. Am I recognized, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the chairman to this language:

Provided further That of this sum not more than $5,000 may be used in investigating the disease of wild ducks in the Salt Lake Valley region of Utah.

That is a new item, is it not?

Mr. LEVER. That item has been in the bill for two years.

Mr. COX. What on earth can anybody find out about the disease of wild ducks?

Mr. LEVER. I will ask the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HOWELL], who is more familiar with that subject than I am, to answer that question.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I will say for the information of the House that for several years past there has been a very destructive disease appearing among the wild ducks in Salt Lake Valley. In one year alone it was estimated that over 4,000,000 wild ducks had died as the result of this disease. Our game warden and our gun clubs were baffled in their efforts to determine the cause of the disease. Finally, an appropriation of $5,000 was obtained, and the work of investigation was undertaken by the Biological Survey. Representatives of the department were sent out, and for two seasons they have been investigating the cause of this mysterious disease which has wrought so much havoc among the ducks in the Salt Lake Valley.

Mr. COX. What have they found out?

Mr. HOWELL. They have not yet determined positively as to the cause, but their investigations lead them to the conclusion that it is not a disease, but that it results from alkali poisoning, and the remedy for it is an abundant supply of fresh water for the ducks.

Mr. COX. Where do they get the alkali? Is the alkali in the water?

Mr. HOWELL. Oh, yes. The main cause of the trouble has been the alkaline pools of water along the shores of the lake.

Mr. COX. Have they brought to that section of the country any remedy at all for the destruction of the wild ducks?

Mr. HOWELL. As I said, the results of the investigation have shown that where the ducks can be placed on fresh water they rapidly recover from the effects of this alkaline poisoning. I will say to the gentleman, further, that it is a very interesting fact that the investigation of ducks in Salt Lake means, in effect, an investigation of the ducks of a vast region of country which assemble at Salt Lake.

Mr. COX. Suppose they do finally determine that the disease is due to the alkaline poisoning. That will not do any good unless you change the ducks to some other place, will it?

Mr. HOWELL. Let me finish the statement. The ducks that gather in Salt Lake Valley are found by actual experiment to have a region of flight extending to southern California, Oklahoma, and all of the surrounding States and Territories. The Great Salt Lake is the gathering place or rendezvous of the wild ducks of that great intermountain country and as far south as southern California and Oklahoma.

The Bureau of Biological Survey have also been investigating the effect of lead poisoning upon ducks. It has been ascertained that upon the hunting grounds that ducks frequently die from the effects of absorbing the leaden pellets left on the hunting grounds from the ammunition fired at them by sportsmen. Ten pellets of No. 6 shot will cause the death of a Mallard duck. They are trying to find a remedy to relieve the poisoning resulting from this cause.

Mr. COX. That is two diseases, then, that they have probably discovered. What are they going to do with the ducks after they have discovered them and have announced the fact of these two diseases?

Mr. HOWELL. The department has already done a great deal of good through these investigations, and a great improvement in the situation has been effected.

Mr. COX. Has it prolonged the life of any of the ducks or saved any additional ducks?

Mr. HOWELL. The department has had the hearty cooperation of sportsmen's clubs, whereby artificial ponds of fresh water have been made in proximity to the alkaline waters, and in that way the disease has been very materially checked and the great loss of wild fowl materially diminished in that region.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the gentleman have more time if he wishes it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman's time will be extended five minutes.

Mr. HOWELL. I do not think there is any appropriation of $5,000 in this bill that will be productive of greater benefit to the wild fowl than this appropriation. As I have said before, the Salt Lake Valley is a rendezvous of the wild fowl from all the intermountain country, and as far as California and Oklahoma. They assemble there in the fall by the million. Any steps that will protect wild fowl is of prime public importance. If it can be done to a very limited extent by the expenditure of a paltry $5,000, it would be foolish economy to withhold it.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWELL. Yes.

Mr. COX. No doubt the gentleman has taken this matter up thoroughly with the department. Did the department give him any assurance whatever that it would ever be able to determine just the cause of this disease of the wild duck, and the remedy that will really help the people by keeping the wild ducks alive?

Mr. HOWELL. I think the department has already about reached the conclusion that so far as this malady that has appeared in the Salt Lake Valley is concerned, it is the result of alkali poisoning, and about the only remedy necessary is an abundance of fresh water. When the ducks are taken from these alkaline ponds and placed in fresh-water ponds they recover very rapidly.

Mr. COX. There will be no necessity for continuing this appropriation next year, will there?

Mr. HOWELL. I hardly think so. The department would like to continue the experiment another year. That is the statement made; but all their investigations lead them to the conclusion that the main remedy for this particular disease is an abundance of fresh water. When the ducks are taken from the alkaline waters and given access to fresh water, they rapidly improve and get well; but the department wishes to investigate this subject of lead poisoning, which they have found to exist quite widely in the ducks on sporting grounds.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman propose to do with his point of order?

Mr. COX. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BOOHER. I renew the point of order on the last paragraph, and proviso on page 56, which reads as follows:

Provided further also, That of this sum not less than $125,000 shall be used on the public lands, national forests, and elsewhere in the Western and Northwestern States for the protection of stock and other domestic animals through the suppression of rabies by the destruction of wolves, coyotes, and other predatory wild animals.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved on the proviso.

Mr. BOOHER. I want to get some information from the chairman of the committee. I would like to ask how it is intended to use this $125,000 for the destruction of wolves, coyotes, and so forth?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] has handled this particular matter in the bill, and I will ask him to explain it.

Mr. BOOHER. This proviso proposes to appropriate $125,000 for the suppression of rabies by the destruction of wolves, coyotes, and other predatory wild animals. Is it proposed to hire hunters to destroy these animals, or what?

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to make a preliminary statement?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Rabies appeared in the southern part of the State of Washington about three years ago and spread very rapidly from there through eastern Oregon into northern California, into Nevada and Idaho, and over onto the borders of Utah in the last year. The coyotes bite one another and spread the disease. They bite other wild animals, dogs, cows, sheep, and horses, and thus spread the disease among domestic animals. Thirty-five persons have had to take the Pasteur treatment at the University of Nevada, and I understand that some 12 persons, who came from eastern Oregon, and some others from other parts of that section had to take the same treatment. Now we propose to destroy the coyotes by systematic extermination—by hunting, trapping, poisoning, or in any other way in which they can kill them.

Mr. BOOHER. Do the department expect to use the people now engaged in the Forest Service as guards and supervisors to do this work?

Mr. HAWLEY. They have armed a number of these forest rangers and supervisors, and they have employed a few experienced trappers.

Mr. BOOHER. I see by the bill that we have 168 forest supervisors, 82 deputy supervisors, 240 rangers, and 80 guards. Now, are all those men armed when they are out upon their work?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think all of them in the regions where there are predatory animals carry guns. That may not be so in every case; but, speaking generally, I think it is.

Mr. BOOHER. Does the State of Nevada appropriate any money to pay a bounty for the destruction of the animals?

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand the State of Nevada has appropriated $100,000, the Wool Growers' Association has appropriated $10,000, the other States will also make appropriations, and other stock growers will also supply sums of money and arm their own men with the idea of aiding in the extermination of these animals.

Mr. BOOHER. Is there any bounty paid by your State for the scalps of these animals?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; we pay some bounty.

Mr. BOOHER. How much is the bounty for a coyote scalp?

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not tell the gentleman. The legislature appropriates a flat sum to be expended in bounties, but I do not recall how much the bounty is.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. In the State of Idaho we pay $2.50 for each coyote head that is brought into the county seat, and I have a telegram here from the governor, that came yesterday, in which he states that Idaho paid out $60,000 last year in cooperation with the Federal Government toward the extermination of these rabid animals.

The telegram is as follows:

BOISE, IDAHO, April 19, 1916.

HON. ADDISON T. SMITH,
House of Representatives, Washington:

Idaho paid bounty on predatory animals from March 10 to January 1, $47,222.50. Claims accumulated since January 1 but not yet adjusted amount to about $15,000, making over $62,000 for 12 months. Levy on all stock animals produces approximately $30,000 revenue annually for payment of bounties, and direct appropriations from general fund of $25,000 annually produces annual bounty revenue exceeding $55,000.

M. ALEXANDER, Governor.

Mr. BOOHER. Then the State is doing all it possibly can?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes. I think every State is doing that, and the Stock Growers' Association are contributing money for the same purpose.

Mr. BOOHER. Is this appropriation intended to be expended in killing these animals in forest reserves or outside of them?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. In the forest reserves and on the public lands.

Mr. HAWLEY. The intention is to exterminate the animals. The coyotes and wolves that have rabies are a menace to the people of that large area, and to the horses, sheep, and cattle, particularly to sheep and cattle, and large numbers have been destroyed through them. It is proposed to kill these coyotes and wolves on the forest reserves, on the public lands, and elsewhere, wherever they can be found.

Mr. BOOHER. The money carried in this appropriation would be expended on Government lands, would it?

Mr. HAWLEY. Not necessarily. It says "and elsewhere" in line 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, in view of the great sums of money appropriated in this bill for the eradication of insect pests, fruit diseases, the brown-tail moth, boll weevil, gypsy moth, wheat rust, and so forth, amounting to several millions of dollars, all of which pertains to land in private ownership, it comes with poor grace for Members of this House from eastern districts to oppose this appropriation for destroying these rabid animals on the public lands.

Not only is the presence of these animals destructive of domestic animals, but human beings are in constant danger of being attacked by them. Their bite is so venomous that animals attacked communicate the disease to other animals, and human beings attacked invariably succumb unless the Pasteur treatment can be applied immediately.

The prevalence of this disease among wild and domestic animals throughout the central portion of the intermountain country calls for the most active cooperation on the part of the Federal Government with the States, counties, and the various live-stock organizations if it is to be eliminated. I have numerous clippings from newspapers in southern Idaho containing accounts of the damage which is being done by rabid animals and the effort that is being made to eradicate them, which I will not take time to read, but which show a most deplorable situation. Dogs, cats, hogs, cattle, and horses, made insane by rabies, their whole nature changed, are intent on biting any object within their reach.

The coyote, naturally a timid creature, avoiding a human being, becomes ferocious and fearless when suffering from rabies, and the cow, naturally tame and gentle, is transformed into a most dangerous beast, with the characteristics of a tiger. The urgent necessity of making the appropriation must be evident to any unprejudiced person. The Federal Government owns the larger portion of the country infested, and Congress should help to protect the lives and property of the people who are endeavoring to settle up the West and make its resources available to those living in the more thickly populated sections of the country.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I renew the point of order. I would like to inquire what is the necessity of providing separately $125,000 for the suppression of rabies when we are carrying in a prior item $125,000 for the destruction of these very same animals on the national forest and public domain? Why not increase the appropriation that has been carried, as it is one that we all are interested in.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman will yield, I think the division of the item arose in this way: The first proviso, on the bottom of page 55, was put in the bill in the Senate last year, and certain methods will be used by the department in the expenditure of that money. The last proviso is new in the bill this year, the situation having become acute, and the department may want to use a somewhat different method or process of eliminating the animals having rabies than they would use under the preceding proviso. That is the history of these items.

Mr. LEVER. I think there is another explanation. If the gentleman will turn to page 55, line 23, he will see $125,000 shall be used on the national forest and public domain. Then on page 56, lines 1 and 2, the provision is that it shall be used on the public lands of national forests and elsewhere in the Western and Northwestern States.

Mr. STAFFORD. My point is this, whether under the authorization carried in the first proviso authorizing the destruction of wolves, coyotes, and other animals injurious to animal husbandry the department has the authority to destroy these animals when they are infected with rabies on private land.

Mr. LEVER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. They could go to New York City and do it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why do you make an appropriation of $125,000 in two places, simply changing the phraseology as far as other private lands are concerned? Is it the purpose to pursue these coyotes and wolves on private land?

Mr. LEVER. My understanding of the situation is this: Under the first proviso the operations of the Department of Agriculture will be confined to public lands and national forests, but the national forests are harboring places and breeding places for these animals of all descriptions. In the northwest country they have had recently an outbreak of hydrophobia among the animals, which has caused a great deal of damage, and, as my friend from Oregon has said, 40 or 50 people have been bitten by these mad animals. So the committee felt that inasmuch as the national forests, as a public domain, was the harboring place and the breeding place, that we ought to broaden the authority and say that if a hunter found one of these animals just beyond the confines of the forest land he would have the right to kill him.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is another explanation, if the gentleman will yield. The first $125,000, at the bottom of page 55, can be spent anywhere in the national forests from the Canadian boundary south—all over that area. The second $125,000 in the proviso, at the top of page 56, is limited to that portion of the public land and forest and other lands where the animals are affected with rabies. It is intended to clean them out and then drop this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any other part of the country than the Western and Northwestern States where this appropriation could be utilized?

Mr. HAWLEY. It applies to all the national forests in which there are predatory wild animals that prey on domestic animals.

Mr. STAFFORD. What other part of the United States except in the northwestern country could the appropriation be used for the purposes stated?

Mr. LEVER. There are large areas in the Northwest that are not in the public domain or the national forests. In the gentleman's State, I take it, there is much land which is neither public land or forest land. This proviso confines the operations used to public land and elsewhere in the West and Northwest.

Mr. STAFFORD. My point is whether or not you are appropriating $125,000 for the purpose of eradicating animals on private lands and not on the national domain.

Mr. LEVER. We are doing both. As far as possible, we are providing for the destruction of animals in the national forests and on the public domain, and at the same time to destroy them on private lands; and I think rightfully so, because the information of the committee is that the national forests and the public domain are constant breeding places and harboring places for these predatory animals; and if so, it seems to me that there is the duty on the part of the Federal Government to help eradicate the animals although they are now on private land.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me ask this question: If the National Government appropriates funds for the eradication of these animals in the national forests and on the public domain, is it not doing its full duty, and why should we take upon ourselves the work of the States by eradicating these animals upon private lands?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman will note that in reference to the appropriation for the elimination of the ground squirrel, which carries the flea whose bite gives the bubonic plague, we provide for the eradication of the squirrel not only in the national forests and on the public domain, but on the territory surrounding, because we have felt that inasmuch as the national forests become the breeding place and the harboring place from which they go onto private property there was a duty incumbent on the Federal Government to help destroy them. The gentleman understands that the deficiency bill carries an item of $75,000 for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am aware of that.

Mr. LEVER. And the increase of $125,000 comes to the committee as a supplementary estimate in the regular way from the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I would like to say that in the first place there are no predatory wild animals bred on private land. It is the forest reserves that are the breeding places, and that is where they come from. They swoop down on the lower valley in great herds.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should not the Government eradicate them in the national forests, and in doing that would it not be doing its whole work?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; but they come down from the forest reserves onto the private lands. The farmer can exterminate all of the squirrels on his farm but not upon the surrounding public domain, and it is the squirrels that come from the public domain that go in and destroy the crop, and they feel the Government ought to join with them in helping exterminate them. In western Colorado they are paying as high as $100 apiece for scalps of gray wolves and $20 apiece for coyotes.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be better for us to kill the squirrels on the public domain first, if that is where they come from?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is true.

Mr. MANN. But that is not what they intend to do.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what I have in mind, whether it should not be our duty to exterminate them completely, provide ample funds for their extermination in the national forests and on the public domain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has analyzed the situation very well, as is usual with him. The first proviso, containing the appropriation for the destruction of predatory animals, found on the bottom of page 55, applies to all of the forest regions, containing 167,000,000 acres of national forests, and probably as much or more of public lands. It is proposed to make a systematic warfare on the wild animals that are breeding in those forests and on the public lands and to destroy them. In order to meet an emergency situation and to do intensive work on that portion of the lands infested with mad animals, in addition to the other work, it is necessary to have this second appropriation if we are going to do it while it can be done. If the animals are allowed to roam at large and bite large numbers of other animals, the area infested by the animals subject to rabies will very largely increase and thousands and tens of thousands of dollars' worth of stock will be destroyed. And so the second proviso, on the top of page 56, for an appropriation for this kind of work was inserted. The work will be confined to these particular localities—southern Washington, eastern Oregon, Nevada, Idaho, and the border of Utah—with the idea that surrounding this area and working in toward the center and cleaning up all of the animals infected with rabies we will not only kill the predatory animals that destroy the flocks, but destroy the animals that spread the disease, endangering human life.

In eastern Oregon, as reported in the press, a mad coyote chased a man in an automobile for a considerable distance, and he was fortunate when it approached the automobile to have a gun or a revolver with which to kill the animal. A rough and steep road favored the approach of the animal. They are in constant danger in that section from these animals that come into the towns and attack domestic animals tied in the stalls. The mad animals are absolutely without fear, without the natural instincts of self-preservation. There are a great many of them. This second appropriation applies only to a very small portion of the entire domain and in order to clear it up. Since the animals make no distinction between private and public lands it was necessary to add the words "and elsewhere," so that the hunters and trappers can follow an animal when on the trail of one through a forest or public land or onto private land until they could kill him. They will be authorized to put their traps anywhere, otherwise it might have been construed that they would have to keep off the private lands, and their activities would thereby be diminished and curtailed.

Mr. MADDEN. How long have we been carrying an appropriation for this character of work?

Mr. HAWLEY. The appropriation for the destruction of predatory animals was put on the bill in the Senate last year. The second proviso is new in this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. If all of this that the gentleman has been describing is happening and has been happening for a number of years, why is it that it was never discovered until now? What makes it important now as compared with the years that have gone by?

Mr. HAWLEY. The rabies situation.

Mr. MADDEN. The whole situation?

Mr. HAWLEY. We have been endeavoring to cope with the situation ourselves, and we have appropriated in the West a great deal of money. This has been done by the individual growers of stock and the associations of growers of stock and by the States and counties, but the forests and the public lands, as has been stated, are the breeding places of these animals.

Mr. MADDEN. There were more wild animals years ago than there are now.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; there were more many years ago than there are now. Then they were largely destroyed, and then with the creation of the forests——

Mr. MADDEN. Who destroyed them?

Mr. HAWLEY. The hunters.

Mr. MADDEN. The Government did not?

Mr. HAWLEY. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Why is it the Government is called upon to do the very thing that the people in the States ought to do? In every conceivable activity in which the States ought to indulge, for the promotion of their own interest, wherever a way can be found to take money out of the Public Treasury for that purpose it is done, and new discoveries are made every year and every day.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But when the people are paying as high as $100 for gray wolves and $20 for coyotes, does the gentleman not think that the State is doing very well, when these things are bred in the forest reserves?

Mr. MADDEN. The forest reserves have always been there, and they will continue to be there, and it is only another way of getting money out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman may be assured that if the national forests and the public lands can be rid of these wild animals we will be very glad to drop the appropriation from the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. But did the gentleman ever hear of a case where an appropriation was dropped after it was once started?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that debate——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Will not the gentleman at least——

Mr. LEVER. There is no use in reserving the point of order if it is going to be made.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand the gentleman from Illinois made the point of order against the entire paragraph.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that comes too late.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order. The point of order was reserved against the last proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was reserved against another proviso and then withdrawn, and the Chair's recollection is that the only point of order reserved is against the last proviso in the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. All this discussion that has been going on was with the understanding that the point of order was pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Against a certain proviso.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I make the point of order against the paragraph to which it was pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order against the last proviso.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Would not the gentleman from Illinois permit us who are somewhat interested and have some personal knowledge of these conditions——

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RAKER. Before the Chair rules, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. When a point of order is made there is nothing else for the Chair to do except rule.

Mr. MADDEN. If those gentleman who are interested in this proviso wish to be heard upon it, I do not want to cut them off, so I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Just one minute. I know the gentleman from Illinois so well that when he makes up his mind he makes it up to stay and he is going to make this point of order, no matter what may be said, and he has heard the discussion——

Mr. MADDEN. I intend to make it.

Mr. LEVER. Then it is an utter waste of time for the committee to continue the discussion of it. Now, if the gentleman will permit us to proceed and let the Chair rule on this, I will offer an amendment here which may be in order, I am not sure.

Mr. RAKER. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to reserve the point of order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is to pass on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment, the same language in the bill at the same point in the bill, if the Clerk can follow me.

After the word "forests," in line 2, page 56, strike out the words "and elsewhere," so that the language will read:

That of this sum not less than $125,000 shall be used on the lands—

And the word "and" ought to be in there—and national forests in the Western and Northwestern States—

And so forth.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, at the end of line 25, insert the following:
"And provided further also, That of this sum not less than $125,000 shall be used on the public lands and national forests in the Western and Northwestern States for the protection of stock and other domestic animals through the suppression of rabies by the destruction of wolves, coyotes, and other predatory wild animals."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I would ask the Chair to rule. I do not care to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to know the reasons on which the gentleman from Illinois bases his point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Why, Mr. Chairman, there is no authority of law for any such provision in the bill, and the expenditure of this money is just another addition to the taxation upon an already overburdened people.

Mr. LEVER. That last statement is not in response to the Chair's request in reference to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, if he is going to offer another amendment I was going to ask him whether he would not be willing to increase the amount in one of the other items?

Mr. LEVER. I am going to do that. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 55, line 23, by striking out "$125,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, line 23, strike out "$125,000" and insert "$250,000."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close——

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to offer an amendment——

Mr. LEVER. In 45 minutes. That is a long time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 45 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief. I want to state earnestly and emphatically to this House that the people of the district I represent are very much interested in this subject. We do not care in what form you give us the money, whether in two separate items or in one. We want the appropriation because we need it. Up to date in my State 57 people have been treated at the State university for rabies occasioned primarily by coyote bites. That is to say nothing of thousands of live stock that have been bitten and have died. The counties and the State and the different live-stock associations have spent a vast amount of money, and they are continuing to spend it for the eradication of that dread disease. It is becoming alarming. From the Idaho line to the Colorado River it is dangerous for a man, woman, or child to go out in these desert wastes unprotected. In that State there are some 70,000,000 acres of land. They talk about private ownership. Fifty-six million acres of that 70,000,000 acres are in public ownership to-day, and, of course, that does not include the land that is in the forest reserves. Those reserves are the breeding places of the coyote.

I will admit the coyote is not very popular in the West. Even Mark Twain in his time said of him that he was so long, lean, lank, and hungry that even a flea would desert him for a velocipede. He got along very well though until the tame dogs listened to the call of the wild and became associated with him and gave him the rabies. And now he is spreading the rabies everywhere. Even the badgers, skunks, and wildcats have it. I received a paper just now while on the floor of this House giving an account of the death of a man who was bitten by a rabid coyote.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Certainly.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Is the rabies sure death to the coyote?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. It is, undoubtedly.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will not the disease itself result in the eradication of the coyote more rapidly than by the hunter himself?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. No. It is resulting in the death of others than the coyote. It is a serious matter.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Do I understand you to inform us that these persons have died from rabies contracted from the coyote himself?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. From the coyote himself. This paper was just brought to me in the House. It is the Elko Independent, which states that an Elko man had died from hydrophobia, caused by being bitten by a rabid coyote while sleeping in the sagebrush. Another paper tells of a child that died a short time ago from hydrophobia. Every paper records some new attack. In one of the school districts of my State they had to close the school. Congressman SINNOTT, of Oregon, whose district lies adjacent to mine, stated to me not long ago that some of the schools in his district were obliged to close. It has been going on for some time, perhaps a year. I have not exaggerated the condition at all.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. In reference to the condition the gentleman is describing about the spread of rabies, does the gentleman think this appropriation should be confined to the public reserves and the public domain? Would it not be better to apply it to all areas where these coyotes live?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. That was one reason I wanted the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] not to make the point of order that he raised. I believe that these coyote hunters should be employed to destroy coyotes anywhere they are found, whether on the public domain or on private ranges or ranches.

Much of the privately owned land in the State of Nevada is unfenced. I trust the additional $125,000 will not be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nevada has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has already fixed the time for debate.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this disease has existed but a short time in the West. It commenced about a year and a half ago in Oregon, at which time people died, schools were closed, and thousands and tens of thousands of sheep died from being bitten by coyotes; also cattle and horses have died. It extended to Nevada and California, until last fall, from my own personal observation these animals infected with this disease entered my own town. Men from there were sent to the Berkeley Pasteur Institute for treatment. Tens of thousands of dollars' worth of property, not only on the forest reserves, on the public land, but in private ownership, have been destroyed by virtue of this disease. The towns have been hampered in dealing one with the other. Schools in California and Nevada have been closed by virtue of it. Nevada and California, where the disease is prevalent, and in Oregon they raised a fund of money for the purpose of offering a reward for these coyotes, and they were killed off by the thousands; and the disease is being eradicated as fast as it possibly can be by virtue of the assistance of the States and counties. The State of California, with its public-health service, has spent every dollar, practically, that has been appropriated for other health purposes to protect the health of its citizens. The stockmen and farmers, not only in the State of California but in Nevada, and in Utah and in Oregon, are spending money for this purpose. We have large areas of public land upon which these animals breed, and when they are grown they may go a hundred miles in a day, and there is no telling where you can find them. And it is such a menace that no man who has not been in the midst of it can tell what it means.

You can defend yourself against a robber; you can defend yourself against a bear; you can defend yourself against a roaring lion or a tiger; but you can not defend yourself against a rabid coyote, for whenever the slime from the teeth strikes any part of your body, death, worse than any other that can come upon a human being—death from hydrophobia—follows on the bite of these animals. Three men of my town—one a banker and one a merchant and another a stockman—were afflicted with this disease. One of them had a cow that was bitten by a coyote, and in removing the head of the cow to send away for examination, they got some of the saliva from the cow's mouth, and they had to go to Berkeley to take the Pasteur treatment or they would have been in their graves to-day.

This is not a matter affecting only one community. It sweeps over that entire region of territory. We appeal to you, gentlemen of the House, as the committee, listening to the experts from the department, have approved this amount in the bill, to retain the amount that is herein recommended. We trust and hope that in the interest of human life, in the interest of the protection of property of those people in the Western States, you may see your way clear, after you have allowed upon this appropriation bill these items for protection against all kinds of insects, many of which do not affect human life—we appeal to you to help us fight a disease that can be carried by one coyote to the dog, to the cat, and other animals. The life of the wife and the child are in danger. Even the schools, where the children are gathered, are and have been in great danger. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with considerable horror to the harrowing description of the terrible and frightful conditions that exist throughout some of the Western States as just related by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], the last speaker.

This appropriation of a quarter of a million of dollars is a considerable amount of money to be expended in the destruction of wild animals, and from reading the report of the hearing before the Committee on Agriculture, I have grave doubts whether it is being expended wisely or well. I notice they pay the hunters $75 a month, and if a hunter has an outfit he is allowed $10 a month for that, and if he has a couple of horses he is allowed $15 each per month for them, making in all $115 a month for one hunter with an outfit and two horses.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And, of course, the more of these men there are to be appointed, the more patronage the gentlemen will have in their districts?

Mr. WALSH. I assume that may follow, possibly, and without civil-service examinations. One of these hunters, Mr. Chairman, killed one coyote while he was employed—quite an expensive animal. Another killed 37 coyotes and 13 bobcats in a month—50 animals for $115—and the carnage still continues.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. I do not yield at this time. Furthermore, I find that one of the Members of this House related his experience to the committee in eradicating the coyote from a range of 20,000 acres in a manner which seemed to be not only perfectly satisfactory but economical as well, perhaps too economically for the western Members. That was by the use of hounds.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STEELE] had a number of hounds on his ranch which killed several coyotes, 15 or 20, and he thereafter found out where their breeding place was, and hunted them out and dug them up and exterminated them, and he said there were no coyotes within 10 miles of that ranch afterwards. I find upon reading the hearings that some other members of the committee also recommended that hounds are successful in eradicating the coyote. It is but fair to say, however, that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STEELE] was in favor of the appropriation of $125,000 to exterminate the animals afflicted with rabies.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for one question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman know that no man who has a pack of hounds that has cost him from $50 to $100 a head would ever think of turning them loose on a coyote because of the danger of infection?

Mr. WALSH. I know that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STEELE] used hounds on the coyotes, and used them successfully on his range. I do not know whether they were worth $50 apiece or $100 or not, but they did the work. I would like to ask why it is that the western section of the country should be so alarmed about the coyote? When we in the eastern section of the country have animals that, while they do not chase an automobile for miles on the public highway, as related by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], do commit great depredations upon our live stock and poultry, and we are not asking the National Government for $250,000 to eradicate the woodchuck or the skunk or the polecat. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MEEKER. Are you aware that where this coyote chased that automobile it was prohibition territory?

Mr. WALSH. I assumed when the statement was being made that it all occurred in a dry country. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman know that we are appropriating in this very bill $300,000 to kill insect pests up in Massachusetts? [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. I know that you are appropriating money to kill bugs, but I apprehend that very little of that $300,000 will find its way into Massachusetts or even New England, but our section will contribute in full proportion of the appropriation. There is one thing that I noticed, after reading the reports of the hearings and the report of the proposed work of the department, as outlined in pamphlet form, and that is that in some of these sections the coyotes have decreased in number, and as they decrease in number the number of hunters inrceases in, I suppose, corresponding ratio. They are going to have 140 hunters and 14 inspectors this coming year, and the number of coyotes has decreased, as a result of the brave and death-defying work of these brave hunters at $115 per.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I desire to follow the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], because most of the gentlemen or in fact all of the gentlemen who have spoken in favor of this proposition are from the far Western States, where these coyotes abound. In explanation of my reason for taking the time of the House this afternoon on this proposition I want to state that for four years I rode the range out in the State of Nevada, and I am familiar with the depredations committed by these animals and their danger to live stock, to say nothing of humans.

With all due respect to my friend from Massachusetts, he should learn how to pronounce the name of that animal before he comes in here and attempts to tell us about it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I have only five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the gentleman to give the correct pronunciation.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. These animals, according to the pronunciation in the country where they live and where they are best known, are called ki-otes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will not yield his pronunciation to classical New England?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. No; I can not yield to anyone. Mr. Chairman, the debate on this question seems to have developed into a joke on both sides—and it is no joke to the people of the West.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the gentleman serious about it?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. In the remaining few minutes I should like to be serious about it. With all due respect to my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who has been in this House far longer than I will probably ever be here, I wish to say that gentlemen who are not familiar with this subject do not know how dangerous these animals are, not only to live stock, but to human life. You have heard that in the State of Nevada 57 people have had to be treated because of being bitten by these animals. I think the proponents of the measure made a mistake when they brought before us the illustration of a coyote following an automobile, or of a coyote biting a man behind a sagebrush—no doubt true, but rather incredible to those who are ignorant of these beasts.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. No; I can not yield.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not pronouncing the name of the animal correctly.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I am pronouncing the name of the animal according to the way it is pronounced in the country where it lives, and I do not care for any "dictionary" on the subject. [Applause and laughter.] My pronunciation was infected by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

I was saying to the House that I did not think the proponents of this provision helped it any by bringing in the illustration of the man who was bitten behind the sagebrush. If he had taken enough alcohol before he lay down there to sleep he probably would have gotten over the effects of that bite. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Where did the gentleman say the man was bitten? [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. In answer to the gentleman's question with reference to the condition of the man behind the sagebrush, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the article from the newspaper describing the occurrence.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, is this being taken out of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I am trying to show the House that people who do not live in this coyote-infested country and who do not happen to be directly interested in this proposition can still see some good in this measure, for, coming from Delaware, it does not concern me directly. I think it is as good a provision as there is in the bill and is just as much called for as dozens of other items in the bill that concern particular localities where it happens that your own ox is gored and the other fellow's is not. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that I have been looking at the dictionary, and both pronunciations are correct.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, as to the pronunciation of the word coyote I am supposed to be an authority, because it is a Spanish word.

Mr. MANN. We do not speak Spanish, though.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. It is pronounced neither "ki-ote" nor "ki-ó-te," but it is pronounced "coy-ó-te." [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. How long has this appropriation been carried in this bill?

Mr. LEVER. This is the second year.

Mr. MADDEN. This is the first year, is it not?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, the main point I want to make is this, that we ought to support this appropriation on the part of the Federal Government toward the destruction of these wolves, because they are wolves and nothing else. There are two classes of wolves out in that western country. One is called the gray wolf, which is larger than the coyote. The coyote is supposed to be a cross between the gray wolf and the fox, and therefore is more foxy than the regular wolf. [Laughter.]

The wolf in my part of the country was little known until recently. He came there from Texas, and we will charge him up to Texas.

Mr. BORLAND. He did not come from Wall Street, did he?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. No; he came from Texas. He is down there, and the Federal Government, in my opinion, should cooperate with the Western States in the destruction of these, the most destructive of predatory animals, since they have embraced within the national forests large areas of land and are keeping from one to four men all the year round. It is my opinion that they should be employed in killing wolves, if nothing else.

The appropriation provided for in the paragraph is simply to cooperate with the States in the destruction of these animals, and nothing more. The methods that shall be used in the destruction of the animals I do not know, but I suppose they will hire hunters for the purpose. They could offer a head bounty, as we do in my State, where we pay $15 for a wolf and $2 to $2.50 for a coyote.

Mr. OVERMYER. Will the gentleman describe to the committee the conduct of the coyote who is afflicted with rabies?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. In my State we are not bothered with rabies; we are simply bothered with the coyote.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman from New Mexico will yield, in answer to the gentleman's question, the coyote with the rabies loses all sense of danger and fear. He starts down the road, biting the tin cans, biting the fence, biting the horse, biting the automobile, biting the cow and the sheep, and he keeps on biting until he is dead. He may bite 20 dogs and he may bite other coyotes and cattle.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I never saw a coyote with the rabies, but I have seen a dog with the rabies.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, surely there can be no objection to the retention of this clause in the bill. When American citizens will brave the dangers and hardships which they must encounter in order to establish a home upon some mountain side they should have all the encouragement that the Government can give to them. In order that you may have some proof that rabies exist among some of the wild animals of the Mountain States, I want to read from a letter which I have received from a constituent of mine, Mrs. Lula M. Gaddy, of Mountain Home, Idaho, who writes under date of February 1, 1916, as follows:

> One thing I think you can do for our locality in Idaho is to agitate the mad-coyote conditions which prevail there. I was one of those whom it was hard to convince that there were mad coyotes, but we learned to our sorrow that there were. Many animals have been bitten in our community during the last year, and several people. My brother's two children were bitten and by only a miracle and the goodness of God did one of them escape. They were playing in the yard close to the house when a mad coyote jumped the fence, attacked the baby, 2 years old, who was playing with his little shovel in the sand, and bit him in the top of the head, the fangs sinking deep into the skull; hearing his screams, the older brother rushed to the rescue of the baby only to be attacked by the creature and bitten in the leg. Their father, who was working in the field not far away, hearing the commotion, left his team and, seizing a club, killed the brute as it left the children and rushed at him. Upon examination it was found the coyote was mad, and the family spent three weeks right in the planting time in town having the treatment administered to the children. Fifty-five dollars apiece for the treatment, to say nothing of the local doctor's charges, board in town, loss of valuable time on the farm, etc., saying nothing of the anxiety. This added to an already immense doctor's bill caused by both parents having spotted fever the year before, made the father wonder why he had tried to hold a claim in Idaho. So talk up this thing. The ticks and consequent spotted fever are bad enough, but the mad coyotes are worse. All last summer and fall I never dared step out of doors to go to a neighbor's, or to the mail box, without a gun or club.
> Get the Government to put a big bounty on coyote heads or do something to kill off the pests.

I am willing to rest my case upon the appeal of this woman, who is only one among thousands of worthy citizens of the West who have braved the dangers of wild animals for many years past and who have paid into the Treasury of the United States millions of dollars for their homes. The sum should be increased to twice the amount provided for in this bill.

It seems a strange thing that so little has ever been done by this Government to aid the pioneer of the West. In the early days he fought the Indians in order that he might build a habitation for himself and his family. Now he is obliged to fight wild animals infected with a fearful disease, and although he has blazed the way for the generations which have followed and has done more than any other class in the country to increase our food supply, has given his sons to the Army and the Navy and done much else to make this country great, yet some gentlemen on the floor of this House doubt the wisdom of making a small appropriation to enable him to defend himself against attack of ferocious and infected wild beasts.

I therefore urge in all seriousness that the sum provided for in this bill, to wit, $125,000, be appropriated for the protection not only of our stock, but that which is still more important, the lives and health of our people in the Northwest by an early and vigorous fight on the part of the Agricultural Department to suppress rabies, which can only be done by the destruction of wolves, coyotes, and other predatory animals. I know that the Members of this House are in sympathy with the homestead entrymen in the far West, and let us show our appreciation of him in a substantial way by retaining the provision of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCRACKEN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. How is your State spending money to eradicate the animals?

Mr. McCRACKEN. The legislature has made an appropriation for the payment of a bounty on the animals killed.

Mr. TILSON. They consider it the best way to offer a bounty of so much a head for those killed rather than to employ hunters by the month.

Mr. McCRACKEN. I will say that the stock associations and the State board of health have cooperated, and they have employed people to go out and kill coyotes. They also use poison and other means of destruction.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, for many years the Western States have paid bounties for the extermination of predatory wild animals. Those bounties have run all the way from two to five dollars for wolves and from 75 cents to about $2 for coyotes. In addition to that, the stock associations, particularly in former times, when the range stock industry flourished, gave bounties also. In some parts of my State the bounty on the gray wolf has been at times as high as $15—State and local bounty combined. Our people have expended a very great deal of money attempting to exterminate these animals. We have had some success. We have kept the numbers down to a point where the destruction of stock has been far less than it would have been without the great expenditure that has been made. Of late years, since the creation of the forest reservations and since conditions have changed in the live-stock industry, so that we no longer have the big concerns to pay the supplementary bounties, we have found it more and more difficult to cope with these animals. Last year an amendment was placed in this bill to aid these Western States in that regard, and I think it is a wise provision. A small sum is here appropriated for this purpose, compared with the sums the people of the Western States are expending annually for the same purpose. It was said in the matter of the brown-tail moth that Massachusetts and other States were spending quite as much as the Federal Government. I think it may safely be said that the States and communities and individuals in the West have expended $10 at the very least for this work of extermination to $1 proposed in this appropriation.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Has any good been discovered in any of these animals, either alive or dead, from their carcasses, their skins, or their fur? Are they good for anything whatsoever, so as to induce any private individual to kill them?

Mr. MONDELL. The skins are worth a little something. The coyote skin is worth from 50 cents to a dollar, depending upon its quality, but a wolfskin anywhere from 75 cents to a dollar and a half, but the animals in the main are of the character with which some people formerly invested the Indian. They are good under certain conditions—after they are dead.

Mr. HOWELL. I would like to state that in the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture a gentleman representing the Bureau of Biology made a statement that during the last two months there had been returned to the Treasury the sum of $1,300 for the pelts of animals that had been killed by the Government hunters.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to ask the gentleman a question on this matter of State cooperation. Are not the Western States somewhat hampered on the question of cooperation by the fact that they not only lose the taxable value of the national forests, but the national forests are themselves somewhat responsible for the conditions which they have to combat?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is correct. The national forests are the great breeding grounds for these predatory animals.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I will ask the gentleman whether we made an appropriation last year for this purpose?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Have we received any report of the work done under this appropriation?

Mr. MONDELL. I think there was something in the hearings about it. I have some information myself on the subject I will be glad to give the committee if I have the time.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, my information is that they have killed something like 3,000 of these predatory animals, excluding those infected with rabies.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] has raised a question as to the propriety and advisability of following the method of employing hunters rather than paying bounties. The officials of the Biological Survey, after very careful consideration of the situation and examination of the conditions, came to the conclusion that it would not be wise for the Government to join with the States and with individuals in the payment of bounties; that the best results would be obtained in the long run by the careful selection of hunters, paying them a salary and not allowing them to secure anything from the pelts or from bounties. With a part of this appropriation the bureau is doing very effective work in the destruction of prairie dogs. I have taken the trouble to keep informed in regard to this work, and I can say from personal knowledge that not only has the work done by the bureau been very effective, but it greatly stimulated the killing of prairie dogs by individuals. I am of the opinion that the increased yield of grass on account of the killing of prairie dogs by employees of the bureau and by individuals as a result of the influences of the bureau had a value in the single season far in excess of this entire appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time limit has already been fixed.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it is an old saying that fat dogs will not hunt, and I fear that the man who is put on the pay roll to hunt these coyotes will get so fat that he will not do anything but lie around, the muzzle of his gun in the sagebrush, and draw his pay. If you need men to kill these coyotes, or whatever you want to call them, why not take the army that will soon be coming back from their hunt after Villa? They might as well be hunting these things as Villa.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point on the gentleman's pronunciation of "Villa."

Mr. MADDEN. We have had so much Spanish education here this afternoon——

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman asked the gentleman from California about wanting jobs for constituents. Knowing the gentleman to be liberal, would he not be willing for Democrats to be appointed as dog killers?

Mr. MADDEN. I would be willing if they worked at the dog-killing business, but the trouble is they will not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I can not in two minutes. This appropriation is going to pass, there is no doubt about that, and perhaps it ought to, but the thing that alarms me is that next year you will have a million dollars in this appropriation, and the number of coyotes will grow and the necessity for employing more men will grow.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I want to inquire if they are rapid breeders?

Mr. MADDEN. They are. An appropriation once made by the Federal Government never ceases; it always increases. If you make it $10 to-day it will be $100,000 to-morrow; make it $100,000 to-morrow and it will be $1,000,000 the next day. It does not make any difference whether there is need for it or not, and I think it is wrong to load the taxpayers with unnecessary burdens of this sort and impose upon them as you do. These men from the Western States know very well that there is no more need for this appropriation to kill these wild animals than the man in the moon. They will still be there, as they have been since the beginning of time. Why, gentlemen, they have just discovered another way of putting a few more men on the pay roll. Now, we have to give them a shotgun and a horse and a saddle and a tent and all the other paraphernalia in order to make them eligible for the pay roll. Coyotes, oh, coyotes, what crimes are committed in their name! [Laughter and applause.] The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] weeps. You can see the tears running down his face lest the item will not pass and a few more men get on the pay roll to kill coyotes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

On page 55, line 22, after the word "sum," strike out the words "not less than."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, line 22, after the word "sum," strike out the words "not less than."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Line 23, page 55, after the amount "$250,000," strike out the word "shall" and insert "may."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, line 23, after the amount "$250,000," strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, in one of the recent daily papers is the following article of news which clearly shows the upward trend of business and confidence displayed in the future by business men:

SEVEN MILLION DOLLAR RAIL ORDER IS PLACED—PENNSYLVANIA AND READING ROADS DISTRIBUTE HUGE STEEL CONTRACTS.

PHILADELPHIA, April 15.

Orders aggregating between $7,000,000 and $7,500,000 were placed with various steel concerns by the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Philadelphia & Reading Railway.

What is said to be the largest single order for steel rails in the history of the road was placed by the Pennsylvania Railroad. The order calls for 205,000 tons for 1917 delivery, and will cost approximately $6,000,000. The Reading's orders are for 26 locomotives for freight service. They will be built by the Baldwin Locomotive Works at a cost upward of $1,000,000.

The rail order will be distributed among the United States Corporation, Bethlehem, Lackawanna, Cambria, and the Pennsylvania companies.

It would, therefore, appear that the railroads giving this big order are not alarmed about the business distress over which some of the Republicans seem to exhibit so much worry. They do not see either in the present or future any occasion for alarm. If they did, they would not place such an enormous order for supplies for equipping their roads. The calamity, it appears, so frequently rehearsed on the floor of this House only exists in the worried and overtaxed imaginations of a few who refuse to realize the marvelous wave of prosperity sweeping over the land.

Our country is to-day enjoying the greatest era of prosperity it has ever known, and our business institutions are taxed to their limits to care for the business the requirements exact of them. Nearly every line of industry is taxed beyond its capacity to fill the unsolicited orders flowing in on it. This is a strong commendation of the present administration. It demonstrates beyond cavil or doubt that the business world has confidence in it and approves its policies.

Money is plentiful and can be had for legitimate purposes on reasonable terms; labor is employed at remunerative wages and industry was never more profitable. This strikes terror to the prophets of evil, who only a short time ago were crying calamity and distress, predicting idleness, shutdowns, lockouts, and every other business evil the ingenious mind could conceive. But lo and behold their disappointment! Instead of calamity and distress, we witness the most marvelous prosperity the country has ever known, our people are happy and contented, the country forging to the front by leaps and bounds, and reaping rich rewards as the result of the wise and economic business policies adopted by this administration.

Prosperity has come to stay, business is now on a safe foundation, panics are things of the past, and opportunities are equal for all. Special privilege no longer exists for a favored few, and the whole people are the beneficiaries of these beneficent policies. These conditions have been brought about under the administration of the Democratic Party, the only party in this country which could bring them about for the people.

The Republican Party could not do so because it was so obligated to the special interests, so absolutely dominated by them that it was powerless to enact remedial legislation for the best interests of the people. It had ample opportunity to do so, but failed. It has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. The Democratic Party was intrusted with power, fulfilled the expectations of the people, and will be continued in power for another four years.

Railroads are placing large orders for supplies, manufacturers are building additions to their plants, new lines of business are springing up, necessary to meet the demands made upon them by the ever-increasing public and private requirements. This is a great time, the greatest ever known in the history of our great Republic.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all necessary expenses for enforcing the provisions of the act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., 847, 848), relating to the protection of migratory game and insectivorous birds, and for cooperation with local authorities in the protection of migratory birds, and for necessary investigations connected therewith, $50,000.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this is not subject to the point of order. There is a statute which covers this, and the gentleman from Kansas is going to move to strike it out.

Mr. COX. I want to get some information on this. I recall the statute very well. I know the Federal court has held it to be unconstitutional. I will make the point of order on it, because there is no law for it. The law has been held unconstitutional at least by one Federal court in the United States, if not two.

Mr. LEVER. It has been held constitutional.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps one court has held it unconstitutional, but other courts have not.

Mr. COX. I do not know that any court has held it as constitutional.

Mr. LEVER. The court in Arkansas held it constitutional.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman permit the gentleman from Kansas to offer an amendment and have it pending?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 56, strike out the paragraph included in lines 11 to 18, inclusive.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING MONDAY.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday next. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, April 24, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

MONDAY, April 24, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee that with the returning springtime we have the token of Thy will and Thy purpose to supply all our needs. We thank Thee that we know that back of the rains, the fields, the flowers, and the sunshine is the Father's will, and we look to Thee with praises in our hearts for all the gifts of life. We come to Thee that the higher needs of our spiritual life may also be supplied. We pray that Thou wilt out of the unmeasured resources of Thy grace give to us all the nobler aspirations and ambitions of life, leading us to look at life from God's point of view, measuring its possibilities and its responsibilities by Thy revealed will. Guide us this day in the discharge of the duties that come to us. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 16, 1916.

Senator ROBERT L. OWEN,
Washington, D. C.:

Please present the following official recommendation of the Southern Sociological Congress offered in sesssion now at New Orleans: Six hundred thousand citizens of the United States die annually of preventable disease and 6,000,000 are needlessly sick. The economic loss per year from the last item alone is a half billion dollars. State and local health authorities have grappled but are overwhelmed with conditions which germinate such destructive and costly maladies as tuberculosis, typhoid, malaria, hookworm, pneumonia, cancer, syphilis, inebriacy. It is the deliberate sense of this congress that the greatest possible act of constructive economic legislation is the establishment of an adequate separate national department of health. The Southern Sociological Congress begs to present with our most constant and loyal respect the earnest petition to the President and to each Senator and Representative in the National House that such legislation be enacted at current Congress session.

C. H. BROUGH,
Governor Elect of Arkansas and President.
J. E. MCCULLOCH,
General Secretary.
Mrs. ANNA RUSSELL COLE,
Founder.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I present a resolution adopted by the National Democratic Club, of New York City, largely embodying a thought that I believe in. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CLUB,
New York, April 4, 1916.

At a general meeting of the National Democratic Club, held April 4, 1916, presided over by President John M. Riehle, the following resolution was offered by the Hon. Robert L. Lucc, indorsing the Alexander shipping bill and unanimously adopted:

RESOLUTION.

"Four years ago the Democratic Party in its national platform pledged itself to enact three great measures vital to the Nation's progress and prosperity. These were reform of banking and currency, tariff reform, and the development of a merchant marine.

"Two of these pledges have been redeemed and a Democratic Congress is about to renew its efforts to give the country the benefit of the third of these great constructive reforms.

"Since the adoption of the platform pledge to rebuild and develop a merchant marine an added importance was attached to this policy by reason of its intimate relation to the subject of national preparedness.

"An adequate auxiliary merchant marine for the transport of men, munitions, and supplies is absolutely essential to an effective navy. Utilizing all available home resources, any real emergency would find our Navy with a shortage of at least 400,000 tons in auxiliary vessels. This deficiency must be made up.

"Owing to American standards of wages, safety at sea, and decent and humane conditions of labor for American seamen, private enterprise can not be relief upon to provide the ships, because experience has demonstrated that private capital can not successfully compete against the handicap of lower standards maintained by other maritime nations.

"Government aid is therefore necessary to overcome this handicap and provide the necessary tonnage. The old-fashioned subsidy system has failed, and it is not only discredited but undemocratic. The policy of loaning Government funds to private individuals and corporations, as the transcontinental railroads were financed, however laudable the object, tends to corruption and control of the Government by special interests, and will not be tolerated while the memory of the Credit Mobilier persists. Neither will public sentiment approve a change in our shipping laws that will tend to relegate us to lower standards of wages, of safety, and of conditions of labor.

"There remains only the policy embodied in the administration's shipping bill, which provides for the immediate purchase by the Government, at an expense of $50,000,000, of a tonnage sufficient to make up for the existing deficiency, and the utilization of these vessels in time of peace, either by private corporations under lease or, if necessary, by the Government, in developing new trade routes to South America and the Far East, and thus taking advantage of the unexampled opportunity pressing upon us for the expansion of our foreign commerce.

"This policy will not only provide for the present emergency but will, when gradually extended, give us the foundation of a real national merchant marine. Coupled, as it is in the pending bill, with the creation of a shipping board that will have the same power to enforce fair practices in ocean freights that the Interstate Commerce Commission has over railroad freights, this measure of constructive statesmanship will not only make for preparedness for war but also for preparedness for peace and commerce.

"Therefore, recognizing these conditions, be it

"Resolved, That the National Democratic Club, of the city of New York, heartily supports the President and the Democratic Congress in their efforts to solve constructively this great national problem."

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Independence, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LANE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Oregon, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RESTORATION OF PEACE IN EUROPE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Secretary to read the resolution which I offered the other day relating to the restoration of peace in Europe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 172, submitted by Mr. NEWLANDS on the 20th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the people of the United States, composed for the most part either of natives or the descendents of natives of the warring countries in Europe, have viewed with distress the existing war, involving, as it does, the universal destruction of the fit and courageous and the general impairment of condition. They have observed with satisfaction the recent announcements of the English and German Governments regarding a possible peace.

Whilst the announcement of each Government contains phrases intended to encourage its own people yet having the effect of irriating the opposing peoples, it is observed that each announcement practically involves the restoration of the status quo ante.

It is to be regretted that on each side phrases have been used which were likely to be misunderstood on the other side, such as the demand of England that German militarism should be destroyed, a phrase which means, to the German people, that German nationalism should be destroyed.

Without going into the contentions of the ancient Empires which have been inherited by the peoples descended from them, or elaborating upon the modern contentions of existing Empires, it is clear that the immediate cause of the existing war was that one of the two Teutonic States, surrounded by hostile Slavs on the one side and hostile Latins on the other, felt that its national life was threatened by the destruction of its Crown Prince through a conspiracy organized in a Slav State, and insisted upon its right to punish this Slav State without foreign intervention, that from this small commencement an almost universal war has arisen, more destructive than any which the world has hitherto witnessed, that, as a result of this war, the Teutonic allies have won on land, whilst the entente allies have won on the sea, and that the result is a deadlock of forces destructive and paralyzing to all.

The Teutonic allies have accomplished the declared purpose of the war—the punishment of Servia. This has been done. It can not be undone. The people of all the warring countries desire peace. Their Governments undoubtedly wish to gratify this aspiration, but in a way that will not involve the impairment of national sovereignty and prestige. Each regards this contest as one for national life. Each disclaims the idea of aggression or conquest. The enthusiasm of the war is over. A grim determination upon the part of each to maintain its national life unimpaired, alone animates the courage and steadies the purpose of all.

The rage of the conflict makes diplomatic parley impossible. The governmental announcements of England and Germany indicate a harmony of view as to many things, such as that no indemnity shall be demanded, that Belgium shall be restored as an independent State, that the portion of France recently occupied by Germany shall be restored, that the status of Alsace and Lorraine, settled over 40 years ago by treaty between Germany and France, shall not be disturbed.

Just as England and France demand that they should be secured by buffer States and proper boundaries against Teutonic aggression in the west, Germany demands that she should be secured against Slav aggression in the east. The disposition of Poland therefore becomes important. Might it not be possible by mutual concessions of existing rights by both Teutons and Slavs to reestablish the ancient Kingdom of Poland, or at least a part of it, as a sovereign buffer State?

Austria demands security on the south. The Teutonic States, in conjunction with Bulgaria, have destroyed the sovereignty of Servia. May it not be possible to restore that sovereignty, or, if that is impossible, may not Servia's prosperity be made more secure in the future through a modified autonomy established under Austrian sovereignty?

Germany's colonial possessions have been wrested from her. May they not be restored, or, at all events, compensated for through some favorable readjustment of her boundaries or sphere of influence in Turkey and Asia Minor?

Russia, locked in by icebound ports, demands access to the southern seas. She has won her way to the Persian Gulf. Why should not this, or free access to the Mediterranean through the Dardanelles, be secured to her?

There remains the question of German militarism and English navalism, the one dominant on land, the other dominant on sea. Why may it not be possible, without irritating phrases, for each of these Governments to state publicly its views, not regarding disarmament, but a gradual reduction of armament on land and sea, and a gradual approach toward the adjustment of international disputes, as domestic disputes are adjusted, through international tribunals organized and proceeding as do domestic tribunals, according to the orderly forms of law, with power to enforce their decrees? Surely the progress which has been made in the substitution of law and order for violence in the settlement of individual disputes through domestic tribunals created for the purpose justifies the hope that a similar international evolution will spring from the blood of the heroes whose valor and courage on land and sea, unequaled in the history of the world, have been fruitless of result, except deterioration of race and impoverishment of condition.

The Senate of the United States, profoundly impressed by the solemnity of the hour, urges upon the warring nations a calm consideration of these views.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, from the small beginning of a movement made by a Teutonic State to punish a Slav State for an alleged offense against its national life, resulting in the assassination of its crown prince, the most gigantic and calamitous war in history has arisen.

The distinguishing characteristics of this war include the disclaimer by each of the warring nations of responsibility for its commencement and continuance, the assurance by each that it is not animated by a desire for conquest, the agreement by all participants that it is a senseless war, the declaration of each that it is fighting for its national life and not for aggression or increased dominion, and protests by all against dominant individual militarism either on land or sea.

The frightfulness of the past two years has already surpassed the predictions of the most sinister imagination. May it not be well to seize this moment of deliberation, when the relations of Germany and America are in the balance, and consider whether, by following the spirit of The Hague tribunal encouraging friendly intervention between contending nations, the United States Senate may not, through some expression, lead European thought toward a statement of the terms that will restore peace?

The warring nations are dimly conscious of the frightful consequences that follow each hour through the sacrifices that have preceded, but can nations locked together in a death struggle stop to deliberate? Must not some nation outside of the belligerent forces come to their aid with friendly suggestion? And if this is not successfully done, can any mind measure the calamitous finality that will be written down in history affecting not only this but unborn generations?

If the war continues as it has progressed, the only hope of peace lies in the ruin of all the contending parties, and victory will be given to that power whose exhaustion is least complete.

I do not propose to invade the jurisdiction of the State Department nor to put any obstacles in the way of the President, whose cares it is our desire to lighten; but as the Senate shares the responsibility for our foreign relations, and as we have reached a crisis which is hourly drawing us closer to the European vortex, I entertain the hope that this body can yet gain the attention of the combatants and induce those now conducting the world's tragedy to state in some concrete form, without taunt, acrimony, or threats, what proposals can be made the basis of a desired peace. If the dead could plead, would they not say to those who perpetuate the race, "It is the time to live and let live"?

The settlement of the all-inclusive contention as to the war itself will adjust the minor contentions that now exist between the belligerent countries and our own, and will be the surest means of solidifying a permanent friendship.

Which Government will make the declaration, England, dominant on sea, or Germany, dominant on land, the allied forces of each interlocked in the deadly and indeterminate struggle of the trenches?

May not the Teutonic powers, having accomplished the declared purpose of the war—the punishment of Servia—see their way clear to end it by offering to restore the status quo with such reasonable modifications as changed conditions may necessitate and at the same time to declare their willingness to join the other powers in a reduction of armaments, both military and naval, and the substitution of international tribunals for force in the settlement of disputes between nations?

Such action at the very height of their military power would bring honor to them and peace to the world.

Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RURAL CREDITS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, modern farming requires capital in large amounts. The American farmer has the best security in the world—productive land. This bill enables the farmer to obtain capital for productive purposes at low rates and for long terms on the security of his farm.

NECESSITY FOR FARM CAPITAL.

The successful farmer becomes more of a business man each year. He must use more machinery, buy more fertilizer, and sow better seed. He must erect better buildings, raise better stock, and grow better crops. He must store his produce in order to sell in a high market. He must pay cash in order to buy cheap. If he wishes to keep his children on the farm he must make his home attractive. All of this costs money. He must have ready cash.

Commercial banks are not suited to the requirements of the farmer. Their deposits are mainly on demand or on short time, so that they can not safely tie their funds up in long-time loans. Those who loan to the farmer on mortgage must have access to funds that are seeking long-term investment.

MONEY SEEKING LONG-TERM INVESTMENT.

Of money seeking long-term investment at low rates there is an abundant supply. It includes the ordinary savings of the school-teacher, clerk, minister, and wage earner; the proceeds of life insurance in the hands of widows and other beneficiaries; funds belonging to estates, minors and wards in chancery, in the hands of executors, guardians, and trustees; funds of insurance companies, benevolent orders, and societies of various kinds; endowments of colleges, hospitals, museums, and other institutions; and assets to be invested by receivers, courts, and governments. The aggregate of these is enormous. They require an investment that is absolutely safe and reasonably liquid in the sense that it may be converted into cash upon moderate notice; in other words, that it may find a ready market. A safe investment of this character need not carry a high rate of interest.

INVESTOR AND FARMER BROUGHT TOGETHER FOR MUTUAL PROFIT.

We may picture the owners of this vast wealth grouped on one side of a river, the farmers desiring loans grouped on the other side. It is evident that each has what the other wants. We are asked to furnish the bridge which shall bring them in touch, or, rather, to grant a franchise to those who will build the bridge if we will construct the approaches. Such we conceive to be a proper function of the Government.

It is evident that the school-teacher in Vermont with $500 to invest can not be sure that the Nebraska farm mortgage offered her is a sound investment. The title of the mortgagor may be defective; the farmer may be improvident; the land may not be productive. She has no way to ascertain these primary facts. But if she is able to buy a long-term bond, with semi-annual coupons sure to be promptly paid, secured in common with thousands of like bonds on millions of dollars' worth of farm lands, guaranteed by 12 banks with an aggregate capital of not less than six millions, with selected borrowers of known character, with titles examined and all details attended to by trained men, and with Government examination and supervision, she may invest with confidence on a moderate-income basis.

The pending rural credits bill (S. 2986) provides for a farm-loan board, which shall have general control over the system; twelve or more land banks which make loans on mortgage to the farmer; and many farm-loan associations which represent the farmers in their dealings with the land banks.

The farm-loan board is nonpartisan, consisting of four members, in addition to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Each land bank must have a capital of at least $500,000. If the public does not subscribe the entire amount, the Government will take the balance.

The farm-loan associations are purely cooperative, made up entirely of borrowing farmers. Ten or more farmers may apply to the land bank of the district for a charter. Every farmer who wishes to borrow must become a member of the loan association, taking stock to the amount of 5 per cent of the face of his loan. The loan association takes out an equal amount of stock in the land bank, forwarding the money at once to the land bank. The land bank sends an official appraiser to examine the land, and if the loan is made, forwards the funds to the farmer through the loan association.

When the land bank has mortgages on hand to the amount of $50,000, it may issue a like amount of farm loan bonds on the security of the mortgages as collateral. The land bank is limited in its issue of bonds to 20 times its capital and surplus. But as each borrower puts up 5 per cent of his loan in cash for capital stock, the issuing power of the land bank increases auotmatically.

The loan associations are purely cooperative and may be of limited (double) liability, or unlimited liability. All mortgages taken by the land bank from the members of a loan association are indorsed by it. The mortgages from the two classes of associations are kept separate, and bonds issued on the unlimited liability mortgages should sell on a better basis than the others.

Farm loan bonds issued by any land bank are guaranteed by all the other land banks, so that they have a broad insurance.

SECURITY OF BONDS.

Every farm-loan bond is secured as follows:

1. By the capital, reserves, and earnings of the land bank which issues it.

2. By the capital, reserves, and earnings of the 11 other land banks.

3. By the collective security of all the mortgages in its division (limited or unlimited) of the land bank, the mortgages pledged being at least equal in amount to the outstanding bonds.

Every mortgage pledged as collateral is secured as follows:

1. By the personal undertaking of the borrower.

2. By the security of the mortgaged land at least double in value to the amount of the loan.

3. By the capital, reserves, and earnings of the local association indorsing the loan.

4. By the individual liability of the members of the indorsing association.

It is believed that these bonds will be marketed at par on a 4 per cent basis. The maximum charge for expenses and profits of the system is 1 per cent on the face of outstanding mortgages, so that the farmer should get his money at 5 per cent. All the profits go to the loan associations in dividends, and thus to the borrowers who are the shareholders in the local associations.

Loans to farmers are on long term, and may be as long as 36 years. They are on the amortization plan, so that with each interest payment the borrower will pay in a small amount on his principal. If he pays in 1 per cent of the principal yearly, he will pay out in 36 years.

Loans must be on first mortgage and may not exceed 50 per cent of the appraised value of the land. The loan committee and the board of directors first pass on the value of the land and the character of the farmer. Before the land bank makes the loan, its board of directors passes upon it and has the land appraised by a land-bank appraiser, who is a Government official. In this way absolute safety is secured for each loan.

The interest of the members of the local association is secured by their ownership of stock, and by their double or unlimited liability, as the case may be. Most of the local work of investigation, collecting payments, and forwarding funds is done by them without expense. Their expenses will be very light.

The mortgages and farm loan bonds will be exempt from taxation and the bonds will be a legal investment for trust funds.

It is believed that the system of land banks outlined affords a safe and attractive farm-loan bond for the investing public; low interest rates, long-term mortgages, and easy payments for the farmers; low cost of administration; simplicity of organization and operation; adaptability to the needs of every section; and stimulation to the spirit of generous cooperation among farmers.

The bill is the outgrowth of much study at home and abroad. I wish to emphasize at the outset that it is not in the slightest sense a partisan bill; and on that subject I may say that a year ago I believe that, if I had been willing to subordinate my own views of what the bill should be to others who are supposed to be in control, the bill would have passed at that time; but those of us who have investigated the subject have stood out for our individual views, irrespective of party.

The Republican members of the various committees, which I will presently outline, have given as much thought and attention and as much help in framing the bill as any of the Democrats, and those of you who are acquainted with the personnel of the Republicans on the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate will know that those men would give as much attention and as much intelligent consideration to the subject as any one could give.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OLIVER. In connection with the Senator's statement that the bill is entirely nonpartisan in character—a statement with which I agree, in the main—I desire to call his attention to the provision found at the foot of page 5 that, "All such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees, and all registers and appraisers shall be appointed" without regard to the civil-service act. Will not the Senator acknowledge that there is something partisan in that?

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the Senator bring that question up now. The same provision is found in the Federal reserve act; and with me it was a test of how it worked out in the case of the Federal reserve act. I find that in starting a new system, where special qualifications are required, there is tremendous delay involved in waiting for the Civil Service Commission to recommend, and there is also a great limitation on the field. The Federal Reserve Board started outside of the Civil Service Commission, but as soon as they were fairly started, they referred all applications to the Civil Service Commission, and they are to-day voluntarily appointing all their clerks and officials that correspond to those under the civil-service rules in other departments, under the rules and the direction of the Civil Service Commission. I should not object to having this system under civil-service rules, but I know that to start a great Nation-wide system, to start new such a comprehensive system as this, and undertake to get the appointments from an eligible list furnished by the Civil Service Commission, would delay us for months, and then the results would not be satisfactory. I think the Senator will see a very great difference between starting a new system and running an old department and drawing on the Civil Service Commission for recruits.

Mr. OLIVER. I can see some difference, but I am hardly convinced by the Senator's statement that there is an entire absence of partisanship in this provision.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if it is not true that the members of the Federal Reserve Board made their examinations and made their selections without regard to political recommendations? That is my experience.

Mr. OLIVER. I will acknowledge that the strong probability is that the gentlemen who may be appointed upon this Federal farm loan board will act with an entire absence of partisanship; but that does not remove the sting of partisanship from this provision in the bill, which provides that the clerks and laborers shall be appointed without regard to the civil-service act, but that nothing shall prevent the President from placing such employees in the classified service. Why, it is full of partisanship.

Mr. HOLLIS. I wish to say further that this provision was not put in by a party vote. It was recommended unanimously by the joint committee, composed of Democrats and Republicans. As I recall, there was only one vote against it in the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, and it was not considered as partisan in any of those committees. To waste three or four months until even a laborer can be certified by the Civil Service Commission would certainly delay the effective operation of this law; and, as suggested, the appointing power—the farm-loan board—is nonpartisan. However, the same objection was made to the Federal reserve act, and if it was valid then it is valid now, but not more so.

The first serious investigation of the subject of rural credits resulted in sending abroad in 1913 representatives of the United States and representatives of the various States and Canada. They went together—one called the United States Commission, the other called the American Commission. Those commissions investigated the subject very thoroughly in Egypt and in most of the European countries. They made a very comprehensive report in the shape of evidence and testimony taken, containing a thousand very large pages, as large as a family Bible; and it is very fortunate that that information was secured before the war broke out, as it would be impossible to secure it now. As a result of that investigation, three of the members recommended a bill—Senator FLETCHER, of Florida; Congressman Moss, of Indiana; and Dr. Coulter, then belonging to the Census Department. That bill was known as the Fletcher-Moss bill. It involved the most elemental and fundamental principles of rural credits, and all those principles have been preserved in the present bill; but the present bill has gone on much further than the original bill.

Two years ago, in December, the Banking and Currency Committee, by its chairman, Senator OWEN, appointed a subcommittee on the subject of rural credits. Mr. GLASS, chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, appointed a similar subcommittee. Those subcommittees had joint hearings and conferences for three months, sitting nearly every day and studying this question very, very carefully. The result was the introduction of a bill in both branches of Congress two years ago. The principal advance of that bill over the Fletcher-Moss bill was this: The Fletcher-Moss bill provided for a great number of small banks of small capital, each of which could make loans to the farmers and issue bonds based on those loans as collateral. Of course sporadic instances of this sort would not give much strength, and the bonds probably would not find much of a market. Therefore the joint subcommittees recommended a bill in substantially the form of the present bill, with a farm-loan board to supervise, 12 strong land banks to make loans and to issue bonds, and numerous local associations—as many as the circumstances called for, to represent the farmers in their dealings with the land banks.

A year ago, in March, Congress authorized a joint congressional committee to investigate the subject and report. That committee was made up of three members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, three members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, three members of the Agricultural Committee of the Senate, and three members of the Agricultural Committee of the House. Mr. GLASS was made chairman of the joint committee, and he divided it into two sections—one to consider personal credits, the other to consider land-mortgage credits. The personal-credits division has not yet reported. The land-mortgage division reported the bill which is now before the Senate. I need not emphasize further the nonpartisan character of the deliberations. No charge was made that anything else was attempted; and, as the chairman of that subdivision of the joint committee, I feel under great indebtedness to the Republican members for their very patriotic and useful work on the committee.

Most of us, and especially those of us who were born in New England, have been brought up to think that a mortgage on a farm is more or less of a disgrace. It is hard to realize that the farmer needs quick capital just as much as the average manufacturer or merchant. For instance, a good farmer, intelligent and able-bodied, ought not to be asked to work with cheap instruments, poor tools, no fertilizer, and poor stock, when by borrowing at a fair rate of interest he can double his earning capacity. The amount that he may have to pay in interest may be only a tenth or a twentieth of what that additional money will earn for him. It is just as necessary for a farmer to have capital to carry on operations upon an extended scale as it is for the manufacturer or for the storekeeper.

There are three kinds of capital that are available. In the first place, there are commercial deposits, demand deposits; in the second place, short-time deposits, such as the ordinary savings deposits, found in the ordinary savings bank; and, in the third place, long-term investment capital. I pointed out that the commercial deposits are subject to call, or on very short notice, and therefore ought not to be put into long-term investments. The savings-bank deposit lies midway between the commercial deposit and the long-term investment. The committee believes that short-time deposits properly should go to long-term personal loans or to short-term mortgage loans. The joint committee recommended a savings department for these land banks. Personally I favored it, but the Senate Banking and Currency Committee did not favor it, the idea being to build up a savings department in the land bank and permit the savings department to loan on short-term mortgages, not to exceed five years; but it was feared by some of the other members that that would needlessly complicate the system, and therefore it was stricken out. I need not enlarge on the difficulties of establishing new, without precedent in this country, a comprehensive system of land banks. It is a most difficult subject at best, and I sympathize largely with those who thought that it should be made as little complicated as possible.

As to rates of interest, there has been a good deal of criticism recently because rates of interest have been so high, particularly interest to farmers. But interest is governed mainly by two laws: One the risk and the other the supply of capital. The supply of capital includes also the earning capacity of the money. If the earning capacity is large, there will be a large supply coming in to fill the demand. Now, investigation has shown that where the farmer is charged his highest rates on personal loans, running up to one or two or three hundred per cent a year, the risk is not greater than with the average commercial loan. The farmer pays his debts. Now the reason he is charged so much is that frequently the amount he borrows is very small, and the banker does not want to bother with it, and so he charges a lump sum. A further reason is that the farmer usually borrows in a district where capital is not plentiful, where the earning powers of a bank are very much circumscribed, and in order to meet the overhead charges the bank has to charge a high rate of interest to do business at all. Of that the farmer can not well complain. Investigation has shown, moreover, that in the same State the rate of interest steadily increases the further you get from the commercial center of the State. To take an illustration, in Kansas, for instance, on the eastern side, near Kansas City, the rates are very much lower than on the western side, where you get further away from banking facilities.

Under the present bill it is intended to make every loan absolutely safe to begin with. That eliminates the risk. It is expected that through a Government system the money can be taken from the investor and transferred to the borrower anywhere in the country at a small cost, and therefore that item should be eliminated; but the committee are rational on this subject. It may be that they are mistaken, and it may be that if they had formed one great land bank to cover the whole country, the rate for all the farmers would have been kept high in accordance with the money that is loaned on the least advantageous terms. Therefore it was thought best to divide the country into 12 districts, so that the interest factors might operate independently.

We hope to find that money may be loaned in the South and West just as cheaply as in the North and East. My own opinion is that it will approximate uniformity very closely, just as it does in the Federal reserve banks under the Federal reserve act; but that is something that no man can control by passing a law. We have made the system just as flexible as possible, so as to take advantage of any principles that may work for our benefit.

The farmer has no grievance. He does not come and say, "You have discriminated against me." All he says is this, "Fifty years ago you established national banking associations. You have been catering to the commercial and manufacturing needs of the country. Now, all we ask is that you will furnish a system that will give us the same facilities—have Government banks, have them Government supervised, put them under a farm-loan board, as you have put the national banks under a Federal Reserve Board. Give us the same chance. We will pay what the money is worth if you do not charge us too much for the expenses of the middleman."

That is where the chief disadvantage has come to the farmer. It is through the middleman. There is a table published in the report that accompanies this bill showing the average rates in different parts of the country, showing the straight rate for interest and the commission or other expense. I am told that in many sections of the country the first mortgage is given to the insurance company, or whoever loans the money, and then the middleman takes the second mortgage for half or 1 or 2 or 3 per cent interest for his commission, and that is where the great expense comes. In this bill we have prohibited any commissions or bonuses of any sort. The entire expense and profit must come out of the 1 per cent difference between the amount that the farm-loan bonds carry and the amount at which the money is loaned to the farmer.

Underlying this whole subject of rural credits is the question of cooperation among farmers. That was one of the things that the United States commission found most common in Europe. In Europe, nearly all over the hemisphere, we found all sorts of cooperation. We found cooperative creameries, which we have in great numbers in this country; cooperative buying of farm machinery and fertilizer, and along with that a guarantee that the fertilizer is up to the composition prescribed. In that way the farmer avoids being cheated in what he buys. Then we found cooperative selling, under which the farmer is taught to standardize his product so that it will come to market in attractive shape and command the going market price. Cooperative credit has developed in Europe as we can hardly hope to develop it in this country. It is perfectly easy to have cooperative credit in this country, but we do not need any more laws to enable the farmer to take advantage of it. It is merely a lack of knowledge on his part.

There is a very interesting experiment being conducted with entire success, in the State of Idaho, at a town called Weiser. The merchants in Weiser formed a cooperative association. Every one of them was permitted to join the association if he wished to do so. They appointed a trustee to represent them. Every farmer who desired personal credit went to the trustee and made a statement of what he had. He had so much stock, so much machinery, so much land, all incumbrances stated; he intended to raise such crops, and the trustee decided how big a letter of credit he would give to that farmer. On the back of the letter of credit was a list of the merchants who were willing to give credit under the scheme. The farmer would go to the grocer and get credit for a certain amount, and the grocer would indorse on the back of it how much that was. Then he would go to the hardware man and get his fertilizer, his machinery, and so on. When the letter of credit was entirely exhausted the last man would take it up and turn it over to the trustee. When the first year closed the loans had been made to the farmers at 7 per cent and not a dollar had been lost.

That shows what can be done under methods as they are now if you understand them. It is well known at every bank that you can not get better security than a note signed, say, by 30 farmers. Some farmers have found it easy to get credit in that way to their cost, but it is hoped that under the present bill the farmers would form the local associations and get accustomed to each other and in that way learn to obtain individual personal credit by becoming liable for each other. It is in the hope that farmers will learn to adopt unlimited liability of this nature that the committee has recommended that they be given an opportunity to form their local associations with unlimited liability. They are given their choice. They may have limited liability, in which case the liability is double, as in the case of a national bank, or it may be unlimited. If a substantial number of them will form unlimited associations, they will give a safer mortgage and will be able to place their bonds at a lower rate, and therefore be able to loan to themselves—that is, to the farmers—at a lower rate. It was the opinion of some members of the committee that that would be availed of. Others thought that it would not, but we felt we ought to give each plan a chance and by actual experience determine the question.

Mr. WALSH. Let me make an inquiry of the Senator. The farm-loan bonds, of course, secured by these two different classes of securities, are differentiated in some way?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes. The land banks have two departments. One is the limited department, the other the unlimited department. When a bank wants to make an issue of bonds it must put up the mortgages of one class, either limited or unlimited, and bonds are so issued, and will be known as farm-loan bonds limited or farm-loan bonds unlimited, the unlimited bonds selling at a lower rate of interest.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator express his own view as to which of these systems will ultimately prevail, or is it his opinion that they would run together?

Mr. HOLLIS. My opinion is that they will always run along side by side as they do in the different countries in Europe. Joint stock mortgage banks and associations of limited liability and associations of unlimited liablity go along together. They fulfill their own special functions. Some farmers would never go into unlimited liability associations. Others would be glad to if they knew the other members well. We provide in the bill that one-fifth of the members of the unlimited liability association can blackball, so to speak, any member who wants to come in. They control that.

Then we have another provision of the bill, and it is the joint stock bank run by private capital and in the private interest.

Mr. HUGHES. How does a man get out of the unlimited liability association?

Mr. HOLLIS. Unless he is willing to stand on the proposition that he must get one-fifth of the members to join him, he would be estopped in a case of that kind. Therefore he should be very careful that he does not go into an association unless all the members are satisfactory to him. It does not look as if an American would go into it, but they have been organized in Europe, and that accounts for the low rate of interest they get in Europe, particularly in Germany.

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator passes to that, I do not quite understand him there. It seems to me that a man having once gone in ought to be at liberty to draw out so far as future liabilities are concerned whenever he wants to. Of course, he can not escape responsibility for past obligations.

Mr. HOLLIS. All mortgages must run for at least five years. That is for the reason that there are considerable overhead expenses. Every mortgage issued must therefore run at least five years. After five years a man may cease to be a member of an individual unlimited liability association by paying up his loan and withdrawing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. He can not get out until he pays his loan.

Mr. HOLLIS. He must pay his loan.

As to the reasons for having a joint-stock land bank the Government charters national banks which are purely of a joint-stock character. The typical national bank, all national banks, in fact, are capitalized by individuals, and they are run to make a profit. There seems to be no reason why the Government should not afford to those who wish to invest in a mortgage bank the same facilities now afforded to those who wish to invest in a commercial bank. We have therefore provided that private joint-stock land banks can be started with a capital of not less than $250,000, to loan to farmers and to issue bonds subject to the approval of the farm-loan board. In States having a population exceeding 3,000,000 the capital must be $500,000.

There is good reason for this. It may be that a farmer will not want to assume any individual liability for the sake of borrowing money. It may be that they will not be willing to contribute 5 per cent of his loan to the capital stock. It may be that farmers will not want to subject themselves to the scrutiny that is involved in cooperative association. Therefore we provide that a private joint-stock land bank may be organized and may make loans to farmers without requiring them to contribute to the capital or to assume individual liability. Banks of that character exist all over Europe side by side with cooperative banks. There seems to be a field for both.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the Senator state the amount of the capital?

Mr. HOLLIS. It is to be not less than $250,000 for joint-stock banks. That is for the reason that mortgage banks to issue bonds ought to have a large capital in order to be entitled to the confidence of the investing public. They are limited in the amount of bonds they issue to fifteen times the amount of capital stock, so that there is always a guarantee fund there of one-fifteenth of the liability on the bonds. To many people it seems unnecessary and harsh that a man who wants to borrow must first take stock in an association.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator passes to that, let me ask him what security will there be for the bonds issued by the joint-stock bank he has just described?

Mr. HOLLIS. Exactly the same security. They must, in the first place, have a guarantee fund of one-fifteenth of the amount of the liability. That is the guarantee fund. They can only loan on farm lands in a State in which they are chartered or in an adjoining State, and the appraised value must be at least double the amount of the loan. Their profits and expenses are limited to the 1 per cent margin. Just like the Federal banks. They are supervised and examined in just the same way, and they will be constantly under the supervision of the farm-loan board.

Mr. SIMMONS. The regional banks, so to speak, do not indorse.

Mr. HOLLIS. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. As to the others?

Mr. HOLLIS. Not at all. Each joint-stock land bank must stand on its own feet and rise or fall according to the banking ability and good judgment of the directors.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state how the loans are inspected for these private joint-stock banks?

Mr. HOLLIS. The joint-stock bank, in order to make a loan, must apply to the farm-loan board for the services of a land-bank appraiser, who is a Government official. This land-bank appraiser must appraise the land and make a regular report on it, and the loan can only be made for one-half the appraised value. The joint-stock bank has to pay for the services of the official appraiser, and the same appraiser is used by the cooperative banks, and they also have to pay for his services.

If we could permit a mortgage institution to loan to the farmers and take mortgages, and then put up those mortgages as security for an issue of farm-land bonds, without any guaranty fund, it would be very simple and easy; but it would not work, because, in spite of the greatest care, there are bound to be bad loans. Some man will have bad luck; his farm will be washed into the river; there are certain to be breakdowns; and it is the same with mortgages. For that reason it is absolutely essential to have a guaranty fund to furnish a margin. There seems to be a consensus of opinion in running savings banks or mortgage institutions that there should be a guaranty fund of 5 per cent of the obligations of the institution, and that ratio has been adopted in this bill.

Now, how to get it. There are four and a half billions of dollars of loans on farm lands in the United States. A very large part of that amount would be refunded under this system if it is a success. Not only that, but there will be a great many more loans issued where the farmers can not get accommodation now. Therefore we are likely to have four or five billion dollars in mortgage loans. If we were to raise all the capital by Government contribution or by subscription from individuals we would have to have a twentieth for the capital stock of our land bank—$250,000,000—and that is an enormous amount. I for one should not favor having the Government put up all that capital stock. There is only one way to get it, and that is to have the farmers who get the benefit of the system contribute themselves, and it is not so hard on them when the matter is considered. To begin with, we assume that a farmer wants to borrow $2,000. He is obliged to put up $100 in order to take $100 worth of stock of the farm-loan association. The farmer who can not get $100 in order to borrow $2,000 is not the sort of man whom it will be safe to have in our system. Any farmer who is fit to borrow $2,000 can get $100 somewhere, and that is an indication of the character of the man—some test of whether he is a good man to have in this cooperative system. But if he has not $100 himself and must borrow, as quickly as he gets his $2,000 he can repay it. The bill so provides. Then he has an investment of $100 in the system, and if there are earnings, as we expect there will be, he will get his regular dividends. When the loan is fully paid, his stock is paid back to him in full and he gets the cash.

None of the committees that have worked on this bill have been able to devise any other plan for raising a guarantee fund except this, that each man who wishes to borrow must contribute 5 per cent of the face of his loan toward the stock of the local association. The local association turns the money over to the land bank and takes an equal amount of stock in the land bank. The farmers contribute all the earnings and get all the profits. The local association owns the stock in the land bank, the land bank pays all its earnings to the loan association, and the loan association distributes the profits to the farmers.

Mr. STONE. And he must loan the bank $100.

Mr. HOLLIS. Not exactly. He contributes $100 to the stock of the bank, and receives $2,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to inquire if that provision applies to private associations?

Mr. HOLLIS. No, not at all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Cooperative?

Mr. HOLLIS. To the cooperative banks only. But many farmers will wish to avail themselves of the ordinary method, and they will go to a joint-stock land bank and get the loan. I am inclined to think the joint-stock land bank will charge a considerably higher rate of interest than the cooperative system. If so, the thing will correct itself because when the farmer sees his neighbor or his cousin is getting a lower rate by joining a cooperative association he will join a cooperative association.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator a question which is somewhat fundamental yet I think it is perhaps relevant at this particular point. The thing which has been difficult for me to work out in my mind is how this bill will result in the farmer realizing on his security at a lower rate of interest than he must now pay. There is plenty of money now, there is no difficulty about the money, but the difficulty has been that the farmer has never been able to get the man who had the money to look upon farm securitiy with the same favor that the man who has the money looks upon other kind of security, railroad securities and such as that. Unless the farmers join and make an entire group of farmers the basis of security, unless there is practically an unlimited liability in which all the securities which they have joined is put up as a protection for the money loaned, how is this going to work a cheaper rate of interest? Does it not all result in the proposition as to whether or not they will go into this proposition and make one liable for all and all liable for one?

Mr. HOLLIS. In the first place, investigation has shown that the man who loans money originally, who actually puts the cash in that gets to the farmer, does receive in the main a low rate of interest now, and that the increased interest comes in the commission and the charges that are placed on the farm loan by the agent who places the loan under the second-mortgage system that I have already outlined. Then there will be the inertia of capital. I will explain it. A man in the East with money to loan has to employ an agent. It is a good deal of bother to find a reliable agent in the West. He has to place his loan through him, and it is right to do that, whereas if we have a Government system, with all the expense and profit limited by statute to 1 per cent, and it can not be more than that, the Government supervises it, so that a man can step into any bank and buy the farm-loan bonds carrying 4 per cent and guaranteed in the way I have indicated. He has a security that he knows his Government supervises. His bonds rest on the security of millions and millions of mortgages, and are insured in a country-wide system, and he knows they are strong.

As suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], he does not buy the individual loan, merely. He merely takes his share of an enormous amount of loans based on an enormous amount of mortgages.

Mr. BORAH. That is true, but those of us in the West have had some experience with what is in a sense a similar proposition. For instance, farmers have gone in together and voted bonds upon an entire territory—say, 250,000 or 300,000 acres—and issued bonds upon that for the purpose of purchasing a large irrigation enterprise, and so forth. Now, notwithstanding the fact I have in mind about that particular enterprise, notwithstanding those bonds were voted upon, the body of land irrigated, and fertile, of exceptional capacity for production, we have never been able to satisfy the eastern purchaser that that is as good a security to him as some railroad enterprise which has its bonds to sell, and while the railroad enterprise will get its money at 4 and 5 per cent the mortgage based upon the farm will not command that rate.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is undoubtedly for the reason that value of the land there depends upon the success of a single project If that one project does not turn out well, if the farmers are not able to market their crops, the value is gone. Under our system three, four, five, or six States are all in one great district, and all the mortgages in that district are up for collateral security for the bonds. If there is a drought in one place, there is not likely to be a drought everywhere. If one project fails, it is not likely that all will fail. They get a much broader insurance. That is the result in Germany under the landschaft system which has been discussed and which will be much more discussed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is there not another reason why the instance of the Senator from Idaho is not a parallel case? Irrigation is to some extent experimental. Some projects have failed, and there is no governmental system provided for inspecting the particular project the Senator has in mind, whereas this bill does provide a governmental system of inspection.

Mr. BORAH. There was nothing for the Government to inspect except the real estate which was supposed to be mortgaged for about one-tenth of its value. It was the land which had been under irrigation. The water right had been passed upon by the courts, the title had been settled by the courts. It was adjudicated and determined that the water right belonged to this land and to no other land, and it had been under irrigation for some 40 years. There was no possible reason why it should be impeached for want of title, and there was nothing to inspect in it, because the mortgage covered the entire group of lands and covered the water also. Any business man who would have gone there would have passed upon it and been better satisfied than if some agent had passed upon it.

Mr. HOLLIS. There is a lurking fear underneath any scheme that is going on a long way off that has resulted in keeping investors from going to remote places. That is a part of the inertia of capital. There is no doubt about that, and it is because of this realization that we have not put the Nation into one great land district, because we believe that the rate of interest would have a tendency to go to the highest point throughout the whole system.

It may not work out so; the committee hopes it will not; but no one has yet succeeded in putting the natural laws relating to interest entirely at defiance. I am more optimistic on that than are many other members of the committee.

I was about to illustrate by the success of the landschaft system in Germany. The landschaft is not an organization; it is a district which embraces a whole province. There is no guaranty fund until the landschaft has been in existence long enough to build up a reserve. Each farmer who wants to borrow produces his mortgage to the officers of the landschaft; he states the rate of interest he wants the mortgage to carry and he receives from the landschaft a bond based on that mortgage which he must sell. If it carries a low rate of interest, it will carry a low price; he will have to sell it at less than 100 cents on the dollar. That is all left to him.

There have been cases of losses in those loans, though they have been rather rare, because they are Government supervised, and, to take up the slack, there is power to levy an assessment on every other piece of land in the whole Province. That is why it is not possible for the United States Government to put the landschaft into operation, because the United States Government has no right to impose on any piece of land that it does not actually own a liability for assessment to pay for losses. But the landschaft has worked out in operation so successfully that its bonds carry a higher rate of interest than the Government bonds whenever there is a war or stress of any kind. That, in a way, answers what the Senator says. When you have a broad insurance base on productive lands, the experience of other countries shows that you can get plenty of money at a low rate of interest.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. My observation is that the two great sources for farm loans in our part of the country are, first, the savings banks, and, second, the insurance companies. The Senator from New Hampshire has already spoken about the feature of the savings bank. What is his opinion as to the possibility of reaching the accumulation of insurance companies through his system? In other words, will the insurance companies that are compelled to earn a certain rate of interest in order to preserve their solvency invest their money in the land-bank bonds?

Mr. HOLLIS. The committee believes that they will. Every insurance company that invests in farm mortgages has to have an expensive department; they have to look after them very carefully. We took the testimony of some of the insurance experts. One of them, I recall, stated that his company had loaned 30 per cent of their assets on farm mortgages and had never lost a dollar, the business had been conducted so carefully. If we can do it as carefully as that—and it seems to me that we ought to—then, by doing the mortgage business of the country, and having the information about every section, knowing what section is good and what section is not so good, we ought to be able to do the business cheaper than the insurance companies can do it for themselves, and thereby get their business.

We have another advantage which the committee believes will settle the matter. The bill provides that these farm-loan bonds shall be tax exempt. In many localities of this country that will determine the scale in favor of our farm-loan bonds over mortgages taken by the insurance companies on which they will have to pay taxes.

Mr. POMERENE. And, Mr. President, the farmers in this way will be relieved from the payment of the large commissions which are paid to the representatives of the insurance companies all the while.

Mr. HOLLIS. I believe it is a fact that the testimony showed that even insurance companies had to pay some commissions.

Mr. POMERENE. And very large ones, too.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire stated that farm-loan bonds were to bear 4 per cent interest, I think?

Mr. HOLLIS. We hope they will, but they can not bear to exceed 5 per cent. Under the bill, if they can not borrow money at 5 per cent they can not borrow at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. My inquiry was intended to develop this question: Whether the insurance companies would loan their money at 4 per cent?

Mr. HOLLIS. Some of them thought they would and some thought they would not. That was our experience. I believe that, if tax exempt, they will loan their money at 4 per cent, and be very glad to do so.

Mr. CUMMINS. Most of them are tax exempt now, are they not?

Mr. HOLLIS. I think not.

Mr. CUMMINS. Are they not permitted to set off their liabilities against their assets, so that the real taxable portion of their property is rather small?

Mr. HOLLIS. I should be very much surprised if every State that has an insurance company within its borders does not succeed in getting a very large tax out of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. One more question. Who fixes the interest that the land-bank bonds shall bear?

Mr. HOLLIS. The farm loan board has supervisory control over that, just as the Federal Reserve Board has in cases under its jurisdiction. The land banks themselves, through their board of directors, would probably be allowed a pretty free hand in that regard.

Mr. CUMMINS. Who fixes the rate of interest that the mortgages shall bear? Is that fixed by agreement between the borrower and the land bank?

Mr. HOLLIS. The rate of interest fixed by the farm loan board is determined by the market; that fixes the maximum which can be charged to a farmer, for you can not charge a farmer more than 1 per cent in excess of the rate carried by the current issue of farm-loan bonds.

Mr. CUMMINS. But are all of the mortgages in a certain territory to bear the same rate of interest?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Without regard to the extent or size of the mortgage?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; there must be uniformity.

Mr. CUMMINS. So that all the mortgages that will be deposited as a basis for a particular issue of bonds would bear the same rate of interest?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. And does the rate of interest which the mortgages bear determine in any degree the rate of interest which the bonds shall bear?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; that rate must be determined by the market that takes the bonds. If the market should take the bonds at 4 per cent, well and good; if they did not take them at less than 4½ per cent, then the farmer has got to pay 5½ per cent. If the bonds sell at 5 per cent, the farmer will pay 6 per cent. The farm-loan board conducts its business and makes its earnings out of a margin of 1 per cent. In Europe they do it on a margin of one-third of 1 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Can the bonds be issued at 3½ per cent and the mortgages bear 5½ per cent?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; there can not be a difference of more than 1 per cent between the two. There may be a less difference, but not a greater difference; that is true as to all the mortgages and all the bonds.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the bonds sold can not carry a rate of over 5 per cent?

Mr. HOLLIS. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So that the farmer can not be charged more than 6 per cent?

Mr. HOLLIS. They can not do business beyond that rate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the rate may be as much less than that as it can be made?

Mr. HOLLIS. As much less as the traffic will bear.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But unless the land banks can carry the farmer at 6 per cent they can not do business?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is it exactly.

Mr. THOMPSON. At what rate does the amortization proceed?

Mr. HOLLIS. Obviously, the amount of amortization depends upon the length of time that the loan will run, because if you pay in 1 per cent on a loan that bears a 5 per cent rate it will take 36 years for it to pay out. If you pay in 2 per cent a year it will pay out in something like 22 years. Therefore, the amount that a farmer pays in each year depends entirely on the length of time his loan runs.

Mr. THOMPSON. But the amortization may be completed in a shorter time, if the farmer so desires, by paying a higher rate?

Mr. HOLLIS. Oh, yes; if the farmer wants to pay out in five years he would have to pay approximately 12 per cent a year for the amortization payment, of course.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question regarding the rate of interest. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to say a few minutes ago that the rates of interest were governed wholly by the supply of money; that is, by the opportunities for borrowing money.

Mr. HOLLIS. No; I did not mean to say that. I meant to say—and I think I did say—that there are three factors: First, risk; second, the earning power of money in that particular locality; and, third, the supply of capital, which depends largely on the earning power.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes; but what about the security? The security offered in each individual case has a bearing upon that question.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is the same thing as risk.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Well, I understood the Senator to say that the rate would be the same, for instance, in eastern Kansas and western Kansas, other conditions being the same.

Mr. HOLLIS. No. At present the rates are very different in eastern Kansas and western Kansas, but with absolutely safe loans——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Senator will allow me to finish—with absolutely safe loans in both places, under a mortgage, and where the Goverment furnishes the machinery to bring them in contact, the rates ought to approximate—I do not believe they will ever quite come together; but they ought very nearly to approximate.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I desire to ask the Senator if he does not understand that experience has shown that the insurance companies of the country confine their loans in Kansas very largely to the eastern half of the State, rather than to the western half of the State?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is because they find that they are safer there.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. They are safer there because there is a greater rainfall in that locality.

Mr. HOLLIS. But with the same degree of safety, you will eliminate that risk.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. But if there is not an equality of security the mortgage on land in the western part of the State must of necessity bear a much higher rate of interest because of the increased risk.

Mr. HOLLIS. That would be true to some degree, but the land would be worth something, and that would be governed by the amount that the land bank would loan on the land.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Then, I understand the Senator to say that the land bank in fixing the rate would take into consideration the question of the quality of the land and the risk involved?

Mr. HOLLIS. It certainly must; that can not be avoided.

Now, the amortization payments are very important, because they persuade the farmer to pay up his loan at some time. I have no doubt some of us have had the experience that we did not save any money until we took out life insurance. Where a man has to meet a fixed payment at a certain time he will get the money in some way. In my part of the country the farmer can borrow money on his farm, if he can borrow at all, at 5 per cent, but he has to give a demand note, so that the mortgage is likely to be foreclosed at any time. That makes him uneasy. Then he is ashamed to go in and offer to pay $10 or $20 when he owes $2,000, and he will not do that; he will wait until he can pay $200 or $300, and that time never comes.

The experience in Europe is that if the loan is amortized, so that the farmer has to pay in a little every six months, he will complete the payment at the end of the term; and in Europe mortgages run for as long a term as 75 or 80 years. I think there are some amortization payments of only a quarter of 1 per cent a year, which would enable the borrower to pay out in something under a hundred years. It is in order to encourage the farmer not only to get his money at a low rate and to use it for productive purposes, but at some time to pay off his loan that this system is devised.

As to the purposes for which loans can be made, it is not proposed under this bill to allow a farmer to borrow money to pay his living expenses; he can only borrow to purchase land or to buy stock or machinery or equipment for his farm, or to erect buildings, to improve his farm in some such way as building drains or roads or fences or clearing up the land, or to pay existing indebtedness.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. May I inquire of the Senator if it is not true that a man can only borrow from the proposed land bank by giving a mortgage upon his land?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. No matter what other security he may have?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. In order to obtain any money he must mortgage his farm?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; that is for the reason that, in order to get money at the lowest rate, he must give the best security there is, and that is a first mortgage on productive land. If it is not land that is capable of being cleared so as to produce crops and help pay up the loan it can not come in under this system.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator this question: Suppose that one of these loan associations is formed, say in my State, which is very far on the western border, and the farmers put up their mortgages, and bonds are issued, and so forth, and the bonds are put in the eastern market; and suppose a farm-loan association in the State of Iowa, or a State farther East, a better settled State, an older community, does the same thing, and puts its bonds in the eastern market; does the Senator doubt that the bond purchaser would take the Iowa bonds at a lower rate of interest rather than bonds secured by mortgages on the less-developed portion of the country?

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I am inclined to think that the rate would be a little lower, but a very little lower, for this reason: All the farm-loan bonds issued by any bank are guaranteed by all the other banks. This system is helped into being by the Government; the Government contributes the capital to the land banks, and in return for that it was thought nothing more than fair that every land bank should become responsible for the bonds of all the other banks. Therefore, relying on the capital and resources of these land banks, the bonds ought to sell the same; but I agree with the Senator that in some remote parts of the country it is impossible to force interest rates to exactly the same level as they are elsewhere. I think they will approximate the same level; I hope so, at any rate.

Mr. BORAH. I entertain the opinion that without Government aid, distinct and substantial, we will never get that uniformity of treatment which the country should have, and neither will we get that low interest rate which is necessary for the man who is acquiring a farm or developing a farm to have.

Now, has the Senator considered the Government passing upon these securities and guaranteeing these bonds, something on the same principle as the Government stands behind the notes issued by the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. HOLLIS. The two cases are entirely different. The Senator now refers to the Federal reserve notes.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. HOLLIS. They are Government obligations; there is no practical guaranty about them; they are promises of the Government to pay. The Government merely loans them on security to the Federal reserve banks, and the Federal reserve banks have to put up back of them short-term notes that are based on actual commercial transactions, and they have in addition to put 40 per cent of gold back of them before they can issue them. The Government believes that sufficient advantage is secured to the country by putting currency of that kind in circulation, so that it is willing to do it and run the risk. Therefore I have insisted that it is fair in this case that the Government should put itself back of this system to a reasonable extent, as it will do if this bill passes. I may say that this bill is much more radical in that regard than the bill which has been reported by the House Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BORAH. I do not quite agree with the Senator as to the Federal reserve notes. But to what extent does the Government put itself back of the land banks other than in the way of supervision and the checking up of the bond transactions?

Mr. HOLLIS. In the first place the Government furnishes $6,000,000 of capital to start these 12 land banks. I think, of course, that is a very important thing, because in order to get farmers to join something you have got to have something for them to join. You can not wait for a system to spring up spontaneously, and so it is that the Government pays all salaries and expenses of the farm-loan system; it pays the salaries of the special examiners who investigate the mortgages before bonds are allowed to be issued, and the Government exempts from the income-tax law and from all Federal, State, and local taxes the capital stock of the Federal land banks—not of the joint-stock land banks—and the mortgages and the bonds. The Government under this bill will advance to a land bank money if it gets in temporary difficulty just as it advances the money to commercial banks that get into difficulty by placing Government deposits in certain localities, as it has done repeatedly. Now, to that extent the Government gets back of this system.

Mr. BORAH. Does not the bill contemplate the Government finally securing a return of its $6,000,000 and retiring from the business? Does not the bill contemplate that ultimately the Government is to have no investment?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes, it does; and I think that is very desirable. In Europe in many instances where the Government has furnished the capital stock in the first place the associations have voluntarily paid the money back, because they would rather do so, and get along on their own feet than to be under Government supervision and control.

This bill provides that after the contributions from the local associations, 5 per cent of the amount borrowed, equals $500,000, thereafter 25 per cent of all such increase shall be paid back to the Government until the Government is entirely repaid. The Government gets no dividends and no interest at all on the money that it employs for this purpose.

Now, this question of how much Government aid should be given is a question of some judgment on the facts stated. The Senator and I might agree pretty well, and we might not. I rather think we would agree pretty well, more so than I might agree with some one more conservative; but we have to look at a great many different things, and my judgment is that this bill goes as far in that direction as it is safe to go, because the scope of this bill is so enormous, and the billions of money that might become a burden on the Government would be so serious a load. Now, that does not settle it, but it gives my view.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator as to the extent to which the bill goes. I presume it goes as far also as it could go and be reasonably certain of being passed.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am rather inclined to think so. Therefore I am very well satisfied with what I have to take.

Of course, the center of the system, so far as safety is concerned, rests on the carefulness with which the appraisal is made. The local association, of course, is interested in getting cheap money for its members—that is, for the borrowing farmers in the vicinity. There is a temptation to increase the values in that locality and one fellow will help the other fellow get a large loan. Therefore we provide that the recommendation of the loan committee of the local association must be unanimous and in writing. Then the report comes up to the land bank. The land bank also represents the local associations. It has five directors, three of whom are elected by the local associations and two appointed by the farm-loan board. Therefore we put in a Government official at that point to make sure that there is a safe appraisal. He is appointed by the farm-loan board. His services are paid for by the land banks, for he performs an official function, and he goes to every piece of land and examines it himself and passes upon it; and these land-bank appraisers ought to become very expert.

The land bank has made the mortgage, but the mortgage is not of its greatest value in the land bank unless it is permitted to put it up as part security for an issue of farm-loan bonds. Therefore, the land bank, having got a mortgage on its hands through its own efforts, has to run one more gauntlet before it can put that mortgage up for an issue of farm-loan bonds. When it wants to issue farm-loan bonds, it turns over to the registrar of the district, who is a Government officer, the mortgages that it proposes to put up as collateral. The registrar looks them over and checks them up and sees that they are all there. Then he refers the application to the farm-loan board. The farm-loan board must then refer those mortgages to a special examiner, and the special examiner will look the mortgages over and make such investigation as the farm-loan board thinks is necessary to assure itself that it is safe to allow farm-loan bonds to be issued. The registrar acts as trustee for all parties concerned. He takes the securities and actually keeps them in his hands.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What is the subdivision which the registrar represents?

Mr. HOLLIS. There is a registrar in each land-bank district. There are to be 12 districts, or not less than 12. There may be more, if the farm-loan board thinks it is wise to have more. My judgment is that there never will be more than 12. Those districts are to be carved out of the continental United States with regard to the farm-loan needs of the districts—not population, nor commercial activity, but farm-loan needs. My own opinion would be that they would not conform very closely to the Federal reserve districts. For instance, instead of New England having one, I should expect that New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey, and Maryland would probably be all in one district. That would make them more frequent in the West and South, where they are more needed. Each registrar has his own district to look after. He acts as trustee for all parties interested.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator state whether the bonds issued by the joint-stock banks are exempt from taxation as the bonds of the cooperative banks are?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes. The mortgages and the bonds are exempt in each instance; and the Senator knows that there is very good reason for that, because experience shows that the farmer has to pay all the taxes that are levied on the system. Now, we do not exempt from taxation the capital stock of the private banks. They have to pay on them just as national banking associations do; but if we permitted these mortgages and bonds to be taxed, the farmer would be paying three taxes. He would have to pay on his farm; then the land bank would make him pay in his interest rate enough to pay the taxes on the mortgage, and then the investor who furnishes the money in the first place would have to charge enough in his interest rate to pay the taxes he would have to pay on the bonds. Therefore the farmer would have to be paying three interest rates. Moreover, there is a better reason than that, possibly, and that is that if the States have a right to tax, they have a right to destroy; and if there should arise a jealousy of these Federal land banks in any State, they could tax them, if we did not provide otherwise, so that they would have to go out of existence.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. THOMPSON. What provision is made for the payment of the salaries of these registrars and other officials? Are they paid by the Federal Government, or is the 1 per cent the Senator speaks of to take care of that?

Mr. HOLLIS. The Government pays the farm-loan boards' salaries and expenses. It pays the registrars' salaries and the special examiners' salaries; but the banks themselves have to pay the salary of the land-bank appraiser, and he will be a much more numerous citizen than anybody else. It seems that there is no other way to provide that very well, because we do not want to have the Government pay for the services of the land-bank appraiser when he is working for the private bank; and therefore we charge the private bank and also the cooperative bank for his services.

The assistance to be obtained from the borrowers is a very important part of the plan. Wherever you have to go into a locality and pay for everything that is done, it is expensive; but the farmers, in order to obtain low-interest rates, join the local association, and then they undertake to do for nothing this appraising and the ordinary work of running the local association. They are called associations because they are not banks. A bank, as we all know, is an institution to receive deposits, loan money, and transmit funds, and these are not banks. They will not have any money on hand. They will keep their deposits in the land bank. They are merely loaning associations, quite comparable to the building and loan associations that are common in our larger cities. They need not keep open for banking hours. After they once get started they probably will not have to meet oftener than once in two or three weeks, or possibly months. They can have their office in an insurance agent's office. The local insurance agent or some such man would probably be the secretary-treasurer, and do nearly all the work. He could do it quite inexpensively, because it would not take very much of his time.

It is feared that in some parts of the country the farmers will be slow to organize local associations and joint-stock banks may not start. We have therefore provided that in districts where local associations do not form within a year the farm-loan board may permit loans to be made through existing banks under Federal or State charters. The banks will then act as agents. If a farmer wants to borrow he will go to a bank and be required to take his 5 per cent of stock in the land bank itself. The bank making the loan, as agent for the land bank, will be required to indorse in place of the loan association, and they will get not to exceed half of 1 per cent to pay them for doing so. You see, they embark none of their capital in the enterprise, so that they can afford to do it for the expense of the transaction and a little profit.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. BRADY. What becomes of the 5 per cent of stock which the farmer subscribes for at the time he makes this loan when he pays off the loan? I should like to have the Senator explain that to me a little more fully.

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly. When the loan is paid off the farmer gets his money back in full, 100 per cent, when the stock is retired. As quickly as the farmer ceases to be a contributor he ceases to be a sharer in the earnings. That is entirely right; and the land bank is given authority to retire that stock even faster. If it has more capital than is actually earning, it can retire it faster, and it ought to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And in the meantime, if it has made anything, he gets his part of the profits on it?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; he gets his share of the profit, in exact proportion to the amount he has contributed toward the earnings.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So that, instead of paying 5 per cent commission to somebody to get him a loan, he makes an investment of 5 per cent, on which he gets the interest until he pays off his loan, and then he gets his money back?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is it exactly. That is admirably stated.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, what is to become of these mortgages in case of a transfer of the realty? I was thinking whether or not it would lay an embargo on the free transfer of the real estate covered by those mortgages.

Mr. HOLLIS. No; it is just as it is now. If a farmer sells his farm, the land bank may accept the new purchaser in his stead, if they care to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But suppose he wants a clear title without going into the system at all, can he pay this mortgage as I could pay a private one when due?

Mr. HOLLIS. He can pay it after five years. As I have explained, the overhead charges of making the loan are rather large, and it seems fair to those who borrow on long term that they should be required to give us five years' earnings on it. At any rate, that is the European system, and there did not seem to be any reason to change it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Suppose the capital of one of those banks becomes impaired, and it is necessary to levy an assessment on the stockholders, have you provided for that?

Mr. HOLLIS. Of which banks? One of the land banks?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Any of them. Suppose any of them fails to pay expenses.

Mr. HOLLIS. Any of the land banks?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. HOLLIS. If one of the land banks impairs its capital so that it is insolvent it will have to be wound up and go out of business. That is the idea of the committee. If, with all the aid that is given, they can not go along without failing, we think they should be wound up and ended.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire further yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. BRADY. What liability would there be on the 5 per cent of stock that the farmer takes at the time he makes his loan?

Mr. HOLLIS. The farmer may take it with either double liability, like a national bank, or unlimited liability. If he goes in on the unlimited-liability basis he would naturally expect to get his loan at rather lower rates of interest, and we hope it will work out in that way. He may assume either that he cares to assume.

Mr. BRADY. And at the time he makes his loan he has the privilege of electing whether he will take the unlimited liability or the double liability?

Mr. HOLLIS. It is not quite that. The associations must be organized on one plan or the other, and according as he joins one association or the other he will assume double liability or unlimited liability, but that is determined when he goes in.

Mr. BRADY. The association could determine that when it organizes?

Mr. HOLLIS. When the association gets its charter it takes it on either the double-liability or the unlimited-liability plan.

Mr. BRADY. And as a matter of fact the farmer would not have to go into the association if he did not like the plan under which it was organized?

Mr. HOLLIS. Oh, not at all; he need not go in at all. He would probably look around for one of the joint-stock banks, then.

Mr. BRADY. So he has the privilege of saying whether he shall accept the double liability or the unlimited liability?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; that is true.

The individual liability that the farmer assumes serves two objects. It makes the loan safer; it makes the bonds safer to the investor, and it also insures the interest of the farmer in the system, so that he will see that bad loans are not made. He will be anxious to see that everything is run right and the association stays solvent, so that he will not have to pay up. That is one of the objects of the plan.

The plan has been criticized because it is cumbersome and complicated and because the bill is long. The bill is 72 pages long. The bill providing for a delegate from the District of Columbia, which has been recently reported by the District Commitee. is 50 pages long, and on that basis this bill ought to be 1,000 pages long. But the bill is not really long. It is as long as it is in order to make the operation simple and certain. It is not cumbersome. There could not be anything simpler than this bill. You want Federal supervision, and you would not have a board of less than five. You must have banking brains somewhere in order to run a banking system and to make safe loans intelligently, and that is run by five directors of each land bank. The land bank makes the loans. In order to get local touch it makes them through local associations that know the farmer and the circumstances. Now, if a farmer in my county wants to form an association and get nine other farmers to join with him, they send to the land bank, wherever it is, and get a charter, and then they are entitled to borrow from the land bank. It is very simple. The costs are made as low as it is possible to make them and have safety.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Under the bill as it is now reported you do not require a land bank in each State?

Mr. HOLLIS. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You do not require now a separate organization in each State?

Mr. HOLLIS. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is one land bank now for the district?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the farmer, or the local association, deals directly with that land bank?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And that land bank is supervised by this Government board, which has no interest in the bank except, as Government officers, to see that it does business wisely and intelligently and that the benefits of the scheme reach to the farmers and borrowers?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is it exactly.

There are, of course, two schools of thought on this subject. One believes that the Government ought not to "butt into" the land-mortgage field at all; that it ought to stay out, and leave it entirely to private enterprise. I should agree to that if the farmers all over the country were getting sufficient accommodation at a low rate of interest. I would not have the Government do it just for the sake of having the Government do it; but there is a need for it, and therefore I believe the Government should do it.

The other extreme is to have the Government loan public money directly to the farmer on the security of his farm, and then have the Government borrow money on its bonds. My objection to that is that in the first place, as I have stated, it would involve the Government in an enormous indebtedness that would run into the billions, and it does not seem right to do that for one class of citizens. If you do it for the farmers, the mechanics would ask for it next, and then all of us would ask for it, and the result would be that the Government would be furnishing money cheaply, and it would probably never be foreclosing, which would break down the system. In the early part of the last century, as I recall, the Government loaned a lot of money to the States. It has never collected any of it. The States have never paid it back. And a political party that would undertake to foreclose on a thousand farmers, through the farm-loan board or through any other board, preceding a campaign, would stand very little chance of staying in office. I do not think that is practicable, but I do not want to quarrel with those who believe it is. It merely means that they are on the other extreme, and they are doubtless honest and intelligent in their views. I do not believe that plan will commend itself to the Congress.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has devoted the most of his time to discussing the farmers' associations and their connection with the land banks which the bill creates. The Senator has not given quite as much time to the discussion of the connection of the joint-stock land banks for which this bill provides. I want to suggest to the Senator that it seems to me from his statement—I may be mistaken about it—that the connection between these joint-stock land banks and the land banks is very, very slight.

Mr. HOLLIS. There is no connection whatever.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, we can not hear on this side of the Chamber what is being said.

Mr. SIMMONS. I said that it seemed to me, from the Senator's statement, that the connection between these joint-stock associations and the land banks was very, very slight; that the Government, through the banks, had very little to do with them; and under the system he has outlined they are not very much more than purely private institutions.

Mr. HOLLIS. They are no more than that. I will go over it and make it plain. It is very easy to do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would like to have the Senator give attention to that point and make a more elaborate explanation of it. first, as to the interest. I understood the Senator to state that the associations fix their own rate of interest. I also understand that the bonds they may issue based upon the land mortgages as collateral will have no security behind them except the mortgage and the liability of this private association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the rural credits bill, and that its consideration may be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate bill 2986, the rural credits bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. The bonds that may be issued by these joint-stock associations will have no security except that of the land and the liability of the association itself.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; and the capital. That is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the capital. But there will be that much.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. And that is about as much as the loan-association bonds would have but for the indorsement of these 12 banks. Now, would it be feasible to admit these private associations to a closer connection of the bank by permitting them to take stock in the bank at the rate of 5 per cent upon each loan, just as is provided with reference to the loan associations, upon their becoming members of it and contributing to this fund to the same extent as the loan association, to become responsible for their bonds, and as a result of that responsibility prescribe a maximum rate of interest that they may charge, just as you prescribe in the case of a loan through the farmers' association?

If the Senator will pardon me, I somewhat agree with him that it is possible that this private association may run along with the other; but, not only that, it may absorb it, and most of the business may be done through that. I think it is possible to provide in this bill so as to limit the rate of interest that those private institutions may charge, and by increasing the security for the bonds they may issue you would provide a very strong system.

Mr. HOLLIS. The fundamental difficulty in permitting the joint-stock land banks to become a part of the cooperative land bank system is this: The cooperative land bank system is built on the cooperative plan. The members are all borrowing farmers. The borrowing farmers furnish all the earnings to the system, and the borrowing farmers get all the earnings—if there are any—paid back to them like a participating life-insurance policy. The joint-stock land banks are formed for private enterprise entirely, just as I might organize a national bank. They furnish private capital, and they furnish none of the earnings themselves because they do not borrow. They merely set up a joint-stock enterprise that they hope will earn money. They do not require the borrower to take any stock; they do not require the borrower to assume any individual responsibility. They occupy exactly the same field in the mortgage system that the average national bank occupies in the commercial system. It is purely a private, speculative, money-earning institution, under Government supervision, to extend to farmers the facilities of a land-mortgage system. They do not touch the Federal land banks at all. They ought not to touch them, because as soon as they do we come to the question of apportioning the earnings between the contributors to the joint-stock capital and the borrowing farmer. They are merely organized to meet the demand that is made by men who are now in the mortgage-loan business. There are a great many of them who are performing very useful functions. They see that they will be driven out of business if our cooperative plan works, and they say, give us a chance to come in now and do our business on honor, under Government supervision. Give us just the same facilities that you have given to the national banks in the commercial field.

We have done it. We discriminate against them only in allowing them to issue bonds to 15 times their capital and surplus, while the cooperative system may issue bonds to 20 times the capital and surplus. We have tried, by an adjustment of the burdens and advantages, to give them each a chance. If it turns out that the joint-stock banks charge a higher rate of interest than the cooperative system, then the cooperative system will have a better chance to occupy the field. The result will be that the joint-stock banks will have to pull their interest rate down to compete with the cooperative system.

Originally, I was not in favor of allowing the joint-stock banks to come in, but I was finally persuaded that there are parts of the country where you can not get the farmers to go into the cooperative system and these districts would be without facilities. I was satisfied that there were many farmers who would not go into the cooperative system and put up 5 per cent and assume any individual liability, and I wanted to extend to those men the facilities that are extended through the Government system of commercial banks to merchants and manufacturers.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand from the reading of the bill, it does not assume to reach anyone except a landowner.

Mr. HOLLIS. A landowner or one who desires to become a landowner. For instance, a man who is a tenant farmer wants to purchase a farm. You would hardly expect the Government to furnish facilities so that the man could borrow without any security. Therefore, a farmer who wishes to buy a farm worth, say, $2,000 has, perhaps, $500 to pay in on it. He can borrow half of the $2,000 under our system at a very low rate of interest. Then he can put a second mortgage on it for the other $500 at a rate of interest enough higher to induce money to come in and make up for the risk. Under the amortization plan, with the first six months' interest, there will be a reduction of the principal. So the second mortgage ought to be a pretty good and attractive investment. In that way we think the tenant farmer will be helped, if that is what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the Senator. I think that answers the question.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Suppose there is a default in interest payment, what becomes of the entire debt?

Mr. HOLLIS. If there is a default in the interest payment, it is carried to the suspension account for two years. That is where the guaranty fund comes in to take up the slack. But at the end of two years the local association must be called on to pay that mortgage in full or produce another one for an equal amount. If the association is small, it is entirely possible it might be wiped out by one payment, but after it has grown to a substantial size with a proper reserve it may very well meet the payment of one or more mortgages.

Mr. SHEPPARD. In other words the association must foreclose the entire mortgage within two years of its default.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; the association must do that within two years. Then would come into play the individual liability of the other members of the association, either double liability or unlimited as the case may be.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish the Senator would explain in reference to the limited and unlimited liability of the farmers who are in the association. I do not quite understand how he distinguishes the liability of one man from that of another.

Mr. HOLLIS. The farmers in a certain locality know each other pretty well, and if they are satisfied that the mortgage loans are safe and want to get the benefit of the very lowest rates that are available, they will organize a farm-loan association of unlimited liability, and that loan association will not have members of any other character. Every one who joins that association will assume unlimited liability for the debt of the association.

When the mortgages go before the land bank, they are all kept in one division for unlimited liability. There will be loan associations of limited liability and associations of unlimited liability. The mortgages of limited liability will be kept by themselves and the mortgages of unlimited liability will be kept by themseves. When an issue of bonds is desired the bank has to put up mortgages of one kind. If they are for unlimited liability they will be the best sort of security in existence, and will get the very lowest rate of interest from those who invest in farm lands. If they carry merely double liability they will not be of such undoubted character and they will probably sell on the market at less favorable rates.

Mr. THOMPSON. There may be both associations in one locality?

Mr. HOLLIS. There may be in some town a limited and an unlimited association, and there may be in that same town a private joint-stock bank, and all three of them may have useful functions to perform and fulfill certain requirements.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Unlimited liability means merely unlimited for that association?

Mr. HOLLIS. It means unlimited liability for that particular association.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But could he go out and take one farm for the whole thing?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; but he would have a right to make all the others contribute as was equitable. That is so, of course, under any liability statute with which I am familiar.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can see from the Senator's statement, and in reply to the question I asked a little while ago, a good reason why it might not be advisable to require the private joint-stock companies to come in under the plan that is provided in the bill, but I can not see any reason why if one of the joint-stock companies does desire to come in under the bill, and conform to all the requirements of the bill, it should not be permitted to do so. The mortgage that they would issue would have behind it just as much as security, probably a little better security, than the mortgage which a farmers' association would present. The mortgage of the farmers' association would have behind it nothing but the land and the limited or unlimited liability of the members. The mortgage that the private joint-stock association would offer would have behind it the land and the liability of the association and the individual liability of the stockholders in that association. It would be therefore just as good security as the other.

Now, if one of those institutions comes to the land bank and says, "Here are my mortgages indorsed by my association, I want to issue bonds on them; I am willing to comply with the provisions of your law if you will accept these mortgages and indorse our bonds that we desire to issue upon it"; why is not that feasible? Why the bank issuing these bonds would not be just as well protected as in the case of the bonds issued at the instance of the farmers' association I am unable to see. Therefore, I suggest to the Senator that there would seem to be no reason why, if these private associations desire to come into this system and comply with its terms as to interest, their bonds should not be indorsed by the bank just as the bonds of the private farmers' association.

Mr. HOLLIS. I can only add to what I have said—that no mortgage man has suggested that he would want to raise capital for a joint-stock land bank and then split the earnings that would possibly come to him with the Federal land bank and come in on the cooperative plan. What the mortgage men want to do is to raise the capital and go into business and have all the margin for themselves without dividing it with the Federal land bank. I have not heard of anyone who suggested it, but what the Senator says is perfectly true; they would have greater responsibility, they would have much greater value to their indorsement than the little farm-loan association; but we would still have the mixture of private capital and the cooperative plan contributing all the earnings, and if there is a surplus, dividing it in proportion to the amount each contributes.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly.

Mr. BRADY. The Senator is certainly giving us a very lucid and intelligent analysis of the bill, and I have given the measure considerable thought and study. Following the thought of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], speaking of the joint-stock bank, I have been wondering if there is not liable to be a great deal of confusion by including all three of these systems in the one bill. As the Senator has given the matter a great deal of study I should like to have an expression from him, if he feels so disposed, as to what he thinks about leaving the joint-stock bank feature out of the present bill and incorporating it into another bill if the Senate should see fit to write it into law.

Mr. HOLLIS. I can see great advantages in what the distinguished Senator from Idaho suggests. It would be very much easier to frame a bill of this kind if the conditions in this country were like those in the countries of Europe, with a homogeneous population, speaking the same language, rooted in the same soil, generation after generation, accustomed to going to the same church and having the same social organizations.

If we had that condition I should be very clear that we ought to insist on merely the unlimited-liability cooperative plan. I think we should impose that plan, and I know that it would be the cheapest and the most desirable to the farmer in the long run. But we have a great diverse country, with a shifting population, with neighbors living miles apart, not knowing or caring about each other, not willing to undertake liability for each other. Therefore I think we are forced into complications that would not be necessary if we had a smaller and a more homogeneous country. But in trying to select between the three different systems, the private joint-stock bank, the limited-liability plan cooperative, and the unlimited-liability plan cooperative, I could not risk my judgment as to which of the three was best or whether there was any best in the three. I felt that in this measure, without needless complications, we could give the people of all parts of the country a chance to select one of the three systems, or to absorb all three of the systems in the same locality if it seemed to them wise to do it. Nothing but experience can demonstrate in this country whether all three will exist side by side as they do successfully in Europe. Nothing but experience will show whether one of the three systems will outstrip the other. The committee felt that the only proper way was, without needless complication, to give them all a fair chance—a fair start—and see which comes out a winner at the end of the race. That is the only answer I can give.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. What amount of bonds can the private joint banks issue?

Mr. HOLLIS. The private joint-stock banks may issue bonds up to fifteen times their capital and surplus. The cooperative land banks can issue bonds up to twenty times their capital and surplus. There is a very good reason for that. The joint-stock bank can get its capital and its bond issue out without any trouble, but the only way for the cooperative bank to get its capital out in loans is to loan to the farmers. The very first loan it makes, the farmer contributes 5 per cent more capital, so that in getting the loans out you are getting more capital in all the time. The result is that it is not possible for cooperative banks to get out a ratio of more than 15 to 1 at any one time. Therefore it seemed fair to me that this difference in ratio should exist.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I understand, in order to issue the bonds, each of the banks must hold an amount of first mortgages equal to the bonds they issue. Is that correct?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; that is right. There must at all times be existing in the hands of the registrar for the district mortgages equal in face value to the outstanding bonds issued by the land bank; and whenever they fail to do that, if they have used up the capital and surplus so that they can not furnish other securities to take their places, then it must go out of business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May the bondholder under any circumstances bring suit to foreclose an individual mortgage?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; the bondholder has no interest in any one mortgage or any lot of mortgages. All he has is a right to have the trustee who is the registrar foreclose the mortgages for him and the other bondholders collectively.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Has he a right to have the trustee selected and the mortgage foreclosed in the event of default by the bank association?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; it would work in this way. We will assume that there is $100,000 in mortgages put up as collateral security for $100,000 in bonds. One of those mortgages is defaulted and the security is only, say, $90,000. The land bank is then obliged, under the terms of the bill, to put up another mortgage, a good mortgage, of that amount, or United States bonds, or cash, or farm-loan bonds carrying the same rate of interest as the bonds that are imposed upon that security. If the land bank can not do that, it is insolvent and must be closed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What becomes of the right of the bondholder to make his bond good?

Mr. HOLLIS. When the assets are liquidated for the benefit of all the creditors, then each creditor gets his percentage with the others; they share alike.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Has he not a right, then, to hold the others responsible for his loss?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; that works in this way. If the bondholder presents a coupon at the land bank that issued a bond and that land bank does not pay on demand of the bondholder, he has a right to present the coupon at any other land bank, and they must pay on demand. They can then call on the other land banks to contribute. But so far as the principle of the bond is concerned it must wait until the land bank that issued the bond is liquidated and the further liability is determined. Then the other land banks are assessed their amount of the deficiency based on the aggregate of the farm-land bonds that each has outstanding at the time.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRADY. As I understand it, the failure of an individual borrower to pay his interest or even his loan would in no direct way affect the holder of a bond issued by the cooperative bank.

Mr. HOLLIS. Oh, not at all. That is what the capital—the 5 per cent guarantee fund—is for. That is in the form of capital to take up the slack.

Sometimes there will be a mortgage which will have to be foreclosed. Experience has shown in this country and abroad that a 5 per cent margin is safe. We further provide that there shall be 25 per cent of earnings of both the loan association and the land bank applied to the reserve every year until the reserve equals 20 per cent of the capital, and after that 5 per cent of the earnings go to the reserve, no matter how large it is. If we can escape drought and bad fortune and get by two or three years we will have a reserve built up that will be safe, comparable, perhaps, to the European system that has been running for many years.

Unless some one else cares to ask a question, Mr. President, I ask that the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to inquire of the Senator who has charge of the bill whether he wishes to have it read in full or for amendment?

Mr. HOLLIS. I will ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that it be read for amendment?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; I will make that request later. I simply ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOLLIS. I will inquire if there is anyone who desires to speak on the bill this afternoon?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to submit merely a few remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, it is a well-established principle that the land itself may be so mobilized as to be entirely sufficient security for the bonds it supports without the intervention of a bank. The officers of a land district may be given authority to collect the interest and sinking-fund payments and the creditor may have the right to have that authority exercised in his behalf in the event of a default. It is the same principle that has made school and drainage district bonds so successful.

These are demonstrable facts. If you must have a bank to guarantee the bonds the creditor looks primarily to the bank and not to the land. The best results can be obtained by relying on the land alone, with as little scaffolding as possible.

The system proposed by the joint committee is an adaptation of the profit-banking system simply and not a genuine application of the cooperative principle.

The success of the joint-committee system will depend on the skill with which the banks are conducted. No more skill or special ability is required in a cooperative land district system than is required to conduct a drainage district. The duties of the officers are largely ministerial.

Then I wish to ask this question: Why encumber the land with the expense and risk of 12 great land banks, with the burden of their proper management, when the land itself may be combined under a simple district system issuing its own bonds and collecting the necessary money? Why put the farmer in the banking business when his land can be so handled as to form a satisfactory security without it?

These are the questions which have addressed themselves to my mind while considering this bill, which has been framed with such labor and such creditable zeal by the members of the joint committee. I would not say that the bill which they have suggested is unworkable. I want to call attention to the fact that I do not think it is necessary to build up an enormous bank superstructure which the farmer himself must conduct and manage when he possesses a security that is capable of being mobilized in simple district or landschaft system, providing adequate security for the bonds.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, before the Senator sits down, let me ask him is it his suggestion that, instead of organizing these cooperative banks, nine or more farmers may organize their land into a district and bond the district and sell the bonds of the district on the same principle as a drainage district is organized?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The same principle on which drainage districts or school districts are organized, but a landschaft district would never contain as few as 9 or 10 members. It would contain hundreds of thousands and might well embrace an entire State.

Mr. BRADY. And the Senator feels that that would be a more economical system than the organization of banks?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Undoubtedly. I think the farmer is entitled to the best system, one which will most successfully mobilize his lands as the basis of credit and also which shall be the least expensive to him.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the observations made by the Senator from Texas are entitled to every consideration. They were, however, in the minds of the joint committee. It was not desired to plunge the farmer into any unnecessary trouble to get his loans, but the only other system that was suggested was the landschaft system, which would require the Government to impose on the lands in the States certain conditions as to liability for assessments, and that is something that the Federal Government has no right to do. If there were any other way of accomplishing this end that offered a prospect of giving the farmer the relief to which he is entitled, either with less expense to him or less risk to anyone, the committee would be delighted to adopt it, but this is the only system which has been proposed which seems to offer a reasonable prospect of attaining that end.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, under my view of the matter, it is entirely within the power of Congress to organize a corporate body within the District of Columbia which shall have the power to organize land districts in the District of Columbia and in any territory immediately subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; and also with the power to organize such districts in such States as will give permission to the corporate body to do business within the limits of the respective States. In that way the stamp of State authority will be put upon the system and its assessment powers. Insurance companies organize in the District of Columbia under the District corporation laws, with directing headquarters at Washington, and with power to operate in any State which will admit the organization to do business. In that way I think the Federal Government could authorize a district system and give it a Federal head. After all, the assessment power of the landschaft would operate with far less hardship than the foreclosure power conferred by the joint committee bill. Under the latter a borrower may be made to pay his entire debt within two years after default of interest. This could not happen in the landschaft.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, it would be a very interesting experiment to see the landschaften tried in the District of Columbia or in any other place where the Government has a right to impose assessments on the land; but it is not a function of this bill to provide a system particularly for the District of Columbia, and it would certainly not be advisable to provide a system which must wait for the States to change their laws in order to have it become operative. The committee feels that the suggested plan will work practically all over the United States at once without waiting for laws to be changed. For that reason, and understanding fully the objections and suggestions of the Senator from Texas, they recommend the passage of this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, all that would be necessary would be for the States to admit this organization to do business within their limits.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How could you do that without an act of the legislature?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That would be very easy. The parent body could be admitted to the States either by a special act or under general incorporation laws.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, unless some other Senator is ready to speak this afternoon, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Just a moment. I do not mean to say that it is my unchangeable intention to vote against the measure proposed by the committee. Perhaps it may be amended so as to be made more satisfactory. I am so anxious to see legislation of some kind enacted on the subject that I may be willing to concede that this measure, developed after so much labor and so much investigation, should have a trial. I deem it my duty to say, however, that I do not believe that it represents the fundamental and scientific solution of the land credit question. If the landschaft system can not have a directing Federal head, let a bureau be established by the Federal Government to furnish model landschaft laws to the States, and to aid the States both in the enactment of such laws and in the marketing of landschaft bonds. I think, however, that the system I have suggested, with a directing head in the District of Columbia, is entirely feasible.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, if no other Senator is ready to address himself to the bill this afternoon, I desire to ask Senators to prepare themselves so that they may speak on the bill beginning to-morrow, if there is opportunity, so that we may proceed and read the bill for amendment. I do not think, perhaps, that it would be fair to ask that the bill be read for amendment this afternoon. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the bill will go over until to-morrow.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask unanimous consent that the calendar under Rule VIII be taken up, beginning at Order of Business 262, where we left off several days ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And that we consider only unobjected bills.

Mr. CHILTON. That is all right. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not willing to consider only unobjected bills down to the point where we last ended the consideration of the calendar and then go forward without making the same restriction as to the remaining bills on the calendar.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am a little curious to know how long we are going to continue the practice of considering unobjected bills, and going back and beginning over again, and thereby preventing the consideration of other bills that might be brought up on motion.

Mr. CHILTON. We are not going back to the beginning; we are going back to Order of Business 262.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is that where the consideration of the calendar was left off?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes; practically it is a little ahead of that point.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was about to raise the same objection which the Senator from Michigan has raised. I simply yielded when it was stated that the intention was to resume the consideration of the calendar at the point we reached when we last discontinued its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the request for unanimous consent preferred by the Senator from West Virginia. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5126) giving the consent of the United States for the bringing of certain suits in the Supreme Court of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that bill was read the last day the calendar was under consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Texas will not make that objection. The bill could have been disposed of the other day had the consideration of the calendar been continued. Those Senators who had opposed it in committee, who were then here, stated that they had no objection to the bill being brought up and being considered. I sincerely hope that the Senator from Texas will not now take the position of objecting to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in view of the absence of so many Senators who are members of the Committee on the Judiciary, I insist on the bill going over.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas had been here the other day he would have seen that there was then present comparatively more than the average number of Senators who are ordinarily present when the calendar is being considered.

Mr. CULBERSON. The bill was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary by a vote of only 8 to 7.

Mr. CHILTON. That fact was stated the other day in the Senate, and those Senators who were here on the opposite side from me as to the bill made the statement that they were perfectly willing for the matter to be considered. Is the Senator from Texas opposing the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly, I am, Mr. President. I opposed the bill in committee and I oppose it here. I insist that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CULBERSON subsequently said: Mr. President, a moment ago I objected to the consideration of Calendar No. 262, being Senate bill 5126, because of the small attendance in the Senate at that time. There being rather a full attendance now, I withdraw my objection to its consideration, though I am opposed to its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been read twice.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I think I will have to object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia objects. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 54) to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or in China was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object to the consideration of that bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (H. R. 655) to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars from January 1, 1859, to January, 1891, inclusive, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object to the consideration of that bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are so few Senators in the Chamber that I suggest the absence of a quorum, because some Senators who are not now present may be interested in bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Hardwick	Norris	Smoot
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Overman	Sterling
Broussard	Hollis	Page	Thomas
Burleigh	Hughes	Phelan	Thompson
Chamberlain	Husting	Poindexter	Tillman
Chilton	Johnson, Me.	Pomerene	Townsend
Clapp	Johnson, S. Dak.	Ransdell	Underwood
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Culberson	Kenyon	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Cummins	Lane	Sherman	Walsh
Curtis	Lewis	Simmons	Warren
Fall	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Gallinger	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], who is detained by illness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there was so much confusion in the Chamber a moment ago that I did not know what was done with Calendar No. 263, House bill 54.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair is informed that that bill went over under objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Who objected?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Let me inquire whether we are proceeding now with the consideration of bills to which there is no objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. By what agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is informed that unanimous consent was given to proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 262.

SINKING FUND FOR REDUCTION OF NATIONAL DEBT.

The bill (S. 55) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use, at his discretion, surplus moneys in the Treasury in the purchase or redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill was read on Saturday last.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN P. WAGNER.

The bill (S. 1296) for the relief of John P. Wagner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, John P. Wagner shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a captain of Company H, Two hundred and second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, on the 12th day of November, 1864; but no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to hear some explanation why this gentleman is to have his present disabilities removed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill, of course, is to give Mr. Wagner a pensionable status. I will say in regard to the case that he served three months with honor and was honorably discharged. He entered the Army a second time, served honorably, was promoted through the different grades to second lieutenant and then to first lieutenant, and again was honorably discharged. During a third service he unfortunately imbibed too much drink on one occasion, and on that account was dishonorably discharged. He is a very old man, and I think ought to be pardoned now in order that he may have a pension for the few months that he has yet to live.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not object to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

METROPOLITAN POLICE OF THE DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 4479) to amend an act approved June 8, 1906, entitled "An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and the Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved June 8, 1906, entitled "An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

Strike out the last clause of paragraph 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "All original appointments of privates shall be made to class 1, and promotions shall be made from class 1 to class 2 in order of appointment to the force after three years' service as privates in class 1, and from class 2 to class 3 after two years' service as privates of class 2, in all cases where the conduct and intelligent attention to duty of any private shall justify such promotion."

Strike out paragraph 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"PAR. 3. The said Metropolitan police force shall consist of 1 major and superintendent, who shall continue to be invested with such powers and charged with such duties as is provided by existing law; and also of 1 assistant superintendent with the rank of inspector; 4 surgeons for the police and fire departments; 3 inspectors; 11 captains; 18 lieutenants, 1 of whom shall be harbor master; and such number of sergeants, privates of class 3, privates of class 2, privates of class 1, mounted inspectors, captains, lieutenants, sergeants and privates, and such others as said commissioners may deem necessary within the appropriations made by Congress: Provided, That the inspectors shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; that the captains shall command police precincts and perform such duty or duties in connection therewith as the laws and regulations of the said commissioners may prescribe: Provided further, That the said Metropolitan police force shall continue as at present constituted until the offices created hereby are filled and promotions are made by said commissioners as provided in this act."

Strike out paragraph 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"PAR. 8. The salaries of the officers and members of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, herein provided, shall commence with the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1916, and shall continue thereafter annually, unless changed by Congress, as follows: The major and superintendent shall receive an annual salary of $4,000; the assistant superintendent shall receive an annual salary of $2,500; inspectors shall each receive an annual salary of $2,000; police surgeons shall each receive an annual salary of $720; captains shall each receive an annual salary of $2,000; lieutenants shall each receive an annual salary of $1,600; sergeants shall each receive an annual salary of $1,400; privates of class 3 shall each receive an annual salary of $1,200; privates of class 2 shall each receive an annual salary of $1,080; privates of class 1 shall each receive an annual salary of $900; members of said police force who may be mounted shall each receive an extra compensation of $300 per annum; and members of said force who may be mounted on bicycles shall each receive an extra compensation of $50 per annum."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following proviso:

Provided, That all contracts heretofore made between the beneficiaries under this act and pension attorneys and claim agents are hereby declared null and void.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire what condition his amendment is designed to cover? I do not perceive anything about the bill which indicates the necessity for any such contracts, and I am really a little curious in regard to the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the bill increases the salaries of the members of the Metropolitan police force. I have knowledge that on former occasions when salaries have been increased in this district certain enterprising claim agents and attorneys have had an interest in the matter and have profited to some extent because of the legislation. I have no knowledge at all as to the present case.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the amendment is very desirable in this case.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator knew what I know, he would think it desirable.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. Does this bill place the police officers at crossings upon the same basis as other policemen?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that, not being a member of the committee, I can not speak authoritatively, but I think it does not do so. I believe, however, that officers at crossings should have the same salary as paid to the ordinary policeman.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have understood that there is a discrimination between the crossing policemen and other policemen, and it occurred to me that the policeman who stands at a crossing in the center of the city has harder work to perform than the ordinary policeman, and really ought to be a selected man. It is a most dangerous and important place.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is this to be said about the crossing policemen. They are paid by the railroad companies. They are under the jurisdiction of the chief of police, but they are not properly members of the Metropolitan police force. I think on a former occasion I endeavored to remedy that by making them members of the Metropolitan police force and giving them all the rights and privileges of members of that force, but I failed in my effort to accomplish that. I will say to the Senator, however, that there is the distinction, to which I have referred, that the crossing policemen are paid by the street railroad companies and not from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The District collects from the railroads and pays them I presume. The District does not make the railroads themselves carry the crossing policemen on their pay rolls, does it?

Mr. GALLINGER. I confess I do not know what the modus operandi is.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I will say that I understand the railroad companies pay the crossing policemen direct.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I think to bring about the result desired will require additional legislation of Congress; but beyond a question the crossing policemen should have all the rights, privileges, and emoluments that go to any other class of policemen in this city.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is true; and they ought to be entitled to promotion. Certainly as good men are required for that position as any other position on the police force.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will require some additional legislation to bring that about.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are selected, I understand, by the commissioners and appointed by the chief of police.

Mr. GALLINGER. They undoubtedly undergo an examination, and they are appointed by the chief of police.

Mr. BRANDEGEE and Mr. TOWNSEND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire be kind enough to let me ask him a question? I do not know what the bill is to which he has offered the amendment, and I came in the Chamber just as the amendment was being read; but, as I understand the amendment, it seeks to declare invalid a contract, and I was wondering, inasmuch as the Constitution says that Congress shall pass no law impairing the obligations of a contract, whether or not the amendment violated that provision of the Constitution.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment is in the form which has been used in a great many similar bills, I will say to the Senator. Perhaps we could say that "all agreements."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. An agreement is a contract, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not wish to interfere in the matter at all, but as read the amendment, it seemed to me, would probably be unconstitutional.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator understands that the contracts referred to are contingent contracts.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I can see readily that such a provision could apply to the future, to prevent such contracts being made; but if there is now an existing valid contract, I do not think that Congress can declare it void. However, I do not wish to interfere with the bill, because if the provision is unconstitutional it will not have any effect.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I had in mind what the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has said. It seems to me that if the Senator from New Hampshire desires to accomplish this purpose it can be done by stating that no part of the money shall be paid for such a purpose. That might possibly avoid the objection which has been raised. It seems, however, very clear to me that such an amendment will be unconstitutional if a valid contract exists. I do not believe that Congress can make a legal contract void.

Mr. GALLINGER. This matter is peculiar in this respect—of course, I can not argue it from the legal point of view, but such contracts are made upon a contingency. They are contingent agreements with certain men whose salaries are increased by legislation that the attorneys or claim agents shall get a percentage, pretending that they have been the means of securing the legislation. Whether or not that is a contract under the terms of the Constitution I do not know.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the object the Senator desires to accomplish; but I can not believe that that can be done if there is such a contract in existence, but it seems to me that we might say that "no part of the appropriation made shall be applied to such a purpose."

Mr. GALLINGER. I wrote it in that form first, but on turning to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I found two recent instances where the phraseology which I employ has been used in other bills. However, if the matter may be passed over for a moment, I will draft the amendment in the other form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire withdraw his amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw the amendment, and ask that the bill may go over for a few moments until I can draft the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has called my attention to the fact that section 10 of Article I of the Constitution provides that—

No State shall * * * pass any * * * ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts.

I think that is what I had in mind, probably. I think I am mistaken in what I said about the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire. It did seem to me, and does seem to me still, that Congress ought not to have the power to pass a law declaring a valid contract to be void; but I have had no time to look it up, or to see whether there is any constitutional amendment which would prohibit it. I think, however, I was clearly wrong in what I stated, and I had in mind what the Senator from Texas has called to my attention.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will again offer the amendment; and I will make the suggestion that even if this should be found to be an unconstitutional act it will have served, to a large extent, the purpose I have in view. There have been things done here in this direction that ought to be corrected, and possibly a notice served upon certain parties will accomplish the result quite as well as legislation. I think we would better add this amendment to the bill—the amendment I submitted a moment ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire offer the amendment that he previously offered?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF MASSACHUSETTS.

The bill (S. 3346) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claims of the State of Massachusetts was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 3, after the words "Treasury Department," to strike out:

And in making said adjudication the court is hereby directed to apply the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 27, 1861 (12 Stat., 276), and the joint resolution of Congress approved March 6, 1862 (12 Stat., 615), as interpreted and applied by the Supreme Court of the United States in the claim of the State of New York (160 U. S., 590), which legislation so interpreted is hereby extended to include the aforesaid claims. And the proofs in support of said claims now filed by the State with the accounting officers are hereby declared to be sufficient to authorize the court to make said adjudication under the provisions of said act and joint resolution.

And insert:

The evidence of the amount of said expenditures and of the computations of premium made by the accounting officers of the Treasury, on file in the Treasury Department, may be considered by the court, so as to relieve the State of the necessity of duplicating the same.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is hereby given jurisdiction to adjudicate the claims of the State of Massachusetts for money paid as premium for gold with which it paid the interest and principal on money borrowed and used to equip its troops for the service of the United States during the Civil War and for interest and premium paid for gold wherewith it paid such interest on money borrowed and expended during said war in protecting the harbors and fortifying the coast, which claims for interest and premium were disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department. The evidence of the amount of said expenditures and of the computations of premium made by the accounting officers of the Treasury, on file in the Treasury Department, may be considered by the court, so as to relieve the State of the necessity of duplicating the same.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish that some Senator would give a brief explanation of that bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the bill is to allow the State of Massachusetts to go before the Court of Claims to recover for money paid as premium for gold with which it paid the interest and principal on money which it borrowed to equip troops during the Civil War. The State of Massachusetts paid all its debts during the Civil War and all the interest in gold. There have been some similar cases in connection with one or two other States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand what it is now.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does this bill provide that the Court of Claims shall proceed to judgment or merely find the facts? This claim has been before the Committee on Claims a dozen times. It came before the committee while I was a member of that committee—and I served on that committee seven or eight years—but I do not think we have ever allowed a claim to go through within my recollection providing that the Court of Claims shall proceed to judgment. Ordinarily we merely allow the court to find the facts and certify the facts to Congress, and then the claim is paid by appropriation in one of the appropriation bills.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly this matter will have to come before Congress for an appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I wanted to understand. It does not authorize the Court of Claims to proceed to judgment.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that after the Court of Claims acts the matter will have to come here and be paid like every other judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I want to understand.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it is different in that respect from any other bill of this kind.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course, Mr. President, judgments have to be paid; but I understand that these cases usually go to the Court of Claims to find the facts; then the facts come up here before Congress, and then the Court of Claims recommends the bill for passage.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; it is exactly the same——

Mr. OVERMAN. And this takes the same course as others.

Mr. LODGE. It takes the same course as all other claims.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; I do not understand that it does take the same course as others. If you permit this bill to pass, you submit this matter to the Court of Claims for a judgment there, which would be a judgment in favor of the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I asked.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of course we will have to appropriate the money to pay it, the same——

Mr. OVERMAN. I will not object to it if that is the form of the bill. If it proceeds to judgment, then I would object to it.

Mr. CLAPP. Let us have it read.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask to have the bill read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). The Secretary will read the bill again.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he will not strike out the word "adjudicate," and say that it is referred to the Court of Claims "to find all questions of law and fact, and report to Congress." That is the way they usually read, instead of saying "adjudicate."

Mr. LODGE. I supposed this bill was in the usual form.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; they are referred to the Court of Claims to find the questions of law and fact and report to Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to make that change if the Senator is going to object unless it is made. Of course in that event I have no choice except to accept it; but similar claims have been paid to other States.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that. They passed through our committee.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand all about this claim, because it has been before the committee time and again. Some of them have been referred to the Court of Claims to find the facts and the law and report to Congress. They make reports here every year, as the Senator knows, upon these cases, and we pass upon them.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, Mr. President.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to strike out the word "adjudicate" and have it read "referred to the Court of Claims to find the law and facts and report to Congress."

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Secretary state the amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. First, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if this is not an exactly parallel case to the case that was decided by the Supreme Court with regard to the State of New York?

Mr. LODGE. Precisely the same.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think it ought to go before the Court of Claims. This question was before the Committee on Claims when I was a member of it, and I think the Committee on Claims ought to report a bill making an appropriation to pay this debt.

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee has never done that, Mr. President. We have had it up there every year.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, Mr. President, it is a just debt. Of that I have no doubt whatever; but the United States Congress, particularly, will never pay any attention to whether or not a debt is a just debt. The only way to get it paid is to try to get a judgment from a court.

Mr. OVERMAN. As I recollect, the Government has paid Massachusetts the principal of every cent she paid out. This, as I understand, is a question of the premium she had to pay for gold in getting this money.

Mr. LODGE. That has been decided.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know it has in a Pennsylvania case; but I think the Court of Claims ought to find the facts and the law in this case and report back.

Mr. LODGE. There is not any question about the facts. It ought to be paid, as a matter of fact, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] says, by appropriation; but, of course, I have no choice, if the Senator from North Carolina is going to object, except to take the amendment. It simply delays it still further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator propose the amendment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do; but in order that the Senator may have the bill passed I will say that I do not propose to delay it. It will not delay it at all. If you got a judgment, it would have to come here and be appropriated for. There really will be no delay in it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I think possibly I can straighten this out. There are cases where it is difficult to ascertain the amount, and we send such cases to the Court of Claims to report a finding of fact. Where there is no question of the amount, and the claim is a just one, we very often send it there for a judgment, and I should think in a case of this kind it ought to be for a judgment.

Mr. LODGE. Let me say to the Senator from Minnesota that there is no question about the amount.

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. LODGE. It is provided in the bill by the amendment that the State shall not have to duplicate the returns or figures of the Treasury Department. We accept the figures of the Treasury Department itself.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes. I say I do not see the necessity of sending it there for a mere finding of fact.

Mr. LODGE. There are no facts to find. Those are admitted.

Mr. CLAPP. We ought to send it there for a judgment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether it is exactly the same case as the Pennsylvania case or not. I do know, however, that the Committee on Claims time and time again refused to pass it. I do not know why. Let us have the facts from the court.

Mr. LODGE. The Committee on Claims has refused to pass a good many just claims.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, certainly; I agree to that.

Mr. OLIVER. I would say that some years ago, when I was a member of that committee, I investigated this case, which was referred to me as a subcommittee, and I reported to the committee in favor of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. But the full committee did not report it.

Mr. OLIVER. At that time the full committee was dominated by the late Senator from New Jersey and a lot of others who would not report anything.

Mr. OVERMAN. It may be a meritorious case; I do not know.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is meritorious. Other States have received the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina propose an amendment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the word "adjudicate" and insert "to find the law and facts."

Mr. LODGE. Of course I hope that amendment will not be adopted. I do not think there are any facts to find. If the Senator is going to object, however, I have no choice except to accept it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, is there a provision in this bill carrying interest?

Mr. LODGE. No; it is the premium on the interest.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The premium on it?

Mr. LODGE. On the interest paid by the State.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is no provision for interest on the amount due?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; there is no provision whatever for interest on the amount.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the word "adjudicate" covers everything that could be covered by the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina. The requirement that the court shall adjudicate the claim involves the necessity of inquiring into it, or else there can be no adjudication.

Mr. OVERMAN. It may be construed that they are to render judgment. I have proposed the language of all these bills where Congress has required the matter to go to the Court of Claims to find the law and the facts and then report to Congress; and Congress takes the law and facts as found by the court and determines whether it will appropriate to pay the judgment.

Mr. THOMAS. I can not conceive how a court can adjudicate any controversy before it without inquiring into it and then passing upon it. Its conclusion, either favorable or adverse, presupposes an inquiry as to the facts as well as the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUGHES. I shall object to the bill, if that is done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey objects to the further consideration of the bill. Under the rule, it will be passed over.

GRAVES OF CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The bill (S. 5044) to continue in effect the provisions of the act of March 9, 1906, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask that that bill may be indefinitely postponed, because a House bill having the same object in view was passed by the Senate some days ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3012) for the relief of Elizabeth T. Wells was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE T. HAMILTON.

The bill (S. 28) for the relief of George T. Hamilton was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on line 5, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to George T. Hamilton, as full compensation for wounds received at the hands of soldiers of the United States in the year 1863.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have looked for the report on that bill, but I do not see it. It is a long time since that accident happened, and I should like to see some of the evidence.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I may say that the report is No. 297, but I can give the Senator and the Senate the facts in this case, and I desire to do so.

In 1863 a young lad 16 years old was standing at the door of his mother's house near Stanton, Del. A trainload of United States troops was being sent southward——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I remember the bill very well upon the statement the Senator has just made, and I have no objection to its consideration.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, as I have started I should like to continue the statement, because I wish to offer an amendment to the bill increasing the amount, and I hope the Senate will agree to it. This is a case that I think resembles some of the horrors with which we have been familiar in the European war, and it is a case that I know about personally, as far as one can after this length of time, knowing one of the witnesses who testified, and having visited this man.

As I was saying, in 1863 a 16-year-old boy was standing at the door of his mother's house near Stanton, Del. A trainload of United States troops had stopped on a siding there as it was passing south. One of the soldiers, never identified, shot this boy through both legs, so affecting the nerves of one that for 53 years that man has suffered from running sores in that leg, unable to work except now and then temporarily; and it is one of the tragedies of which you find so many in the simple annals of the poor.

Mr. President, if I represented this man in a court of justice, with a defendant whom I could sue for this claim, I should expect to get almost the highest punitive damages ever awarded in a damage case. For 53 years this man has suffered from those injuries, inflicted by a soldier of the United States who very possibly is to-day drawing a pension, and has done so for many years.

I desire to offer an amendment increasing the amount which the committee allowed. They cut down the amount named in the bill which I offered, $5,000, to $1,000, saying that there was no real legal liability and $1,000 was simply an amount which they had agreed upon; but the acting chairman of the committee told me he would not object and would be very glad if I could obtain an increase in that amount from the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, is this a $1,000 pension, to be paid to him annually?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; it is a lump sum of $1,000 which the committee recommend.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Surely.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has stated that the boy was 16 years old in 1863.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In 1863; yes.

Mr. LODGE. It is stated here by the Committee on Claims that he is now 53 years of age.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator will observe that that is an old report on this case, which was made to the Senate a great many years ago.

Mr. SMOOT. In the Fifty-sixth Congress, I believe.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, I see; it is an old report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes. The man is now 69 years old, Mr. President, from the record.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Surely.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand that this man has been pensioned by the Government for this?

Mr. SAULSBURY. He never has had one cent from the Government during this whole time, and has suffered for 53 years.

I may say that I personally know one of the physicians whose affidavit is shown by this report, and he is one of the finest country doctors that anyone can well imagine. He is one of those men who simply go about doing good and charity, and he has attended this man. I have talked with him. I have seen this man myself. I think it is one of those pitiful cases where the Government could very well afford to pay the man a pension, and I should be glad to have them do it. If he should live longer than it takes to consume this money, I shall try to get the Congress to make an appropriation again; but I move, Mr. President, that in line 6, as amended, the $1,000 be changed to $2,000, and I give notice that I shall ask for more if he lives longer than this amount lasts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote by which the former amendment was agreed to?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will propose the amendment when the bill comes in the Senate from the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments to be proposed as in Committee of the Whole? If not, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Now I offer my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 6 it is proposed to strike out "$1,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN Q. A. BRETT.

The bill (S. 2544) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint John Q. A. Brett captain in the Quartermaster Corps of the Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "grade of," to strike out the words "captain in the Quartermaster Corps" and insert "first lieutenant," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint John Q. A. Brett, pay clerk, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, to the grade of first lieutenant, United States Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to know why it is proposed to take this action?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I will give the reason for it. It is stated in a letter of the former Secretary of War, Mr. Garrison:

> I regard the case of Pay Clerk Brett as an exceptional one, and believe that he is entitled to special consideration for the unusually arduous and intelligent work which he has performed. His unusually exact knowledge not only of the Quartermaster Corps but of the other bureaus of the War Department as well is personally known to me by reason of extremely important official work extending over several months which he has done under my immediate direction.
> Before this work was completed, and when his absence would probably have made it impossible of completion, his medical officers ordered him into the hospital. Realizing the serious situation that his absence would create, and entirely from a sense of devotion to duty, he continued at this harassing night-and-day work until it was finished, although to the serious prejudice of his health.
> Pay Clerk Brett is a highly educated, well-bred gentleman. I doubt if there are half a dozen officers in the Army as well versed in all the details of the Quartermaster Corps.

Then there are letters here of a similar purport from Gen. Bliss, Col. Huggins, and other officers under whom he served, and Gen. Aleshire. His health is very much impaired. He has been in the service a long time as pay clerk.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the President of the United States to appoint John Q. A. Brett a first lieutenant in the United States Army."

KATE CANNIFF.

The bill (S. 798) for the relief of Kate Canniff was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,345," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Kate Canniff the sum of $1,345, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the death of her husband, James Canniff, who received injuries April 15, 1901, while in the service of the United State on the lighthouse tender Haze, and as a result of which he died on October 20, 1909.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think we ought to have an oral explanation of the bill from whoever is responsible for it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am the author of the bill, and I shall be very glad to explain it.

The husband of the beneficiary of the bill was employed in the Lighthouse Service of the Government, operating in the harbor of Detroit, Mich. While in that service he was caught by a chain and thrown overboard and his leg crushed so that it had to be amputated twice. He suffered for a long time from these injuries, but recovered sufficiently so that eventually he was appointed a watchman and discharged some duties of that character for a while. He eventually died, in 1909, as his family claims as the result of the injury; that is to say, not directly, but that his general health was so impaired and his vitality so undermined that he succumbed to the illness from which he eventually died, and the bill was framed upon the basis of recovery for his death.

The matter was referred to the Department of Commerce for a report, and the report from them is found in the record. They are not able to trace any direct causal connection between the injury which he thus sustained in the service and his death; but they set out in the report that a large amount of expense was incurred by him for medical attendance and loss of time and that sort of thing during the time he was injured, and they recommend that payment be made to him of that amount—$1,345. The claim is a very just one.

I might say that I am interested in the matter because of some family connections of the lady with people in my State.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2530) for the relief of the Buffalo River Zinc Mining Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BRIDGE ACROSS SALT FORK OF ARKANSAS RIVER, OKLA.

The bill (S. 3423) to provide for the construction of a bridge across the Salt Fork of the Arkansas River near White Eagle Agency, in the Ponca Indian Reservation, Okla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of paying one-third of the cost of the construction of a bridge across the Salt Fork of the Arkansas River, between sections 3 and 10, township 24 north, range 2 east, Indian meridian, near White Eagle Agency, in the Ponca Indian Reservation, Okla., provided that no part of the money appropriated shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of Kay County and Noble County, in Oklahoma, satisfactory guaranties of the payment by said counties of at least two-thirds of the cost of such bridge, and that the proper authorities of the said counties assume full responsibility for and will at all times maintain and repair said bridge and the approaches thereto.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I inquire from the Senator who introduced the bill and reported it why this $6,000 should be appropriated from the general funds instead of from the Indian funds?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that adjacent to this point a number of different Indian tribes have been located, and the land is nontaxable. The white people who own lands in the vicinity appealed to the Interior Department with regard to it, showing that these Indian lands, which were scattered and not paying taxes, would be benefited in this proportion, and for that reason the Secretary thought it was fair that the Government should make provision for the payment of one-third of the amount.

Mr. THOMAS. I notice that the bill refers to the White Eagle Agency in the Ponca Indian Reservation. The impression I had in my mind was that this was a bridge connecting the Indian reservation with the territory on the other side of the river.

Mr. OWEN. No; it runs across the Salt Fork and connects a lot of territory which has land belonging to white people, but also has Indian allotments which are nontaxable, and this is intended to meet the Indian proportion of it.

Mr. THOMAS. I should think that would be a proper State charge, or a proper charge against the Indian funds.

Mr. OWEN. The United States made this land nontaxable in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if the Indians who will be benefited by the building of this bridge have a credit in the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. OWEN. These allotments belong to members of the tribe. Whether these individuals have any available funds or not, I do not know; but the Secretary of the Interior in his letter of February 17 stated that he thought it was fair that this should be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I see that the Secretary of the Interior on February 12, 1916, says that considerable Indian land in these counties is not subject to taxation, and this appropriation is asked for by the county authorities because of this condition. He further says that he is submitting the facts in the case, leaving the question of the propriety of making the appropriation to the determination of Congress.

It seems to me that if this is wholly to benefit the Indians, and the lands are not taxable, the amount which should be paid by the Government ought to be charged to the Indian account, if they have one here.

Mr. OWEN. The apportionment is against the individual allottees who have the lands in contiguous territory. They are at different distances from the bridge. The Secretary in this paragraph of his letter says:

I have to state that all the information at my command indicates that it is only fair that the Government should assist the counties in the construction of the proposed bridge.

Mr. WALSH. The idea suggested by the question propounded by the Senator from Colorado has not been developed at all.

Mr. OWEN. The only question involved in the question of the Senator from Colorado was, Why should not the tribal funds provide this? The answer is that the benefits are going to individual allottees, according to their respective distances from the bridge.

Mr. WALSH. But that is always the case with a bridge on or adjacent to a reservation. Those nearest the bridge, in all probability, derive the greatest amount of benefit from it.

Mr. OWEN. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. Yet in all our operations of government we take a territory reasonably adjacent and subject it to the charge.

Mr. OWEN. I should have no objection if charged to the Ponca Tribe, to the individuals who have special benefit from it, of course, those in proximity to the bridge; but in the Ponca lands there have been various apportionments, these allotments have been made, and United States citizens are now paying taxes upon them.

Mr. WALSH. I speak of this because attention has been called to the fact that some of these Oklahoma Indians have enormous revenues. We have frequently endeavored to get the Government to aid in the construction of bridges very largely beneficial to reservations in our State out of Indian moneys and we have not been quite as successful as we hoped to be. It never addressed itself to me as a very proper expenditure of General Government funds to build those bridges, but, of course, if Congress gives approbation to a measure of this kind we shall be compelled to introduce a number of bills for the erection of such structures.

Mr. OWEN. I shall ask leave to amend the bill, in line 4, after the word "Treasury," by striking out "not otherwise appropriated" and inserting "to the credit of the Ponca Tribe of Indians."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARKENTINE "MABEL I. MEYERS."

The bill (S. 3270) for the relief of the owners of the barkentine Mabel I. Meyers and her master and crew, and for the relief of the owners of cargo of molasses late on board said barkentine, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 14, to insert "Provided, That no award or judgment shall be made for prospective profits," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the barkentine Mabel I. Meyers and her master and crew, and the claim of the owners of the cargo of molasses late on board said barkentine, in alleged collision with the U. S. S. Nebraska about 30 miles southeast of Cape Cod, Mass., on the 30th day of July, 1915, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owners of said barkentine and by her master and crew, and by the owners of said cargo, may be submitted to the United States Court for the District of Massachusetts, the district nearest to which the collision occurred, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty. And that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the damages, including interest, sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principles and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That no award or judgment shall be made for prospective profits.

SEC. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owners or master or crew of said barkentine, or any or either of them, or to the owners of said cargo, or either of them, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor, including interest and costs, shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That such suit or suits shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If there is any Senator here who has charge of the bill or knows about it——

Mr. OWEN. I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I objected a few moments ago to Senate joint resolution 114, withholding from allotment the unallotted lands or public domain of the Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians, and providing for the sale thereof, and for other purposes. I did not know that the joint resolution had been called at that time. I did not mean to object.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not read the joint resolution. Another Senator wants it to go over, and I will have to object on his account.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

MIKE G. WOMACK.

The bill (S. 3533) for the relief of Mike G. Womack was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$1,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mike G. Womack, the sum of $1,000, in full compensation for injuries received by him on July 28, 1914, while in the performance of his duties as an employee of the United States Government in connection with the construction of roads within the Crater Lake National Park, in the State of Oregon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think we ought to have a word of explanation of the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The report on the bill is very short. The man was injured in a powder explosion upon a Government road through the carelessness of a coemployee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 746) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Capt. Daniel H. Powers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Capt. Daniel H. Powers, late of the Sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment, but other than as above set forth no pay, bounty, pension, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill (S. 2517) for the relief of Edward W. Whitaker was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 14, after the word "extent," to insert:

Provided, That on receiving the said retired pay under this act he shall relinquish all his right and claim to pension from the United States after the date of the passage of this act, and any payment made to him covering a period subsequent to the passage of this act shall be deducted from the amount due him on the first payment under this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Edward W. Whitaker (late lieutenant colonel First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, and brevet brigadier general, United States Volunteers, who enlisted as a private April 15, 1861, in Company A, First Regiment Volunteer Infantry, on President Lincoln's first call for volunteers, and served in the field during the war from Bull Run to Appomattox, receiving promotion through every grade to lieutenant colonel for gallantry in action on recommendations of his commanding officers and then specially brevetted brigadier general of United States Volunteers over many senior officers for skill and gallantry displayed in the three last and decisive battles that ended the war, he having participated in 82 engagements, and being so disabled in the last that he declined to accept an appointment issued to him as captain in the Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, on which he could have been retired as lieutenant colonel, the rank held when disabled) a lieutenant colonel of Cavalry in the Army of the United States; and, when so appointed, he shall be placed upon the retired list of the Army, unlimited, with the pay and emoluments of a retired officer of that grade, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent: Provided, That on receiving the said retired pay under this act he shall relinquish all his right and claim to pension from the United States after the date of the passage of this act, and any payment made to him covering a period subsequent to the passage of this act shall be deducted from the amount due him on the first payment under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What is the historical reference there that we are enacting into law?

Mr. BRANDEGEE rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut can undoubtedly explain it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is a bill that I introduced and it comes from the Committee on Military Affairs. Why the committee included in the bill for passage the historical reference I do not know, and I have no objection to that part being stricken out.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move that that part be stricken out because it savors more of a vote of thanks by Congress than anything else. Of course it served to explain the legal status but I move to strike out, beginning with the words "who enlisted as a private" in line 7 on page 1, down to and including the word "disabled" in line 10, page 2.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Before the motion is put, Mr. President, as the part of the bill to which the Senator from Wyoming has alluded is printed, I wish to make a very brief statement about the case. I have been here in the two Houses of Congress for 14 years now, and I have introduced a great many pension bills during that time, as, of course, other Senators have done. In all my experience this is the most deserving and the most remarkable case I have ever had.

I hold in my hand the record of this soldier, which I secured from the office of the Secretary of the Senate. It is certified to by The Adjutant General of the Army. This soldier enlisted as soon as the war broke out. He came from my own county in Connecticut. He was about 18 years old, I believe, at the time; I do not remember exactly; he was under 20 anyway. He participated in 82 engagements. He fought during the entire war from the first Battle of Bull Run, and was the first man within the lines of the enemy at the surrender at Appomatox. He has been awarded the medal of honor by the President of the United States.

I have here all the official papers from the War Department, the indorsement of his old commanders, Gens. Wilson, Grant, and Sheridan. He served under Custer. He repeatedly penetrated the enemy's lines bearing dispatches, at the head of a company of Cavalry, and carried the most important dispatches during the war. I am going to read just one testimonial by Gen. James M. Wilson, late major general of Volunteers, which will show the kind of service this man rendered.

STOCKFORD, WILMINGTON, DEL.,
February 27, 1895.

JAMES R. DURHAM, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Absence from home has prevented an earlier acknowledgment of your favor of February 24.

I note with regret that my letter in regard to Gen. E. W. Whitaker's distinguished services in cutting his way through from Reams Station to headquarters, near Petersburg, with dispatches for Gen. Meade has been mislaid or lost, and my regret is all the keener as I find I failed to keep a copy of the letter in question.

I now beg to replace it by what follows:

E. W. Whitaker, then a captain of the First Connecticut Cavalry, served on my staff as an aid-de-camp while I was commanding the Third Division, Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac, and at all times and upon many occasions showed himself to be a very able and conspicuously gallant officer, but he rendered peculiarly valuable and courageous service in carrying dispatches through the enemy's lines from me to Gen. Meade.

As the officials records will show, the command, after destroying the railroads between Petersburg and the Roanoke River and inflicting great injury upon the Confederate cause, had got back to the immediate vicinity of Reams Station, where it found itself confronted by a strong force of rebel cavalry and infantry. On arriving on the field in the early morning a reconnoissance of the enemy's lines convinced me that we should have to cut and run for it unless Gen. Meade should speedily send a relieving force to open the road for us, but inasmuch as Gen. Meade could have no means of knowing the perils which surrounded us it was necessary for me to open communication with him. Headquarters were not over 5 miles away, but a strong force of veteran Confederate infantry lay straight across the way, and was supported by Fitzhugh Lee's cavalry. Their position was a strong one, and the oldest cavalrymen regarded it as impregnable for our jaded force. Upon indicating my desire to get information through to Gen. Meade, Capt. Whitaker volunteered to take it and his offer of services was accepted. A single troop of Cavalry was selected to escort him, and as soon as the necessary dispatch could be written he set out upon his perilous mission, and within an hour he had cut his way through the Confederate lines and delivered his dispatch at Army headquarters. The details of his exploit will be found in the official records, but no one except himself and those who saw him ride so gallantly into and through the rebel lines can promptly appreciate the dangers he ran or the value of the services rendered by him. It is true that Gen. Meade did not succeed in getting any part of his force to Reams Station till after noon and after we had retired, but that was no fault of Capt. Whitaker's. He did his whole duty with rare skill, dash, and courage, and I trust may be rewarded by the medal of honor and the proper acknowledgment of his distinguished services upon that occasion.

Yours, very respectfully,

JAMES H. WILSON,
Late Major General Volunteers.

Mr. President, this soldier was repeatedly mentioned in reports for conspicuous gallantry on the field of action; he was wounded; and if ever a soldier is entitled to this small congressional recognition this man is.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, certainly in making a motion to amend by striking out the words in parentheses I had no desire or thought of reflecting on the gallantry of this very gallant officer, but it seems to me the record contained in the bill ought not to be enacted into the body of the law. The record is contained in the department and it is a historical record. The Senator from Connecticut has been here a great many years and I have been here perhaps an equal number of years. I think probably this is the only instance where an historical record of this sort has been sought to be embodied in a law. Therefore I make my motion to strike out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As I stated to the Senator, I have no objection to his amendment. On the contrary, I rather feel grateful to him for having made it, as it gives me opportunity to insert in the RECORD some of the things that ought to be said about this gentleman.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I served upon the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs that considered this bill, and it was the opinion of the subcommittee, after thoroughly investigating the bill and the circumstances attendant upon it, that this is a very worthy, meritorious, and deserving case of a very brave and gallant soldier who had not been treated right and had not been properly recognized nor sufficiently rewarded by his country. The subcommittee was so deeply impressed with the soldier's service and the merits of the bill that the subcommittee thought it fit and proper to indorse the gracious little tribute to his worthy and gallant services to his country which is found in the bill in the recital of the soldier's deeds. The subcommittee felt that if everyone knew the circumstances as well as the subcommittee did, no one would object to this little tribute to this old soldier's worth and merit. I feel that it but feebly makes amends for the poor treatment which he has received at the hands of his Government and that no one understanding it would object to it, nor to the passage of the bill.

Therefore the subcommittee very heartily recommended for passage the bill as it appears before the Senate to-day, and I believe the full committee likewise was unanimous in favor of it. It is tardy justice in small measure to a gallant old soldier, and I trust the bill may pass just as recommended by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask permission to insert as a part of my remarks the record of this soldier.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CASE OF EDWARD W. WHITAKER, LATE CORPORAL, COMPANY A, FIRST REGIMENT CONNECTICUT INFANTRY VOLUNTEERS; FIRST LIEUTENANT, COMPANY C, AND CAPTAIN COMPANY D, SECOND NEW YORK CAVALRY VOLUNTEERS; CAPTAIN COMPANY E AND LIEUTENANT COLONEL FIRST CONNECTICUT CAVALRY VOLUNTEERS; AND BREVET BRIGADIER GENERAL, UNITED STATES VOLUNTEERS.

Reports in the case of this officer have been furnished to Congress by this department on dates and in connection with measures as follows: June 29, 1906, to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, in connection with House bill No. 20388, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, proposing to appoint Gen. Whitaker as captain, United States Army, and place him on the retired list; January 27, 1908, to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, in connection with Senate bill No. 4193, Sixtieth Congress, first session, of the same import as the measure referred to, and in connection with this measure supplementary data were furnished on February 12, 1908, to the same committee; January 16, 1911, to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, in connection with House bill No. 6608, Sixty-first Congress, first session, of the same import, with the recommendation by this department that the bill do not receive favorable consideration; February 26, 1912, to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, in connection with House bill No. 18540, Sixty-second Congress, second session, proposing to appoint him as lieutenant colonel of Cavalry, United States Army, and place him on the retired list; May 13, 1912, to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, in connection with Senate bill No. 6274, Sixty-second Congress, second session, of the same import; and February 6, 1913, to Hon. J. L. Bristow, for use in connection with Senate resolution No. 348, Sixty-second Congress, second session, proposing to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to furnish the Senate with a full and detailed statement of his military history, with the recommendation by this department that the resolution be not adopted.

Although the reports referred to hereinbefore set forth the information ordinarily furnished in connection with proposed legislation of this character, yet Gen. Whitaker has been dissatisfied with those reports, because they do not furnish all the details of his military service, and he has repeatedly importuned this department to supply Congress with a full and detailed statement of his military career. The Secretary of War has finally directed that a full report be furnished in the case, setting forth every record found regarding the military services of the officer. Such a report, based upon the official records in the War Department, is set forth hereinafter, and this report includes every item that has been found in those records relative to the military services of this officer.

Edward W. Whitaker was enrolled April 19, 1861, at Hartford, Conn., and was mustered into the military service of the United States April 22, 1861, as a corporal of Company A, First Connecticut Infantry Volunteers, to serve three months, his age at the time being stated on the records as 20 years. It appears that he served faithfully as a member of the organization until July 31, 1861, when he was mustered out and honorably discharged from service with the company, at New Haven, Conn., as a corporal.

The said Whitaker was again enrolled August 21, 1861, at Hartford, Conn., and was mustered into service, August 29, 1861, at Camp Lyon, N. Y., as a sergeant of Capt. Thornett's company, Harris's Light Cavalry, which was also known as Company D, Second New York Cavalry Volunteers, to serve three years. It appears that he was present for duty with the company as a sergeant until January 10, 1862, when he was promoted to be quartermaster sergeant thereof in a regimental order bearing that date. He was accounted for on the rolls of the company as quartermaster sergeant thereafter until August 14, 1862, when, upon the recommendation of the captain in command of the company, he was promoted to be first (or orderly) sergeant thereof. He performed duty as such until September 24, 1862, when he was detailed as sergeant major of the regiment, and while so serving an order was issued from the headquarters of the organization, on November 16, 1862, in which it was announced that he was thereby appointed regimental sergeant major, to date from September 24, 1862. By reason of this appointment, he was transferred from Company D to the noncommissioned staff of the regiment, and it appears that he served therewith from September 24 to November 16, 1862, to take effect from which last-named date he was mustered out as regimental sergeant major, near Belle Plain, Va., to enable him to accept promotion.

On January 10, 1863, the commanding officer of the Second New York Cavalry Volunteers addressed a communication to the adjutant general of the State of New York, forwarding for the consideration of the governor of that State a recommendation that Whitaker be promoted to be second lieutenant, vice another officer who was promoted to a higher grade November 16, 1862. The recommendation made by the regimental commander was favorably considered, and on January 22, 1863, a commission was issued by the governor, in which it was recited that Whitaker was thereby appointed to be a second lieutenant in the Second New York Cavalry Volunteers, to rank as such from November 16, 1862.

On February 10, 1863, Whitaker received a leave of absence, and it appears that he remained absent from the regiment thereafter until on or about February 27, 1863, when he was mustered into service as second lieutenant of Company C, same regiment, entries appearing upon the muster-in roll purporting to show that the muster in was to date from November 16, 1862. He was accounted for as present for duty with Company C on February 28, 1863; as officer of the guard March 2, 1863, and as officer of the day March 13, 1863. Shortly thereafter he was detailed as acting adjutant of the regiment and signed orders as such from March 26 to April 12, 1863.

On April 9, 1863, the commanding officer of the regiment addressed a communication to the adjutant general of the State of New York, in which he recommended that Whitaker be promoted to be first lieutenant of Company C, Second New York Cavalry, vice another officer promoted to a higher grade on March 16, 1863. The recommendation was considered favorably and he was duly appointed by the governor of New York as of that grade, to rank as such from March 16, 1863. He was not formally mustered into service as first lieutenant until September 10, 1863, when he was so mustered in to date from June 11, 1863. It appears, however, that he actually performed the duties of a first lieutenant from March 16, 1863, and upon application for recognition as first lieutenant from that date, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1884, and the acts amendatory thereof, he was and is recognized by the War Department as having been in the military service of the United States as first lieutenant from March 17, 1863, the earliest date on which a vacancy existed for him as first lieutenant in the organization mentioned.

It appears from the records that the officer was performing the duties of first lieutenant with Company C, or was acting as adjutant of the regiment, thereafter until on or about June 13, 1863, when he was detailed as aid-de-camp on the staff of Brig. Gen. J. Kilpatrick, who was then in command of the Second Brigade, Second Division, Cavalry Corps. While so serving he made application, in a letter dated at Aldie, Va., June 18, 1863, for permission to take home to Connecticut the bodies of his brother and one other officer, killed in an engagement on the preceding day. The application was approved and forwarded through military channels, but nothing has been found of record to show specifically whether the leave asked for was granted.

The officer was accounted for on the company records dated June 30, 1863, and for the month of July, 1863, as absent, aid-de-camp to Gen. Kilpatrick. On July 30, 1863, he was admitted to the Seminary General Hospital at Georgetown, D. C., suffering with intermittent fever, and the records of the hospital indicate that he remained in that institution and was under treatment continuously thereafter, for the disease mentioned, until August 31, 1863, when he was pronounced fit for duty and ordered to rejoin the command to which he belonged.

In a report dated August 10, 1863, relative to the part taken by the Third Division in the Maryland and Pennsylvania campaign (the full text of which report is printed in the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies, Series I, Vol. XXVII, pp. 991–996), Gen. Kilpatrick, then in command of the division, mentioned Whitaker, in referring to an engagement of July 6, 1863, near Williamsport, Md., as follows:

"* * * I can not pass over this engagement without mentioning a few among the many individual cases of gallantry that came under my own observation: * * * The officers of my regular staff, * * * Lieut. Whitaker * * *, all did their duty in this engagement, as they have in all others, like brave and gallant gentlemen."

On August 16, 1863, an order was issued, a pertinent extract of which is as follows:

[General Order No. 7.]

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, CAVALRY CORPS,
Hartwood Church, Va., August 16, 1863.

The following-named officers are hereby announced as the staff of the brigadier general commanding division. They will be obeyed and respected accordingly: * * * Lieut. E. W. Whitaker, Second New York Cavalry, aid-de-camp * * *.

By command of Brig. Gen. J. Kilpatrick.

L. G. ESTES, A. A. A. G.

On records of the Third Division, Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac, for the months of August and September, 1863, Whitaker was accounted for as an aid-de-camp on the staff of the officer in command of the division, Gen. Kilpatrick.

In a report dated October 26, 1863, printed in the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies, Series I, Volume XXIX, Part I, Brig. Gen. Henry Prince mentioned Whitaker three different times as the representative of Gen. Kilpatrick, and again in a report printed on pages 328–329 of the same volume he was referred to as having furnished information to the commanding officer of the One hundred and twentieth Regiment, New York State Volunteers.

On October 29, 1863, Whitaker was detailed as judge advocate in an order, a pertinent extract of which is as follows:

[General Orders, No. 24.]

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, CAVALRY CORPS,
October 29, 1863.

* * * Lieut. E. W. Whitaker, A. D. C. to Brig. Gen. Kilpatrick, is hereby detailed as judge advocate, general court-martial, convened by General Orders, No. 22, Headquarters, Third Cavalry Division, October 28, 1863.

By command of Brig. Gen. Kilpatrick.

L. G. ESTES, A. A. Genl.

In a report of Brig. Gen. H E. Davies, jr., dated November 18, 1863, the full text of which is printed on pages 656 and 657 of the volume last mentioned hereinbefore, Whitaker was referred to as follows:

"Last evening I received instructions from Gen. Custer to detail from this command an escort to accompany Lieut. Whitaker and another officer in a reconnoissance to be made this morning at daylight to Elys Ford. In pursuance of this an order was sent Capt. Kingsland to furnish Lieut. Whitaker with 60 men for that purpose. Capt. Kingsland had also been previously instructed at daylight this morning to move his main reserve camp nearer to Stevensburg, leaving 50 men at the position he was holding. Lieut. Whitaker reached the headquarters of the regiment before daylight, and reveille was sounded and the whole command aroused. Lieut. Whitaker and an orderly from my headquarters who accompanied him both concur in saying that the horses in the camp were all saddled and bridled. * * *

"The party in charge of Lieut. Whitaker, which I have mentioned, had proceeded nearly 2 miles on the road to Germanna Ford, when they heard the firing and countermarched. On nearing the camp of the regiment they encountered what all concur in stating was a regiment of cavalry drawn up in a field on the right of the road, which charged them. The men retreated into the woods on the left of the road and skirmished for some time, but were obliged to fall back. The majority of them succeeded in reaching their regiment."

The officer was accounted for on November 3 and 30, 1863, as aid-de-camp on the staff of the officer in command of the Third Division, Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac, Gen. Kilpatrick, and on December 1, 1863, reported to The Adjutant General of the Army, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, CAVALRY CORPS,
ARMY OF POTOMAC,
Stevensburg, Va., December 1, 1863.

ADJUTANT GENERAL, UNITED STATES ARMY.

GENERAL: I have the honor to report, pursuant to General Order No. 244, current series, A. G. O., 1863, that I am an aid-de-camp on personal staff of Brig. Gen. Kilpatrick by virtue of General Order No. 7 these headquarters August 16, 1863, and am at present performing the duties of the office in the field. I am, General,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. W. WHITAKER,
First Lieutenant, Second New York Volunteer Cavalry, Aid-de-Camp.

On December 27, 1863, Whitaker applied for leave of absence in a letter of which the following is a copy:

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, CAVALRY CORPS,
ARMY OF POTOMAC,
Stevensburg, Va., December 27, 1863.

Capt. E. B. PARSONS,
Assistant Adjutant General.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to apply for a leave of absence for 35 days to accompany my company of veteran Volunteers to Connecticut. I hereby declare my intention and willingness to serve for the new term of three years. Furloughs accompany this for three-fourths of my company, which reenlisted and were mustered previous to the 21st instant. I am, Captain,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. W. WHITAKER,
First Lieutenant Company C, Second New York Cavalry, Aid-de-Camp.

The application was forwarded by Gen. Kilpatrick, approved, and the leave asked for was granted in an order dated December 29, 1863. On December 31, 1863, he was reported as absent on leave under the terms of that order, and on a record of the command to which he belonged, dated January 31, 1864, his name is borne without entry as to his presence or absence.

On February 23, 1864, an order was issued as follows:

[Special Orders, No. 12.]

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, CAVALRY CORPS,
February 23, 1864.

1. Lieut. E. W. Whitaker, aid-de-camp, is hereby announced as A. A. A. G. of this division during the absence of Capt. L. G. Estes, A. A. G.

By command of Brig. Gen. Kilpatrick.

L. G. ESTES,
Capt. and A. A. G.

From February 24 to April 1, 1864, Whitaker signed orders issued from the headquarters of the Third Division, Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac, "By command of Brig. Gen. Kilpatrick."

In a report of Brig. Gen. Henry E. Davies, jr., relative to the part taken by the First Brigade, Third Division Cavalry Corps, in a raid to Richmond, dated April 4, 1864, and printed on pages 190–194, Volume XXXIII, of the publication referred to, Whitaker was referred to in connection with military operations on March 1, 1864, as follows:

"* * * I then moved toward Richmond, passing Ashland station about a mile to my left and crossing the Richmond & Fredericksburg Railroad some 2 miles below Ashland. At this point the telegraph and railroad were destroyed and a party sent, in charge of Lieut. Whitaker, aid-de-camp on the staff of the general commanding division, to destroy a bridge on the line of the road, which object I believe was accomplished. * * *"

In a letter dated March 11, 1864, printed on page 242, same volume, Whitaker was mentioned as follows:

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY EXPEDITION,
March 11, 1864.

BRIG. GEN. WISTAR,
Commanding Expedition.

GENERAL: Col. Onderdonk and Lieut. Whitaker, of my staff, have returned. Lieut. Whitaker reports having met some 15 of the enemy at King and Queen Courthouse yesterday. He drove them from the town and destroyed a large amount of government stores, consisting of grain and arms stored at the place. A company of rebel infantry was found stationed opposite Fraziers Ferry. At 2 p. m. Lieut. Whitaker joined Col. Onderdonk, who had been sent to attack the enemy at Carlton's store. The enemy, some 1,200 strong, was found encamped just beyond. The enemy was driven from his camp, his camp destroyed, several of the enemy killed and wounded, and 12 taken prisoners. Col. Onderdonk pursued the enemy until dark, when orders reached him to return.

* * * * * * *

Very respectfully,

J. KILPATRICK, Brigadier General.

Whitaker reported under date of April 10, 1864, as follows:

BEALETON, April 10, 1864.

Brig. Gen. KILPATRICK,
Commanding Third Division Cavalry:

Have reached here all right. Lost some men in crossing Mountain Run. Capt. Judson was at this point to-day for forage; had no news from Morrisville. The command from Second Division has just passed—6.15 p. m.

E. W. WHITAKER.
Lieutenant, Aid-de-Camp.

Whitaker was afterwards detailed as aid-de-camp on the staff of Brig. Gen. Wilson, in command of the Third Division, Cavalry Corps, and on April 24, 1864, signed an order by command of that officer.

On April 25, 1864, the adjutant general of Connecticut addressed The Adjutant General of the Army by letter, of which the following is a copy:

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS, STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Hartford, April 25, 1864.

Brig. Gen. L. THOMAS,
Adjutant General, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: By direction of his excellency the governor I have the honor to request that First Lieut. Edward W. Whitaker, Second New York Cavalry, aid-de-camp to Gen. Kilpatrick, may be discharged, in order to enable him to accept a commisison as captain in the First Connecticut Cavalry.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. J. MORSE, Adjutant General.

Thereupon an order was issued as follows:

[Special Orders, No. 162.]

* * * * * * *

By order of the Secretary of War.

W. A. NICHOLS,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Apparently before receiving notice of his discharge in the order of April 29, 1864, Whitaker tendered his resignation in a letter, of which the following is a copy:

First Lieutenant Company C, Second New York Cavalry.

The resignation of the officer was accepted in Special Orders, No. 123, paragraph 7, issued from the headquarters of the Cavalry Corps on May 2, 1864, a copy of which is as follows:

By command of Maj. Gen. Sheridan.

C. KINGSBURY,, Jr.,
Assistant Adjutant General.

After the close of the war, with a view to fix the date of discharge of the officer as a member of this organization, an order was issued as follows:

[Special Orders, No. 198.]

[Extract.]

* * * * * * *

10. By direction of the Secretary of War so much of Special Orders, No. 123, paragraph 7, May 2, 1864, from Headquarters Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac, as discharged First Lieut. E. W. Whitaker, Second New York Cavalry, to date April 30, 1864, to enable him to accept a commission in First Connecticut Cavalry, is hereby revoked, he having been previously discharged for the same reasons by Special Orders, No. 162, paragraph 3, April 29, 1864, from this office, amended by Special Orders, No. 198, paragraph 9, August 19, 1868, from this office.

* * * * * * *

By command of Gen. Grant.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

In the meantime, the colonel commanding the Second Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers, in a letter dated March 29, 1864, addressed to the adjutant general of New York, recommended certain promotions in the regiment, among them being a recommendation that Whitaker be commissioned as a captain in the regiment, referring to him in terms as follows:

"* * * The above-named commissioned and noncommissioned officers are all well deserving their promotion, and none of them more than Lieut. Whitaker, who is one of the ablest and most trustworthy officers of this command; and I would most respectfully request that the above recommendations be confirmed."

Whitaker was duly appointed by the governor of New York as a captain in the Second New York Cavalry, in a commission issued April 29, 1864, to rank as such from January 30, 1864, which commission, it will be observed, was issued on the date of his first discharge order as a member of that organization. He was not mustered into service as of that grade and organization in the Civil War, but under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1884, and the acts amendatory thereof, he was, and is, recognized by the War Department as having been in the military service of the United States in the grade of captain of Company D of the regiment from January 30, 1864, and as having been discharged from service as such instead of as first lieutenant, the grade set forth in his discharge order.

It is stated on the records of the Second New York Cavalry that the officer was 20 years of age at the date of his enlistment; that he was born in Killingly, Conn., and was by occupation a teacher; that he was 6 feet high; and that he had light complexion, blue eyes, and light-brown hair.

The said Whitaker was duly appointed by the Governer of Connecticut to be a captain in the First Regiment Connecticut Cavalry Volunteers, to rank as such from April 23 or 25, 1864, and the receipt of the commission, as such, as indicated by a certificate, of which the following is a copy:

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION CAVALRY CORPS,
ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
OFFICE AID-DE-CAMP OF MUSTERS,
May 2, 1864.

I certify on honor that E. W. Whitaker, first lieutenant Company C, Second Regiment New York Cavalry, received May 1 from the governor of Connecticut a commission as captain in the First Regiment Connecticut Cavalry, bearing date April 25, and can be mustered in to date, May 1, 1864.

JACOB BRISTOL,
First Lieutenant, Fifth Michigan Cavalry,
Aid-de-Camp of Musters, Third Division Cavalry Corps,
Army of the Potomac.

Whitaker was mustered into service as captain in the First Connecticut Cavalry Volunteers May 3, 1864, at Stevensburg, Va., to serve three years, and entries appearing upon the individual muster-in roll, as such, show that he entered upon the performance of duty as captain on May 3, 1864, the date of the muster. He was assigned to Company E of the regiment, and on the records of the company he was accounted for as on detached service from May 3, 1864 (the date of his muster in as captain), as acting aid-de-camp on the staff of Gen. Wilson, then in command of the Third Division, Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac. On a record of the latter command for the month of May, 1864, Whitaker was accounted for as an acting aid-de-camp on the staff of the general commanding; in a communication dated June 2, 1864, he was referred to as such; and in a report dated July 4, 1864, relative to the part taken by the Cavalry Division in the expedition to destroy the Richmond & Danville Railroad, Brig. Gen. Kautz stated that during the night of June 23, 1864, "Capt. Whitaker, of Gen. Wilson's staff, reached me and reported the enemy in between our commands opposing his advance."

In a report relative to the part taken by troops under his command in an expedition against the South Side and Danville Railroads, dated July 3, 1864, and printed on pages 625–630, series 1, volume 40, part 1, of the publication mentioned hereinbefore, Gen. Wilson referred to Whitaker as follows:

"* * * The First Brigade was held on the road to Hungarytown in order that when Kautz's position became known exactly I might have choice of roads and the certainty of forming a junction with him. Capt. Whitaker, of my staff, was detached, with a squadron, to communicate with him. He carried orders for Kautz to join by the road from the railroad junction to Lewiston, in case he found it necessary to leave the railroad.

"The advance reached Wyllies burg by daylight on the morning of the 26th and halted. * * * Early the next morning the march was resumed, the column crossing the Meherrin at Saffold's Bridge and going thence east to Great Creek, on the Boydton Plank Road. From this place it moved to Poplar Mountain, in Greensville County, crossing the Nottoway at the Double Bridges, near the mouth of Hardwood Creek. I arrived there about noon on the 28th, where I learned that the enemy had a small force of infantry at Stony Creek Depot, on the Weldon road, and two small detachments of cavalry which had been cut off from Lee's division when we marched southward. The most diligent inquiry from the negroes and captured pickets gave no information of any other force. This, together with the fact that the road from Double Bridges to Prince George Courthouse passes two miles to the westward of Stony Creek Depot, induced me to take that route, and accordingly the advance was pushed forward with the utmost rapidity, with orders to drive in the reserve picket at the crossing of the road just mentioned and the one from Stony Creek Depot to Dinwiddie Court House and clear the road for the main column. This order was handsomely executed under the directions of Capt. Whitaker, of my staff, and state of affairs found to be nearly as represented. * * * In the meantime, anticipating difficulty of a serious nature, I endeavored to open communication with the infantry in front of Petersburg, and finally detached Capt. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, of my staff, with about 40 men of the veteran Third New York Cavalry. I have since learned he succeeded in reaching Army Headquarters about 10 a. m. On his way he gallantly rode through the enemy's cavalry and infantry columns in motion, escaping with 20 men. * * * The greatest credit is due to officers and men for their endurance, sleepless exertion, and gallantry. * * * My own staff, particularly Capt. Whitaker, First Connecticut Volunteers; * * * did their duty with great intelligence and unceasing industry."

With regard to military operations on June 24–29, 1864, Gen. Wilson in a report dated February 18, 1865 (published on pp. 620–625, same volume), referred to Whitaker as follows:

"* * * Just before daylight of the 24th, having heard of Kautz's success at Burkeville through Capt. Whitaker, of my staff, whom I sent to communicate with him, I withdrew from the position near Nottoway Court House and by a rapid march through Hungarytown struck the Danville Railroad near Meherrin Station. * * * I determined, therefore, to lose no time, but push on with rapidity to that place, drive the pickets back to the Stony Creek Depot, and under cover of darkness march the whole command as rapidly as possible toward Prince George Court House The advance guard, under the direction of Capt. Whitaker, of my staff, found the picket posted, as I expected, at the church, and by a spirited dash drove it toward the depot. This success had scarcely been reported before the enemy received reinforcements, and in turn drove back the advance guard to the head of the column. * * *

At 7 a. m., June 29, Gen. Kautz's advance arrived in the neighborhood of that place, but instead of finding it in the possession of the infantry of the Army of the Potomac found Hoke's division of rebel infantry strongly posted. He attacked them at one, but after capturing about 60 prisoners was compelled to withdraw his troops. By 9 a. m. the entire command was united. Having remained with McIntosh throughout the night, I did not arrive until about 8 a. m. I had previously sent Capt. Whitaker, of my staff, forward with instructions to make his way with the utmost rapidity to Gen. Meade's headquarters. * * * I confidently hoped that either the firing of our artillery or the message of Capt. Whitaker would bring troops to our assistance * * *."

Whitaker was also mentioned in other reports, pertinent extracts of which are as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
June 29, 1864—10.40 a. m.

Maj. Gen. MEADE,
Commanding Army of the Potomac,
at Gen. Burnside's Headquarters:

Capt. Whitaker, of Gen. Wilson's staff, reached here some 15 or 20 minutes ago. * * * Capt. Whitaker thinks that Wilson succeeded in following the trains and that his whole force is in the vicinity of Reams's Station and that the whole force of the enemy's cavalry have probably concentrated there. Will you send an infantry force there?

Major General and Chief of Staff.

Maj. Gen. MEADE,
Commanding Army of the Potomac,
at Gen. Burnside's Headquarters:

I should have added in my dispatch that Capt. Whitaker informs me that seeing an opening in the dust of the enemy's columns moving along a road near Reams's Station he forced his way through it, losing half his escort, 40 in number.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
June 29, 1864—1.40 p. m.

Maj. Gen. WRIGHT,
Commanding Sixth Corps:

Your dispatch received. The commanding general wishes you to follow your division with your whole corps as promptly as possible, leaving your pickets as they are posted. Capt. Whitaker, of Gen. Wilson's staff, who reported this morning, states that the cavalry that followed Wilson and opposed him on the Meherrin were commanded by W. H. F. Lee, and were composed of Chambliss's, formerly Lee's; Barringer's, formerly Gordon's; and Dearing's brigades; that besides this command another was concentrated at the crossing of Stony Creek (10 miles north of Reams's Station), which had been two days collecting from Petersburg, according to the statement of the people of the country. They took a prisoner from Rosser's brigade.

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Major General and Chief of Staff.

CITY POINT, July 1, 1864—2 p. m.
(Received 8.20 a. m.—2d.)

I have just seen Gen. Kautz and have obtained from him a clearer idea of the disaster to Wilson's Cavalry. It seems Wilson had been led to believe by a dispatch from Gen. Meade that our lines had extended around to the Appomattox, or at least across the Weldon Railroad. He was, accordingly, confident of finding our pickets at Reams's Station or near there. After he crossed the Sappony, on what is called the stage road, he was attacked by Hampton's Cavalry; fought them Tuesday afternoon and night between that stream and Stony Creek, relying all the while on aid from the Army of the Potomac, which he supposed to be in hearing of his cannon. One of his aides, Capt. Whitaker, also cut his way through with a company and reported the case at Gen. Meade's, but succor could not be got up in season. * * *

Maj. Gen. HUMPHREYS:

Capt. Whitaker, who is out with the Cavalry on the Dinwiddie Road, reports that at least four guns were carried off by the enemy, and prisoners claim to have seen seven on the way to Petersburg. Capt. W. can find no guns, but has discovered three or four limbers, which I have sent for. * * *

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY DIVISION,
Camp near Jones Neck, Va., July 4, 1864.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor herewith to submit my report of the operations of the division under my command in the expedition to destroy the Richmond & Danville Railroad. * * * During the night Capt. Whitaker, of Gen. Wilson's staff, reached me and reported the enemy in between our commands, opposing his advance. * * * Capt. Whitaker, of Gen Wilson's staff, volunteered to go through the enemy's lines with a company of Cavalry, and other scouts were started to go into our lines. * * *

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

AUGUST V. KAUTZ,
Brigadier General of Volunteers, Chief of Cavalry.

Capt. L. SIEBERT,
Assistant Adjutant General, Third Division, Cavalry Corps.

Copies of reports made by Whitaker on June 29 and 30, 1864, are as follows:

REAMS' PUMP, PETERSBURG & WELDON RAILROAD,
June 29, 1864—8.25 p. m.

[Gen. A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Chief of Staff.]

GENERAL: Gen. Wright's advance is now here and not engaged anywhere. The enemy's infantry are out 1 mile on the Dinwiddie Courthouse Road, reported to be one brigade strong, the other brigade that was here having gone toward Petersburg from here. All the enemy's cavalry have gone after Gen. Wilson, who, I believe, has been obliged to retire a long way, as I have heard a gun very distant west. I can not devise any way to find Gen. W[ilson]. Gen. Wright has a few Cavalry, but by night I can not take them through. Would respectfully beg that professional scouts be sent to communicate with him and his pursuers engaged in rear early. Knowing the exhausted and encumbered condition of his command and the force about him, I have the greatest anxiety for his safety.

I beg pardon for this irregularity, and am,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. W. WHITAKER,
Captain and Aid-de-Camp.

REAMS STATION, June 30, 1864—12.30 p. m.

Maj. Gen. HUMPHREYS,
Chief of Staff, Army of the Potomac.

GENERAL: In a reconnoissance toward Dinwiddie Courthouse, I have just learned that a train of 200 empty wagons passed the courthouse at 9 this a. m. going from Petersburg to Stony Creek after forage, "guarded by North Carolina Infantry, eight men to a wagon, with front and rear guard." The enemy's infantry have all moved toward Petersburg. Their cavalry have followed the road to left and south of Dinwiddie Courthouse, in which direction Gen. Wilson went. I have taken charge of the Cavalry with Gen. Wright, at his request, and am covering all roads on his front and flanks. Should you have no further orders for me, shall I not remain here, do and learn all I can, and report through or to Gen. Wright? My escort I left at your headquarters, being worn out; if now rested, they could be valuable with me. I am, General,

Very respectfully, your most humble and obedient servant,

E. W. WHITAKER,
Captain and Acting Aid-de-Camp.

(Printed, same volume, p. 526.)

On a record of the Third Division, Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac, for the month of June, 1864, Whitaker was reported as acting aid-de-camp on the staff of the commanding general, and on July 4, 1864, report was made to the Adjutant General of the Army, a pertinent extract of which is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS, THIRD DIVISION, CAVALRY CORPS,

Brig. Gen. L. THOMAS,
Adjutant General, United States Army,
Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: In pursuance of General Order No. 244, War Department, series of 1863, I have the honor to report the following-named officers on duty with me as aids-de-camp:

I have the honor to be, General,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. H. WILSON,
Brigadier General Commanding Division.

On July 9, 1864, an order was issued as follows:

[Special Orders, No. 53.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
City Point, Va., July 9, 1864.

1. Capt. E. W. Whitaker, of the Third Division, Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac, will proceed to Washington, D. C., and report to Brig. Gen. Casey, president of the Examining Board for Officers of United States Colored Troops, for examination.

* * * * * * *

By command of Lieut. Gen. Grant.

E. S. PARKER,
Assistant Adjutant General.

On the same day Hon. C. A. Dana, then Assistant Secretary of War, telegraphed to the War Department as follows:

FROM GRANT'S HEADQUARTERS, July 9, 1864.

Col. J. A. HARDIE:

Capt. Whitaker, of Wilson's staff, goes up to Washington, under orders from Gen. Grant, that he may present himself for examination before Casey's board; he wants to be a colonel of a black regiment, and from my own observation of him and the testimony of his officers he would make a first-rate one. If colonels are wanted for Burbridge's regiments in Kentucky, I would recommend him; you will oblige me by giving the necessary order for his examination or by speaking to the Secretary about him.

C. A. DANA.

It appears that Whitaker proceeded to Washington, D. C., and on July 11, 1864, an order was issued in his case as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF WASHINGTON,
Twenty-second Army Corps, July 11, 1864.

* * * * * * *

* * * * * * *

To the above, sir:

The major general commanding directs that you report for duty without delay to Col. William Gamble, Camp Stoneman.

Respectfully referred to Maj. Gen. Doubleday, in reference to communication just received.

In compliance with within order, 100 mounted men are about to march from here to Col. Lowell.

This takes every available mounted man in my command, save the 100 under Capt. Whitaker on picket in front of Forts Mahon and Meigs, whom I would respectfully ask to have relieved to enable me to comply with Gen. Augur's orders.

W. GAMBLE,
Colonel, Commanding Cavalry Division.

Lieut. Col. B. B. G. STONE,
Acting Aid-de-Camp and Chief of Staff.

COLONEL: Since the receipt of Gen. Doubleday's communication of this morning, saying that Capt. Whitaker and command had disappeared from in front of Forts Mahon and Meigs, the bearer of this has brought a dispatch from the captain asking for forage and rations. The orderly says that Capt. Whitaker is where he has been all the time, and that his line has not been changed. If you will send him duplicate of the orders sent by the orderly, who could not find him, this man will deliver them direct to the captain. Let him report here and I will supply him forage and rations.

I remain, very respectfully, W. GAMBLE,
Colonel, Commanding Cavalry Division.

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY DIVISION,
Camp Stoneman, 11 a. m.—July 14, 1864.

The above are all the mounted men in this camp able to do mounted duty, except orderlies.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. GAMBLE,
Colonel, Commanding Cavalry Division.

On July 16, 1864, Whitaker asked to be relieved from the duty on which he was then engaged, in a letter of which the following is a copy:

The next record found relating to the officer is an order of which the following is a copy:

1. The following-named officers are announced as composing the staff of the brigadier general commanding:

Capt. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, aid-de-camp.

* * * * * * *

They will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

By command of Brig. Gen. Wilson.

L. SIEBERT,
Assistant Adjutant General.

In a report dated February 18, 1865, and printed on pages 516–20, Volume VLIII, Part I, of the publication mentioned hereinbefore, relative to the part taken by the Third Division in the Shenandoah Valley campaign, Gen. Wilson referred to Whitaker as follows:

* * * * * * *

"In closing this report I have the honor to commend the zeal, gallantry, and soldierly conduct of both officers and men of the division throughout the entire period they remained under my command. * * * To * * * Capt. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, always prompt and gallant in the discharge of their duties, I am greatly indebted for the valuable assistance they have rendered me * * *."

From a report of Gen. Wilson, dated August 16, 1864, it appears that on the morning of that day Whitaker was directed to proceed to the headquarters of the Middle Military Division, then at or near Winchester, Va.

On August 20, 1864, an order was issued as follows:

[Special Orders, No. 78.]

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION CAVALRY CORPS,

* * * * * * *

II. In accordance with instructions from the brigadier general commanding Cavalry forces of the Middle Military Department, Capt. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, A. A. D. Torbert for detailed instructions.

By command of Brig. Gen. Wilson.

L. SIEBERT,
Acting Adjutant General.

On August 21, 1864, another order was issued, as follows:

[Special Orders, No. 11.]

One enlisted man can accompany him as orderly. The Quartermaster's Department will furnish the necessary transportation, to include two horses.

* * * * * * *

By command of Maj. Gen. Sheridan.

E. B. PARSONS,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Several letters, dated August 12, 1864, from officers of various commands, in which requests were made that certain men then on detached duty be returned to their regiments, were received at the headquarters of the Middle Military Division on August 23, 1864, and were returned to the writers on August 24, 1864, with indorsements as follows:

"Capt. Whitaker, of Gen. Wilson's staff, has been ordered to collect all detachments and forward them to their regiments."

With reference to the duties of Whitaker at this time, a communication, of which the following is a copy, is pertinent:

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION CAVALRY CORPS,
August 27, 1864.

Brig. Gen. MCINTOSH,
Commanding First Brigade.

GENERAL: The following extract from a letter from Capt. Whitaker, acting aid-de-camp, is furnished you for your guidance:

"WASHINGTON, August 24, 1864.

"Gen. Augur offered me all facilities in his power, with which I now only need a complete list, giving full names and whereabouts of every man in the forts and hospitals about this city. I obtained papers containing this list, but the same was in the form of applications for their return formally through Army headquarters, which were thus retained awaiting indorsements when I left."

The general desires you to have these lists made out as soon as possible and forward them. He also desires you to detail a commissioned officer to take charge of the guard stationed at the pike near the bridge, to examine papers of commissioned officers, and to order back all those without authority.

I am, General, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. SIEBERT,
Assistant Adjutant General.

A record of the Third Cavalry Division, Middle Military Division, dated August 31, 1864, near Berryville, Va., accounts for Whitaker as acting aid-de-camp on the staff of the general commanding, and he was so accounted for on a record of the same command, dated September 30, 1864, then stationed at Bridgewater, Va., but on the latter record he was also accounted for as "absent on duty at Camp Stoneman."

On October 1, 1864, an order was issued as follows:

[Special Orders, No. 45.]

HEADQUARTERS MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION,
Harrisonburg, Va., October 1, 1864.

1. The following-named officers of his staff will accompany Brig. Gen. Wilson to the Military Division of the Mississippi for duty:

* * * * * * *

* * * * * * *

By command of Maj. Gen. Sheridan.

C. KINGSBURY, Jr.,
Assistant Adjutant General.

In a communication dated October 28, 1864, Brig. Gen. Kilpatrick casually mentioned Whitaker as the bearer of reports showing the condition of the former's command.

In the meantime Whitaker was appointed by the governor of Connecticut to be a major in the First Connecticut Cavalry Volunteers, the commission reciting that he was to rank as such from September 14, 1864. He remained absent from the regiment in performance of duty as aid-de-camp on the staff of Gen. Wilson until relieved in an order of which the following is a copy:

[Special Orders, No. 7.]

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY CORPS,
MILITARY DIVISION OF THE MISSISSIPPI,

[Extract.]

* * * * * * *

X. Capt. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, having been promoted to the grade of major is, at his own request, detached from the staff of the major general commanding and will rejoin his regiment in the Shenandoah Valley.

The distinguished zeal, activity, and ability which Maj. Whitaker has displayed upon every occasion entitles him to the thanks and commendation of the major general commanding.

* * * * * * *

By command of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Wilson.

E. B. BEAUMONT,
Captain and Acting Assistant Adjutant General.

On November 7, 1864, Whitaker addressed a communication to superior authority, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY CORPS, M. D. M.,
November 7, 1864.

Capt. L. SEIBERT,
Assistant Adjutant General.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to make application for muster out as captain, Company E, First Connecticut Cavalry, and a special muster in as major, to date October 1, 1864, by virtue of receipt of commission as major in First Connecticut Cavalry, and being taken away when in act of reporting for duty by provisions of Special Order No. 45, Headquarters Middle Military Division, dated October 1, 1864. I am, captain,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. W. WHITAKER,
Captain Company E, First Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry,
Acting Assistant Division Commander.

An indorsement appears upon the foregoing communication, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY CORPS, M. D. M.,
Nashville, November 7, 1864.

The statement of Maj. Whitaker herein is correct. He should be mustered to date from October 1.

J. H. WILSON,
Brevet Major General.

On November 17, 1864, Whitaker addressed the Assistant Secretary of War as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., November 17, 1864—2.30 p. m.

Hon. CHARLES A. DANA,
Assistant Secretary of War.

DEAR SIR: I am en route to rejoin and assume command of my regiment in "Valley." Left Gen. Wilson at Nashville, Tenn. In consideration of the fact that my accompanying him West prevented my muster in in the grade of major under the usual muster regulations, he kindly advised me to apply to you for a special order, for which I make application in the inclosed communication bearing the general's indorsement. Permit me to note there is nothing complicated or any strife in this, as the vacancy has been long open, the regiment strong enough, etc. I am at present the only major in the regiment. I simply desire my muster to date when I should have reported if not for obeying an order of same date transferring me West. Perhaps the commissary of musters (it being more simple) could be ordered to muster me in for said date, providing other circumstances in the case admit.

Hoping you will pardon me for this intrusion on your valuable time,

I shall ever remain your most humble and obedient servant,

E. W. WHITAKER,
Major, First Connecticut Cavalry.

An indorsement appears upon the foregoing communication, as follows:

"Referred to Maj. Gen. Torbert, commanding Cavalry Corps, Middle Military Division, to direct the muster in of Maj. Whitaker, according to his request.

"By order of the Secretary of War.

"C. A. DANA,
"Assistant Secretary of War.

"WAR DEPARTMENT, November 18, 1864."

Whitaker joined the First Connecticut Cavalry Volunteers; entered upon duty as major thereof on November 22, 1864, and in a report of the commanding officer of the regiment dated December 9, 1864, and printed on pages 535–6, Volume XLIII, Part I, Series I, of the publication already mentioned, he was referred to as follows:

HEADQUARTERS FIRST CONNECTICUT CAVALRY,
December 9, 1864.

CAPTAIN: In obedience to orders from the colonel commanding the brigade, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the First Connecticut Cavalry since the 18th of October, 1864:

* * * * * * *

On the 13th the regiment went with the division on a reconnoissance toward Cedar Creek, returned the same day, and continued in camp till the 17th, when Capt. Morehouse was ordered to make a reconnoissance to Middletown. Finding no enemy, he returned to camp and remained till the 21st instant. He then started for Remount Camp, Pleasant Valley, Md., having in his charge the unserviceable horses of the brigade. He camped near Martinsburg that night and reached the camp on the 22d instant. Here Maj. Whitaker assumed command of the regiment, and worked diligently for the next three days in providing the men with such articles as they required.

* * * * * * *

Very truly, your obedient servant,

BRAYTON IVES,
Lieutenant Colonel Commanding Regiment.

On November 25, 1864, Whitaker telegraphed the Assistant Secretary of War, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS FIRST CONNECTICUT CAVALRY,
PLEASANT VALLEY, MD.,
November 25, 1864.

Hon. C. A. DANA,
Assistant Secretary:

Please inform by telegraph—Yes—if my muster was order to date October 1, 1864.

E. W. WHITAKER,
Major Comanding Regiment.

A letter was addressed to Whitaker on November 26, 1864, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 26, 1864.

Capt. E. W. WHITAKER,
First Connecticut Cavalry.

SIR: I am directed to inform you that upon application to the proper commissary of musters he will muster you into service as major, First Connecticut Cavalry, to date October 1, 1864, provided the following conditions be complied with:

First. You will satisfy the commissary of musters that you were in receipt of your commission at the date from which muster is requested.

Second. You will furnish him with a copy of Special Orders No. 45, Headquarters M. M. D., under which you were detached from your regiment, and show clearly that it was not from negligence or delay on your part that you failed to be mustered at that time.

Third. This muster must not in any way conflict with the provisions of General Orders No. 182, series of 1863, from this office.

If the muster be made in accordance herewith, the commissary of musters will file a copy of this communication and your replies hereto with the muster-in rolls.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOMAS M. VINCENT,
Assistant Adjutant General.

In connection with the foregoing, Whitaker wrote a letter on December 3, 1864, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS FIRST CONNECTICUT CAVALRY,
FIRST BRIGADE, THIRD CAVALRY, DIVISION M. M. D.,
December 3, 1864.

Capt. BARNHARD,
Assistant Commissary of Musters.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor, in compliance with requirements of communication from The Adjutant General's office, dated November 26, 1864, of which a copy is herewith appended, to state that I received my appointment before October 1, 1864, by mail via Washington, D. C., where I was serving on detached duty under the provisions of Special Orders, No. 11, Ex. 2, from Headquarters Mid. Mil. Div.

Having completed the duties assigned me in Washington, I was en route to rejoin my command in the "Valley," October 1, 1864, and was within a few miles of my regiment when met by Gen. Wilson bearing Special Orders, No. 45, from Headquarters M. M. D., dated October 1, 1864, of which a copy is appended.

I certify that I made every effort to get mustered, but could not be granted time to go to mustering officer, as I was not given even time to dismount at the front which I had reached by a four days' march and compelled to return at once en route west in obedience to inclosed orders.

I am, Captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. W. WHITAKER,
Captain First Connecticut Cavalry.

The records of the First Connecticut Cavalry Volunteers account for Whitaker as captain of Company E thereof until December 5, 1864, when he was mustered out of service as such, to date from September 30, 1864, to enable him to avail himself of promotion; and on the same day, December 5, 1864, he was mustered into service as a major of the regiment, at Kernstown, Va., to date from October 1, 1864. However, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1884, and the acts amendatory thereof, he was, and is, recognized by the War Department as having been in the military service of the United States as a major of the First Connecticut Cavalry Volunteers, to take effect from September 14, 1864.

On December 8, 1864, Whitaker was detailed for duty in an order, as follows:

* * * * * * *

By command of Col. A. C. M. Pennington, commanding division.

L. SIEBERT,
Assistant Adjutant General.

In the meantime Whitaker was appointed by the governor of Connecticut to be lieutenant colonel of the regiment to rank as such from January 11, 1865. He was mustered out of service as major to date from January 16, 1865, to enable him to accept promotion, and on January 17, 1865, he was mustered into service as lieutenant colonel of the same regiment, at Winchester, Va.

Copies of communications dated January 27, 1865, relating to this officer, are as follows:

* * * * * * *

Very respectfully, etc.,

L. SIEBERT,
Assistant Adjutant General.

In his report of the Shenandoah Valley campaign, dated February 3, 1866, and printed on pages 40–57 of the volume last mentioned hereinbefore, Gen. Sheridan mentioned Whitaker in terms as follows:

* * * * * * *

"On the 5th of February Harry Gilmor, who appeared to be the last link between Maryland and the Confederacy, and whose person I desired in order that this link might be severed, was made prisoner near Moorefield, his capture being very skillfully made by Col. (error, major and my guide only) Young, my chief of scouts, and a party under Lieut. Col. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, sent to support him. Gilmor and Mosby carried on the same style of warfare, running trains off railways, robbing the passengers, etc."

* * * * * * *

Again, Whitaker was mentioned in connection with the same incident, as follows:

WINCHESTER, VA., February 6, 1865.
(Received 1.50 p. m.)

Maj. Gen. H. W. HALLECK,
Chief of Staff:

A small party, under command of Lieut. Col. Whitaker, sent out by Gen. Merritt to break up Harry Gilmor's band, at a point south of Moorefield, was quite successful. Maj. Young, of my staff and chief of scouts, captured Harry Gilmor and (did not bring him in) brought him in.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major General, Commanding.

Whitaker made a report of the affair as follows:

CAMP OF FIRST CONNECTICUT CAVALRY, NEAR WINCHESTER, VA.,
February 8, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that, pursuant to instructions from general commanding corps, I collected my command for special duty, armed with sabers and pistols, and numbering 300, all from the Third Division Cavalry, at headquarters First Brigade, at 6 a. m., the 4th instant, and moved out on the Moorefield Pike for our destination. After halting three-quarters of an hour for feed and coffee at Wardensville, organized the detachments into a regiment, and having a short drill resumed the march at a rapid gait, striking the enemy's scouts, which Maj. Young quickly drove off the pike toward Harper's; column moving fast as possible, intending to surprise the enemy's camp by moonlight, but at 12.30 at night when we had reached a covered point within 4 miles of Moorefield, the sky clouded up, which induced me to halt for rest and feed until 4 a. m. the 5th instant. In the meantime Maj. Young, who had been a short distance in my advance, was to send his scouts into town and ascertain the exact location of Gilmor's camp, which I had decided to strike at daylight. On moving out at 4 a. m., Capt. Hamilton, Eighth New York Cavalry, reported to me the loss of two men by desertion during the halt; the men being recent recruits from rebel States, I deemed it a more unfortunate event than the next fact which was reported by Maj. Young, i. e., his scouts had not been able to learn the exact whereabouts of Gilmor or his camp. Reaching the outskirts of Moorefield before light during a heavy snow squall, I halted to await news from Maj. Young, who entered town with all of his party in search of information. I here became anxious about the loss of time and moved on, sending word to the major that he should go on down the South Fork till I found the enemy. I left a detachment from the Second Ohio Cavalry to search the town for soldiers, and moved at once across the stream and turned to the left down the South Fork, Maj. Young taking the advance, when, as it had become light enough, I discovered several of the enemy mounted and rapidly moving across the fields and hills on our right flank, taking the same direction as my column.

On communicating the fact to the scouts a lively race set in, I following with my column in hopes of reaching their camp before the alarm, which it would appear had not before been given. The houses on the banks of the fork were being hastily searched by the scouts, when the large number of horses in the stable next the road to Mr. Randolph's house, 3 miles from Moorefield, excited much suspicion; and as Maj. Young asked the colored woman sternly, "What soldiers were in the houses?" she at once replied, "Maj. Gilmor is upstairs." Maj. Young immediately surrounded the house and seized the major and his cousin Gilmor, late from Baltimore, both in bed. On my learning that our prize had been found I halted column and prepared to resist the attack of the enemy collecting on the bluff over the house and river and on my right flank and rear. Finding the position untenable and deeming it impossible to get more of Gilmor's band from their skillfully selected position, we made haste in getting out, before which Maj. Gilmor had been brought to me and placed at the head of the column; and as his men were firing into us, he shouted encouragement to them, feeling, as he afterwards said, confident of release. On the return march I placed Lieut. Brown, First Connecticut Cavalry, with 38 men who had been doing good service on the Petersburg Road, in the rear, he having 15 Spencers for that use, with which he successfully checked each dash of the enemy. I took the Romney Pike by advice of Maj. Young, who took the advance, and turned over to me at different points on the route 12 men captured about houses. The enemy last troubled my column as we were feeding at a point 35 miles from Moorefield and 8 from Romney. Though night had come on I did not think it wise to halt with prisoners, but resumed the march in passing Hanging Rock Gap and reached Big Capon Bridge after midnight, when we halted for rest until daylight, the 6th instant, on the forenoon of which I reached Winchester with prisoners, having ridden near 140 miles in a little over 48 hours, over a mountainous country, across swollen streams filled with floating ice, and within the enemy's lines, fully accomplishing the object of the expedition without the loss of a man.

I can not commend too highly the zeal and hearty cooperation evinced by Maj. Young, commanding Gen. Sheridan's scouts, who accompanied me. To his personal gallantry is due the successful "boarding of the lion in his den."

To the officers commanding the detachments from the Second Ohio, Eighth New York, First New Hampshire, Twenty-second New York, and First Connecticut Cavalry Regiments, I desire to express my thanks for prompt obedience to orders and strict attention to the care of their commands, on which I confidently relied in anticipation of a better test than was offered. To Surg. G. A. Hurlbut, First Connecticut Cavalry, who accompanied me with ambulance, attendants, etc., I owe much for valuable assistance rendered outside of his duties. He safely brought in two sick men and one accidentally wounded, who were unable to ride.

Respectfully submitted.

E. W. WHITAKER,
Lieutenant Colonel First Connecticut Cavalry,
Commanding Expedition.

Maj. WILLIAM RUSSELL, Jr.
Assistant Adjutant General.

Whitaker was recommended for special duty in a letter, as follows:

Maj. WILLIAM RUSSELL, Jr.,

MAJOR: In accordance from instructions from the Chief of Cavalry just received, I have the honor to recommend Lieut. Col. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, to the position of division inspector, in place of Maj. E. M. Pope, ordered on recruiting service.

Very respectfully, etc.,

G. A. CUSTER,
Brevet Major General Commanding.

On the same day an order was issued as follows:

[Orders.]

HEADQUARTERS THIRD CAVALRY DIVISION,
February 11, 1865.

Division field officer of the day, February 12, 1865: Lieut. Col. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, to report at 10 o'clock a. m.

By command of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Custer.

The officer was detailed for special duty in an order as follows:

[Special Orders No. 145.]

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY, MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION,
February 12, 1865.

1. Lieut. Col. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, is hereby detailed as assistant adjutant inspector general, Third Cavalry Division, vice Lieut. Col. E. M. Pope, detailed on recruiting service. Lieut. Col. Whitaker will report in person without delay to Bvt. Maj. Gen. Custer, commanding.

By command of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Merritt.

WM. RUSSELL, Jr.,
Assistant Adjutant General.

On February 13, 1865, a regimental order was issued in the name of this officer, as lieutenant colonel commanding First Connecticut Cavalry, and he signed orders issued on February 16, 18, 19, and 23, 1865, from the headquarters of the Third Cavalry Division, as lieutenant colonel of the First Connecticut Cavalry Volunteers and acting assistant inspector general.

In a communication dated February 21, 1865, Whitaker was mentioned as follows:

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION CAVALRY,
February 21, 1865.

Col. PENNINGTON,
Commanding First Brigade:

Gen. Crook, Gen. Kelley, and other officers were captured last night by about 60 men belonging to McNeill's command. The force were hurrying toward Romney. The chief of cavalry directs that a force be sent immediately from this division to intercept them, if possible. Have 300 of your best mounted men get ready at once, with two days' rations and one of forage. I would suggest that the men be selected from the different regiments. Do not detail an officer of higher rank than major to accompany the expedition, as Lieut. Col. Whitaker will go in command. Have the men rendezvous at your headquarters.

Very respectfully, etc.,

G. A. CUSTER,
Brevet Major General, Commanding.

The result of the attempt to recapture the general officers is set forth in a report as follows:

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION CAVALRY,
MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION,
February 23, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that pursuant to instructions from general commanding division to recapture general officers taken by enemy at Cumberland, Md., early the 21st instant, I moved at 9 a. m. that day, with 340 men, for Moorefield, Va., which point I reached at 1.30 p. m. the 22d instant, and there learned that the enemy, with important prisoners, had crossed the Moorefield and Winchester pike 2 miles from town at about 1 p. m. the 21st instant, and that a party of Federal cavalry from New Creek were in the town immediately after but had returned. I at once sent an officer to communicate with the latter force—the camp fires could be seen about 5 miles out of Moorefield—and then returned to the trail of the enemy, which I carefully examined and found to have been made by about 50 mounted men in crossing my route, apparently in haste, obliquely, and from northwest to southeast, from a wooded path on my right down a steep declivity into woods on my left. Here obtaining conclusive proof that the trail was made at or about 1 p. m. the previous day, giving the enemy over 12 hours in my advance, I decided to not pursue, my horses having been badly jaded in breaking a foot of snow over the mountains and in consideration of the prospects of not overtaking the enemy till he had reached assistance in the valley. The citizens stated he had discovered the near approach of the New Creek Cavalry. The prospect of rain induced me to return rapidly campward, via the Back Creek road.

The officer whom I sent to communicate with the New Creek Cavalry soon rejoined me, with verbal statement from Col. Greenfield, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry, to the effect that his advance, 400 men, under a major, had seen the enemy with prisoners between 1 and 2 p. m. the day previous moving off from the Romney and Moorefield pike, with such an accession to their numbers as to make an attack on them hazardous; therefore he had not attacked them, but desired to cooperate with me if I was about to pursue. I had moved out too far to return a reply, and still continued march, with occasional annoyances from bushwhackers in rear, to Cacapon bridge, where bivouacked last night, arriving in camp at noon to-day after much trouble in crossing the rapidly swelling streams.

My loss was none except in horses, a few. Four of enemy taken prisoners en route.

I desire to express my thanks to Maj. McClong, Third New Jersey Cavalry, and Lieut. Haswell, Gen. Custer's escort, First Vermont Cavalry, for zealous aid and hearty cooperation in efforts to accomplish the object of the expedition, which I much regret to report a failure.

I am, Captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. W. WHITAKER,
Lieutenant Colonel First Connecticut Cavalry,
Acting Assistant Inspector General Third Division Cavalry.

Capt. L. SIEBERT,
Assistant Adjutant General

A record of the Third Cavalry Division, Middle Military Division, for the month of February, 1865, accounts for this officer as acting assistant inspector general on the staff of the general commanding.

In a report of Gen. Merritt relative to operations of Cavalry forces, dated May 7, 1865, and printed on pages 484 to 488, part 1, Volume XLVI, same publication as the one referred to hereinbefore, Whitaker was referred to as follows:

* * * * * * *

"March 2, the command arriving at Staunton, a force was detached from the First Division to go to Swoopes Station, where it was reported the enemy had stored supplies of war. This expedition found immense quantities of commissary, quartermaster's, and ordnance stores, which it destroyed. The main column, the Third Division in advance, moved toward Waynesborough, where the enemy was found, strongly posted behind barricades and rifle pits. Gen. Custer, after engaging the enemy's artillery with his own for a short time, moved three regiments, under direction of Col. Whitaker, First Connecticut, to the left flank and rear of the enemy, and routed him, with the loss of but 3 or 4 men to our command, capturing over 1,000 prisoners, the enemy's artillery and wagon train, containing all the wardrobe, papers, etc., of the officers of Early's depleted army. This event opened the roads for unresisted advance on the James River and all the roads and means of supply north of Richmond. All the captures which could not be carried away were destroyed. The prisoners and some few pieces of artillery were ordered back to Winchester, under a mounted guard of about 1,500 mounted and dismounted men. under Col. Thompson, First New Hampshire Cavalry."

* * * * * * *

Gen. Custer, in a report dated March 20, 1865, and printed on pages 501 to 504, same volume, stated as follows:

HEADQUARTERS THIRD CAVALRY DIVISION,
MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION,
White House, Va., March 20, 1865.

I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command since February 27, 1865. * * * On the 2d we moved to Staunton, where the command was halted for a short interval. In accordance with verbal orders received from the major general commanding the expedition I then marched toward Waynesborough. * * * Our march was necessarily slow. Upon reaching Fishersville, 6 miles from Staunton, our advance struck the enemy's pickets and drove them in the direction of Waynesborough. Upon arriving at the latter point we found the enemy in force, posted behind a formidable line of earthworks. * * * A careful reconnaissance along his entire line convinced me that the enemy had a heavy force of infantry behind his work, while 10 pieces of artillery were in position and completely covered his front. But one point seemed favorable for attack. The enemy's left flank, instead of resting on South River, was thrown well forward, leaving a short gap between his left and the river. The approach to this point could be made under cover of the woods. I directed Lieut. Col. Whitaker, of my staff, to conduct three regiments of Pennington's brigade to our extreme right. Selecting three regiments armed with Spencer carbines, they were moved, dismountd under cover of the woods, to the point previously indicated, where they were held in readiness to charge the enemy's left. * * * With reference to the conduct of the officers and men of my command throughout the entire expedition, both when engaged with the enemy and while on the march, I have nothing but words of the highest praise and commendation to offer. As a special report will be made, making mention of those who are particularly deserving and meritorious, none of the many instances of personal gallantry and merit as displayed on the late expedition, are mentioned in this report.

I am, very respectfully, yours, etc.,

G. A. CUSTER,
Brevet Major General.

Capt. E. M. BAKER,
Acting Assistant Adjutant General,
Cavalry, Middle Military Division.

In a report dated March 19, 1865, and printed on pages 504–508, same volume, the officer is referred to as follows:

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
THIRD DIVISION, CAVALRY CORPS,
Near White House Landing, Va., March 19, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my brigade during the recent cavalry expedition from February 27 to present date: * * * The First Connecticut Cavalry, commanded on this occasion by Lieut. Col. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, acting assistant inspector general, Third Cavalry Division, sent out a reconnaissance of one squadron toward the enemy from the right of my line, while a battalion of the Second New York moved down the Telegraph Road. The squadron of the First Connecticut, accompanied by Lieut. Col. Whitaker, was ambushed by infantry and cavalry, losing one officer (Lieut. J. W. Clark) killed and two men missing. This reconnaissance ascertained that the enemy were in force, and that they had both infantry and cavalry. * * *

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. C. M. PENNINGTON,
Colonel Commanding Brigade.

Capt. L. W. BARNHART,
Acting Assistant Adjutant General,
Third Division, Cavalry Corps.

Whitaker applied for leave of absence in a letter as follows:

HEADQUARTERS THIRD CAVALRY DIVISION,
White House, Va., March 23, 1865.

Lieut. Col. F. H. NEWHALL,
Assistant Adjutant General.

COLONEL: I have the honor to make application for five days' leave of absence to visit Georgetown, D. C., and permission to apply for five days' extension, should it be necessary, and my command unengaged. Reason: The most important private business, which if longer postponed will compel me to leave the service. Have not received the benefit of leave of absence since January, 1864.

I am, Colonel,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. E. WHITAKER,
Lieutenant Colonel First Connecticut Infantry,
Acting Assistant Inspector General.

The application was returned with indorsement: "Not granted for the present."

A record of the Third Cavalry Division, Middle Military Division, for the month of March, 1865, accounts for Whitaker as acting assistant inspector general on the staff of the general commanding.

On April 16, 1865, Whitaker applied for leave of absence for 15 days. The leave was granted, and on April 19, 1865, an order was issued as follows:

[Special Orders, No. 20.]

HEADQUARTERS THIRD CAVALRY DIVISION,

(Extract.)

2. During the temporary absence of Lieut. Col. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, acting assistant inspector general, the duties of that department will be performed by Col. E. M. Pope, Eighth New York Cavalry. He will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

* * * * * * *

By command of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Custer, acting adjutant general.

Gen. Sheridan, in a letter to the Secretary of War dated April 19, 1865, and published on pages 1111–1114 of the volume last mentioned hereinbefore, recommended that certain officers be promoted or brevetted, Whitaker being referred to as follows:

* * * * * * *

"Lieut. Col. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry [acting], assistant inspector general, Third Cavalry Division, to be brevet brigadier general of Volunteers for gallantry and skill displayed in turning the enemy's left flank at Waynesborough March 2, 1865, and for gallantry and uniform good conduct at the Battles of Five Forks, April 1, and Appomattox Station, April 8, 1865, and throughout the entire campaign."

An order was issued on April 21, 1865, as follows:

[General Orders, No. 22.]

HEADQUARTERS THIRD CAVALRY DIVISION,
April 21, 1865.

The brevet major general commanding hereby announces the following staff officers of the division: Lieut. Col. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, acting assistant inspector general. * * * They will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

By command of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Custer, Assistant Adjutant General.

On April 28, 1865, the governor of Connecticut addressed a letter to the Secretary of War as follows:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Norwich, April 28, 1865.

SIR: I am informed that Lieut. Col. E. W. Whitaker, of the First Connecticut Cavalry, has been strongly recommended by Gens. Sheridan and Custer for promotion to the rank of brevet brigadier general.

I take great pleasure in adding my testimony as to the valor and merits of Col. Whitaker.

I am, with high consideration,
Your obedient servant,

WM. A. BUCKINGHAM,
Governor of Connecticut.

Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

(NOTE.—No record has been found of the recommendation referred to as having been made by Gen. Custer.)

Hon. L. F. S. Foster, then Senator from the State of Connecticut, addressed the Secretary of War on April 29, 1865, by letter as follows:

NORWICH, CONN., April 29, 1865.

SIR: I would respectfully recommend Col. E. W. Whitaker, of the First Connecticut Cavalry, for promotion to the rank of brevet brigadier general. He enlisted as a private in the first regiment raised in this State, served out his three months, reenlisted, and has worked his way to his present position by sheer merit. He is well educated, thoroughly correct in his habits, and of excellent character. As an officer he is bold and dashing without rashness; in a word, an accomplished soldier. Gens. Sheridan and Custer both recommend him strongly. May I not hope that he will be recommended? With great respect, I am,

Your obedient servant,

L. F. S. FOSTER.

Mr. Secretary STANTON.

On May 19, 1865, Whitaker was appointed brigadier general of Volunteers, by brevet, apparently upon the recommendation of Gen. Sheridan of April 19, 1865, as set forth hereinbefore, and he was notified of the appointment in a letter as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 19, 1865.

SIR: You are hereby informed that the President of the United States has appointed you, for gallantry and uniform good conduct, a brigadier general of Volunteers, by brevet, in the service of the United States, to rank as such from the 13th day of March, 1865. Should the Senate at their next session advise and consent thereto you will be commissioned accordingly.

Immediately on receipt hereof please to communicate to this department, through The Adjutant General's Office, your acceptance or nonacceptance of said appointment, and with your letter of acceptance return to The Adjutant General of the Army the oath herewith inclosed, properly filled up, subscribed and attested, reporting at the same time your age, residence when appointed, and the State in which you were born.

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. E. W. WHITAKER,
United States Volunteers (through Maj. Gen. Sheridan).

Upon receipt thereof Whitaker forwarded the usual oath of office and a statement as to his age, birthplace, and residence, with a letter, of which the following is a copy:

HEADQUARTERS THIRD CAVALRY DIVISION,
ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
May 22, 1865.

Brig. Gen. E. D. TOWNSEND, Adjutant General.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt and acceptance of the appointment of brigadier general of Volunteers, by brevet, under date of May 19, 1865, and to forward herewith the oath of office subscribed and attested together with report giving age, birthplace, etc.

I have the honor, General, to be,
Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. W. WHITAKER,
Lieutenant Colonel First Connecticut Cavalry,
Brevet Brigadier General Volunteers.

It appears that in the meantime Whitaker was on duty as Acting Assistant Inspector General on the staff of the general commanding the Third Cavalry Division from April 21, 1865, until the issue of an order as follows:

[General Orders, No. 2.]

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY CORPS,
DEPARTMENT OF WASHINGTON,
May 25, published May 30, 1865.

The major general comamnding announces the following-named officers as composing his staff:

Bvt. Brig. Gen. E. W. Whitaker, Assistant Inspector General and Chief of Staff.

* * * * * * *

By command of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Davies.

THOS. C. LEBO,
Acting Assistant Adjutant General.

On May 25, 1865, an order was issued as follows:

[Special Orders, No. 33.]

HEADQUARTERS THIRD CAVALRY DIVISION,
May 25, 1865.

Bvt. Maj. M. A. Stone, First Vermont Cavalry, is hereby detailed for duty at these headquarters as acting assistant inspector general of the Third Cavalry Division. He will report to Bvt. Brig. Gen. Whitaker, Acting Assistant Inspector General, Cavalry Corps, to-morrow morning at 8 o'clock a. m. for instructions.

By command of Brig. Gen. Capehart.

H. M. BURLEIGH,
Assistant Adjutant General.

In a letter dated May 30, 1865, Whitaker wrote to Brig. Gen. Wells, commanding the Third Division of Cavalry, making inquiry as to the name of an officer "whom you spoke of to me as one who would make a good staff officer."

A record of the Cavalry Corps, Department of Washington, for the month of May, 1865, dated near Alexandria, Va., June 19, 1865, accounts for this officer as acting assistant inspector general on the staff of the commanding general, with entries showing that he was appointed May 25, 1865, and joined the same day.

On June 11, 1865, the officer received leave of absence in an order as follows:

[Special Orders, No. 18.]

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY CORPS,
DEPARTMENT OF WASHINGTON,
June 11, 1865.

* * * * * * *

3. Leave of absence is granted to the following-named officers:

Bvt. Brig. Gen. E. W. Whitaker, Assistant Inspector General and Chief of Staff, Cavalry Corps, for five days.

* * * * * * *

(NOTE.—Order not signed, but previous order, dated June 10, 1865, signed by command of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Davies, W. Harper, jr., Major and Acting Assistant Adjutant General.)

A record of the Cavalry Corps, Department of Washington, for the month of June, 1865, dated at Clouds Mill, July 1, 1865, accounts for Whitaker as Assistant Inspector General and Chief of Staff of the general commanding.

On July 11, 1865, Whitaker addressed a communication to superior authority, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY CORPS,
DEPARTMENT OF WASHINGTON,
July 11, 1865.

Col. T. S. BOWERS,
Assistant Adjutant General, United States Army.

COLONEL: I have the honor to apply for assignment to duty with brevet rank in any division, department, or district it may please the Lieutenant General Commanding the Armies of the United States to designate.

Would respectfully beg leave to state that I have served during the whole war in extreme front; that I am taking steps to enter the regular service with recommendations from Gens. Sheridan, Custer, Wilson, Kilpatrick, Davies, Crook, and Kautz; and that the duties of attending the muster out and breaking up of the Cavalry Corps, on which I have been retained by order of Gen. Auger, is nearly complete.

I am, Colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. W. WHITAKER,
Brevet Brigadier General, United States Volunteers,
Acting Inspector General and Chief of Staff,
Lieutenant Colonel First Connecticut Cavalry.

The letter of July 11, 1865, was forwarded, recommended, by the commanding officer of the Cavalry Corps, Department of Washington, and was forwarded to the Headquarters of the Army by the department commander without recommendation. Nothing has been found of record to show the action finally taken on the application.

On July 18, 1865, an order was issued, a pertinent extract of which is as follows:

[Special Orders, No. 173.]

HEADQUARTERS, DEPARTMENT OF WASHINGTON,
Washington, D. C., July 18, 1865.

* * * * * * *

7. The Cavalry Corps having been discontinued by the muster out of regiments composing the same, all officers and enlisted men heretofore on detached duty with said corps, unless otherwise ordered, will at once joint their proper regiments.

Under the provisions of General Orders, No. 106, of June 2, 1865, War Department, Adjutant General's Office, all general and General Staff officers heretofore serving with the Cavalry Corps of this department, unless otherwise ordered by higher authority, will proceed to their respective homes, and thence report by letter to The Adjutant General of the Army.

The commanding officer of the Cavalry Corps will report to these headquarters the names and residences of the officers relieved by this order.

By command of Maj. Gen. C. C. Augur.

R. CHANDLER,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Following is a copy of an order relative to this officer issued on July 20, 1865:

[Special Orders, No. 175.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF WASHINGTON,
TWENTY-SECOND ARMY CORPS,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1865.

Leave of absence for 10 days is granted to Bvt. Brig. Gen. E. W. Whitaker, of the First Regiment of Connecticut Cavalry, to enable him to proceed to Connecticut on important private business.

At the expiration of this time he will report to the chief mustering officer of his State.

By command of Maj. Gen. Augur.

R. CHANDLER,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Whitaker reported, as directed in the second paragraph of the foregoing order, in a letter, as follows:

ALLYN HOUSE,
Hartford, Conn., July 28, 1865.

Lieut. Col. C. C. GILBERT,
Chief Mustering Officer, State of Connecticut.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report to you, in compliance with a paragraph from a special order No. 175, dated July 20, 1865, from headquarters, Quartermasters Department of Washington, which grants me a leave of absence for 10 days. At the expiration of the 10 days, which is day after to-morrow, the 30th instant, it was expected that the First Connecticut Cavalry would have arrived here for muster out. That regiment is still detained on duty, from which it may be relieved any day.

I would respectfully request orders or instructions at your earliest convenience.

I am, Colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. W. WHITAKER,
Brevet Brigadier General,
Lieutenant Colonel First Connecticut Cavalry.

The letter of July 28, 1865, was duly received at the office of the chief mustering officer for Connecticut. Nothing has been found of record to show what action, if any, was taken thereon, but, as recited hereinafter, it appears that Whitaker remained in the State until the arrival there of the First Connecticut Cavalry.

In a letter dated at Ashford, Conn., August 3, 1865, Whitaker reported to the War Department for orders, and on August 19, 1865, he was advised that as his regiment had been mustered out of service he should apply to the chief mustering officer for the State for his discharge papers.

The regiment was mustered out of the military service of the United States August 2, 1865, at Washington, D. C. The muster-out roll of the field and staff accounts for Whitaker at the time as absent from the regiment with leave, but, nevertheless, under the terms of orders then in force, he was honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on that date by reason of the muster out of the regiment, and information furnished by the Treasury Department shows that he was finally paid on the muster-out roll mentioned at New Haven, Conn., August 17, 1865.

On August 22, 1865, an order was issued from the War Department, pertinent extracts from which are as follows:

[General Orders, No. 133.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, August 22, 1865.

Appointments by brevet in the Armies of the United States made by the President since the publication of General Orders, No. 97, of May 26, 1865:

* * * * * * *

Volunteer force.

* * * * * * *

To be brigadier generals by brevet.

* * * * * * *

Col. E. W. Whitaker, of the First Connecticut Cavalry, for gallantry and uniform good conduct, to date from March 13, 1865.

* * * * * * *

By order of the Secretary of War:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

The nomination of the officer as brevet brigadier general of Volunteers was presented to the United States Senate for consideration; was confirmed by that body on March 12, 1866, and thereupon the usual commission was issued on April 9, 1866, entries appearing therein showing that the appointment was to date from March 13, 1865, and was granted "for gallantry and uniform good conduct." The commission was sent to the governor of Connecticut May 12, 1866, for delivery to the officer.

Gen. Whitaker alleges that he participated in 82 different engagements of the Civil War, and has submitted to this department a list of such engagements, a few less in number, but it is impossible to ascertain from the records in the department whether or not he participated in all of those engagements, because the official records do not, as a rule, show all the engagements in which an officer or enlisted man participated, and no such complete data have been found of record in the case of this officer. When specifically mentioned in connection with any particular engagement, such mention is, of course, evidence of participation, but as the records pertaining to military services in that war were usually made out monthly or bimonthly and do not show engagements in which individuals took part, the department has no means of obtaining definite information regarding individual participation in engagements, even though the organization took part therein, unless the individual is specifically mentioned in connection therewith, or unless it should happen that the organization engaged in some action on the very date of the monthly or bimonthly record, in which event the presence of a man with the organization on that date would indicate participation. Then the fact that an organization engaged in certain battles, coupled with the additional fact that there is nothing in the records to show that the officer or enlisted man was absent at the time, is also an indication of individual participation, although not conclusive.

Following is a list of engagements submitted to this department by Gen. Whitaker in which he alleges that he took part. Opposite each engagement will be found the letter A, B, C, or D; the letter A indicating that the officer is mentioned specifically as having participated in that engagement; the letter B indicating that, by reason of his stations or duties, he probably participated in that engagement; the letter C indicating that nothing has been found of record in this department showing or tending to show that he was a participant in that engagement; and the letter D indicating that no record has been found in the War Department of any engagement at the time and place mentioned.

On April 4, 1866, Maj. Gen. P. H. Sheridan addressed the Secretary of War as follows:

HEADQUARTERS, MILITARY DIVISION OF THE GULF,
New Orleans, La., April 4, 1866.

To the Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a list of officers of the Regular and Volunteer service whose promotion or appointment in the Regular Army upon its reorganization, I would suggest and recommend for gallant and meritorious services during the Rebellion.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major General, United States Army.

Accompanying the letter of April 4, 1866, was a list bearing the name of E. W. Whitaker, with the recommendation that he be appointed captain of Cavalry.

In a letter dated October 13, 1866, Gen. U. S. Grant addressed the Secretary of Was as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, October 13, 1866.

Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith lists of recommendations for company officers of Infantry and Cavalry.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT, General.

Accompanying the letter of October 13, 1866, was a list bearing the name of E. W. Whitaker, with the recommendation that he be appointed captain of Cavalry.

Again, on October 17, 1866, Gen. Grant addressed the Secretary of War as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, October 17, 1866.

Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

SIR: In view of the facts that the Seventh Regiment of Cavalry is already nearly full and yet is almost without company officers, that the men will desert rapidly unless company officers are appointed, and that the regiment is needed at once for service against the Indians, I would urgently recommend that the company officers be appointed without delay. I submit a special list of recommendations for company officers of this regiment herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT, General.

In the list accompanying the letter Whitaker was once more recommended for appointment as captain of cavalry.

The letter of October 17, 1866, was referred to the President by the Secretary of War, on October 18, 1866, and the recommendations made therein were approved by the President on the same day.

Thereupon a notification of appointment was prepared, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 18, 1866.

SIR: You are hereby informed that the President of the United States has appointed you captain in the Seventh Regiment of Cavalry, in the service of the United States, to rank as such from the 28th day of July, 1866. Should the Senate at their next session advise and consent thereto, you will be commissioned accordingly.

Immediately on receipt hereof please to communicate to this department, through The Adjutant General's Office, your acceptance or nonacceptance of said appointment, and, with your letter of acceptance, return to The Adjutant General of the Army the oath herewith inclosed, properly filled up, subscribed, and attested, reporting at the same time your age, residence when appointed, and the State in which you were born.

You will report for examination to the board convened to meet in this city on the 24th instant, and of which Bvt. Maj. Gen. David Hunter, colonel, United States Army, is president; and so soon as notified by the president of the examining board that you have passed a satisfactory examination you will proceed without delay to join your regiment at Fort Riley, Kans.

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

Capt. E. W. WHITAKER,
Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry,
Hartford, Conn.

The notice of his appointment was sent addressed to Gen. Whitaker, at Hartford, Conn., November 6, 1866. No response having been received from him, on April 27, 1867, a communication was on that date addressed to the postmaster at Hartford, Conn., by this department, in which a statement was requested showing whether the appointment had been delivered to Gen. Whitaker or remained in the post office uncalled for. In response the postmaster informed this department that Gen. Whitaker was then a resident of Hartford, and with the Connecticut General Life Insurance Co., and that without doubt his letters would be placed in the drawer of that company. It does not appear from the records that he accepted or acknowledged the receipt of the appointment, or that he appeared before the board for examination, or that he declined it in any manner other than the declination that was presumed by his failure to acknowledge the receipt of it.

The matter was presented to the Secretary of War by The Adjutant General of the Army in a communication of which the following is a pertinent extract:

* * * * * * *

"List of full appointments issued prior to December 1, 1866, which have not been accepted, although every endeavor has been made to ascertain the addresses of the appointees. Agreeably to the orders of the Secretary of War, these persons were also notified of their appointment through the press March 8, 1867, and that if not accepted on or before May 20 the appointments would be canceled.

"Name: 7. Whitaker, E. W.

"Appointment: Captain Seventh Cavalry.

"Recommended by: Gen. Grant on Army record; no residence stated.

* * * * * * *

"Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War with the recommendation that the appointments of the above-named persons be canceled.

"J. C. KELTON,
"Assistant Adjutant General."

The recommendation was approved, as indicated by indorsements appearing on the communication, as follows:

"The recommendation of The Adjutant General is approved and submitted to the President, with the recommendation that the appointments be canceled for want of acceptance in due time, and that other applicants be appointed in their stead.

"EDWIN M. STANTON,
"Secretary of War.

"Approved:
"ANDREW JOHNSON."

On June 20, 1867, the appointment of Gen. Whitaker, as set forth in the letter of October 18, 1866, hereinbefore, was canceled.

With regard to the statement in the accompanying bill to the effect that Gen. Whitaker "declined to accept an appointment issued to him as captain in the Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry" because of disability incurred in the last engagement in which he participated, it should be remarked that nothing has been found in the official records of the War Department showing or tending to show that he incurred any disability whatever in the engagement referred to or that he was under treatment for any wound, injury, or disease, other than in the Seminary General Hospital in the months of July and August, 1863, as set forth hereinbefore.

In a letter addressed to President Grant on July 12, 1876, Gen. Whitaker solicited an appointment in the Regular Army. The letter, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Secretary of War for consideration, and it appears from the records that on July 26, 1876, Gen. Whitaker was advised that there was no law under which he could be appointed as requested.

On July 12, 1898, Gen. Whitaker submitted his name to the President for an appointment as additional paymaster of Volunteers, but his application for the appointment desired was not favorably considered, because all vacancies in the Paymaster's Department had been filled.

In the year 1895, application was made for the award of a medal of honor to Gen. Whitaker for gallantry at Reams Station, Va., in June, 1864. In connection with the application documents were submitted of which the following are copies:

STOCKFORD, WILMINGTON, DEL.,
February 27, 1895.

JAS. R. DURHAM, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Absence from home has prevented an earlier acknowledgment of your favor of February 24.

I note with regret that my letter in regard to Gen. E. W. Whitaker's distinguished services in cutting his way through from Reams Station to headquarters near Petersburg with dispatches for Gen. Meade has been mislaid or lost, and my regret is all the keener as I find I failed to keep a copy of the letter in question.

I now beg to replace it by what follows:

E. W. Whitaker, then a captain of the First Connecticut Cavalry, served on my staff as an aid-de-camp, while I was commanding the Third Division, Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac, and at all times and upon many occasions showed himself to be a very able and conspicuously gallant officer, but he rendered peculiarly valuable and courageous service in carry dispatches through the enemy's lines from me to Gen. Meade.

As the official records will show, the command, after destroying the railroads between Petersburg and the Roanoke River and inflicting great injury upon the Confederate cause, had got back to the immediate vicinity of Reams Station, where it found itself confronted by a strong force of rebel cavalry and infantry. On arriving on the field in the early morning, a reconnoissance of the enemy's lines convinced me that we should have to cut and run for it unless Gen. Meade should speedily send a relieving force to open the road for us, but inasmuch as Gen. Meade could have no means of knowing the perils which surrounded us, it was necessary for me to open communication with him. Headquarters were not over 5 miles away, but a strong force of veteran Confederate infantry lay straight across the way and was supported by Fitzhugh Lee's cavalry. Their position was a strong one, and the oldest cavalrymen regarded it as impregnable for our jaded force. Upon indicating my desire to get information through to Gen. Meade, Capt. Whitaker volunteered to take it, and his offer of services was accepted. A single troop of cavalry was selected to escort him, and as soon as the necessary dispatch could be written he set out upon his perilous mission, and within an hour he had cut his way through the Confederate lines and delivered his dispatch at Army headquarters. The details of his exploit will be found in the official records, but no one except himself and those who saw him ride so gallantly into and through the rebel lines can properly appreciate the dangers he ran, or the value of the services rendered by him. It is true that Gen. Meade did not succeed in getting any part of his force to Reams Station till after noon, and after we had retired, but that was no fault of Capt. Whitaker's. He did his whole duty with rare skill, dash, and courage and I trust may be rewarded by the medal of honor and the proper acknowledgment of his distinguished services upon that occasion.

Yours, very respectfully,

JAMES H. WILSON,
Late Major General, Volunteers.

[Special Orders, No. 135.]

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Hartford, September 15, 1864.

1. Capt. Edward W. Whitaker, of the First Regiment Connecticut Cavalry, is hereby promoted to be major, for meritorious services in cutting through the enemy's lines on the 29th of June, and reporting the perilous condition of Gen. Wilson's cavalry at Reams Station, Va., to Maj. Gen. Meade, with rank from the 14th day of September, 1864, vice Blakeslee promoted.

By order of the Commander in Chief.

HORACE J. MORSE,
Adjutant General.

The application was considered favorably and on March 22, 1898, a medal of honor was awarded to Gen. Whitaker for most distinguished gallantry in action at Reams Station, Va., June 29, 1864, the action taken being based upon a decision of the Secretary of War, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
March 22, 1898.

By direction of the President a medal of honor is presented to Gen. Edward W. Whitaker.

At Reams Station, Va., June 29, 1864, this officer, then captain First Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, in command of a troop, hearing of an expressed wish of the general in command to get information to Gen. Meade through the line of the enemy, volunteered to carry the dispatches. In the most distinguished manner he forced his way through an infantry division of the enemy and delivered the dispatches to Gen. Meade, but lost half his escort in the desperate ride.

R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War.

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. ANDREWS,
The Adjutant General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
March 10, 1914.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.

EDWARD STEWART.

The bill (S. 1274) for the relief of Edward Stewart was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Edward Stewart shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company C, Second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, on the 31st day of March, 1863, but no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPORTATION OF OPIUM.

The bill (S. 4764) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved January 17, 1914, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the words "section two of" and to strike out from line 7, page 1, to line 13, on page 2, and insert:

That after the 1st day of April, 1909, it shall be unlawful to import into the United States opium in any form or any preparation or derivative thereof: Provided, That opium and preparations and derivatives thereof, other than smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking, may be imported for medicinal purposes only, under regulations which the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to prescribe, and when so imported shall be subject to the duties which are now or may hereafter be imposed by law.

SEC. 2. That if any person shall fraudulently or knowingly import or bring into the United States, or assist in so doing, any opium or any preparation or derivative thereof contrary to law, or shall receive, conceal, buy, sell, or in any manner facilitate the transportation, concealment, or sale of such opium or preparation or derivative thereof after importation, knowing the same to have been imported contrary to law, such opium or preparation or derivative thereof shall be forfeited and shall be destroyed, and the offender shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $500 or by imprisonment for any time not exceeding five years nor less than two years, or both. Whenever, on trial for a violation of this section, the defendant is shown to have, or to have had, possession of such opium or preparation or derivative thereof, such possession shall be deemed sufficient evidence to authorize conviction unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury.

SEC. 3. That on and after July 1, 1913, all smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking found within the United States shall be presumed to have been imported after the 1st day of April, 1909, and the burden of proof shall be on the claimant or the accused to rebut such presumption.

SEC. 4. That any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States who shall, either as principal or as accessory, receive or have in his possession, or conceal on board of or transport on any foreign or domestic vessel or other water craft or railroad car or other vehicle destined to or bound from the United States or any possession thereof, any smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking, or who, having knowledge of the presence in or on any such vessel, water craft, or vehicle of such article, shall not report the same to the principal officer thereof, shall be subject to the penalty provided in section 2 of this act. Whenever on trial for violation of this section the defendant is shown to have, or to have had, possession of such opium, such possession shall be deemed sufficient evidence to authorize conviction, unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury: Provided, however, That any master of a vessel or other water craft, or person in charge of a railroad car or other vehicle, shall not be liable under this section if he shall satisfy the jury that he had no knowledge and used due diligence to prevent the presence of such article in or on such vessel, water craft, car, or other vessel, and any such article shall be forfeited and shall be destroyed.

SEC. 5. That no smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking shall be admitted into the United States, or into any territory under the control or jurisdiction thereof, for transportation to another country, nor shall such opium be transferred or transshipped from one vessel to another vessel within any waters of the United States for immediate exportation or any other purpose.

SEC. 6. That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to export or cause to be exported from the United States, or from territory under its control or jurisdiction, or from countries in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction, any opium or cocaine, or any salt, derivative, or preparation of opium or cocaine, to any other country: Provided, That opium or cocaine, and salts, derivatives, or preparations thereof, except smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking, the exportation of which is hereby absolutely prohibited, may be exported to countries regulating their entry under such regulations as are prescribed by such country for the importation thereof into such country, such regulations to be promulgated from time to time by the Secretary of State of the United States.

The Secretary of State shall request all foreign Governments to communicate through the diplomatic channels copies of laws and regulations promulgated in their respective countries which prohibit or regulate the importation of the aforesaid drugs, and when received advise the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce thereof; whereupon the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Commerce shall make and publish all proper regulations for carrying the provisions of this section into effect.

SEC. 7. That any person who exports or causes to be exported any of the aforesaid drugs in violation of the preceding section shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $50 or by imprisonment for any time not exceeding two years, or both. And one-half of any fine recovered from any person or persons convicted of an offense under any section of this act may be paid to the person or persons giving information leading to such recovery, and one-half of any bail forfeited and collected in any proceedings brought under this act may be paid to the person or persons giving the information which led to the institution of such proceedings, if so directed by the court exercising jurisdiction in the case: Provided, That no payment for giving information shall be made to any officer or employee of the United States.

SEC. 8. That whenever opium or cocaine or any preparations or derivatives thereof shall be found upon any vessel arriving at any port of the United States which is not shown upon the vessel's manifest, as is provided by sections 2806 and 2807 of the Revised Statutes, such vessel shall be liable for the penalty and forfeiture prescribed in section 2809 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am going to ask the Senate to strike out the entire italicized part of the bill and to pass the bill as originally introduced.

My reason for doing that is that the only change in this law is found in the words "exceeding five years nor," on page 3, line 10. It seems to be superfluous to reenact a statute merely for the purpose of inserting therein four words regarding punishment. The bill was reported in this state because the Treasury Department desired it for administrative purposes, it being easier to refer to an entire measure than to a series of laws consisting of the main statute and the amendments. It seems to me that it is not a necessary method of legislation, and that the enactment of the bill as introduced will cover every purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I thought I had a copy of the report from the Treasury Department in my calendar book on my desk, but I find I have not. I want to ask the Senator from Colorado if he is sure that the change which he has suggested is the only change made in the present law?

Mr. THOMAS. I am very sure of it; but I shall not insist upon the suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that the amendment suggested by the Senator is of vital importance; but, as I remember, there were some other changes made.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator will find the other matter which he has in mind in order of business 295.

Mr. SMOOT. I remember Senate bill 3526, which is calendar No. 295, but I have not had time to read it to ascertain whether it covers the matter or not.

Mr. THOMAS. I will say to the Senator that as the subcommittee, of which he and I were members, reported these bills to the Senate, we reported them as one bill, the error being mine. I assumed the two proposed amendments to refer to the same statute; but my attention was afterwards called to the fact that they were different statutes, and so we have now reported two separate bills.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that may account for it, because I remember when we agreed upon the report we agreed——

Mr. THOMAS. I misled the Senator at the time by my assumption that the two proposed amendments related to the same statute.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that if the Senator from Colorado has given this matter as careful consideration in this instance as he has done in the past, and as we have done together, I shall not object to the bill being now considered, and that the amendment be disagreed to, as has been suggested by the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to on page 1, line 3, will be reconsidered, and the amendment will be disagreed to. The Chair hears none.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF DRUGS.

The bill (S. 3526) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or cocoa leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the registration of, with collector of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or cocoa leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes," approved December 17, 1914, be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That on and after the 1st day of March, 1915, every person who produces, imports, manufactures, compounds, deals in, dispenses, sells, distributes, or gives away opium, anhalonium (mescale or muscale buttons, pellote), or cocoa leaves, or any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof, shall register with the collector of internal revenue of the district his name or style, place of business, and place or places where such business is to be carried on: Provided, That the office, or if none, then the residence of any person shall be considered for the purposes of this act to be his place of business. At the time of such registry and on or before the 1st day of July annually thereafter every person who produces, imports, manufactures, compounds, deals in, dispenses, sells, distributes, or gives away any of the aforesaid drugs shall pay to the said collector a special tax at the rate of $1 per annum: Provided, That no employee of any person who produces, imports, manufactures, compounds, deals in, dispenses, sells, distributes, or gives away any of the aforesaid drugs, acting within the scope of his employment, shall be required to register or to pay the special tax provided by this section: Provided further, That the person who employs him shall have registered and paid the special tax as required by this section: Provided further, That officers of the United States Government who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs for the various departments of the Army and Navy, the Public Health Service, and for Government hospitals and prisons, and officers of any State government, or of any county or municipality therein, who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs for State, county, or municipal hospitals or prisons, and officials of any Territory or insular possession or the District of Columbia or of the United States who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs for hospitals or prisons therein shall not be required to register and pay the special tax as herein required.

"It shall be unlawful for any person required to register under the terms of this act to produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away any of the aforesaid drugs without having registered and paid the special tax provided for in this section.

"That the word 'person' as used in this act shall be construed to mean and include a partnership, association, company, or corporation, as well as a natural person; and all provisions of existing law relating to special taxes, so far as applicable, including the provisions of section 3240 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby extended to the special tax herein imposed.

"That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make all needful rules and regulations for carrying the provisions of this act into effect."

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, by reference to the report on this bill the Senate will see that there is no change in the existing law, which is section 1 of the Statutes at Large of the United States, volume 38, page 785, passed at the last session, with the exception of the addition of the word "anhalonium," commonly referred to as mescal or muscale buttons, from which is made "peyote," a drug used by the Indians for intoxication and resulting in other injurious effects. That is the only change in the existing law.

I note, however, that in copying the language of the statute "coca," referring to coca leaves, in both the title and in the body of the bill is misspelled. I should like to have that amended, because there is a great difference between "coca" and "cocoa."

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to understand the amendment of the statute proposed to be made by this bill. It deals, as I understand, with "peyote."

Mr. THOMPSON. If the Senator pleases, it simply adds the words "anhalonium (mescal or mescale buttons, pellote)," and requires persons selling that drug to register and to pay a tax the same as do those who sell opium and other harmful drugs of similar nature.

Mr. OWEN. It simply proposes that those who sell these drugs shall register?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir; and it imposes a tax upon them.

Mr. OWEN. But it does not prohibit the use of the drug?

Mr. THOMPSON. It restricts its use to that extent by having the parties who sell it register and pay a small tax to the revenue officer.

Mr. OWEN. And having the sales accounted for?

Mr. THOMPSON. I presume so.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is impossible for us to hear what the Senator from Kansas has said.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I merely stated that this bill simply amends the existing law on this subject by the addition of the words in italics, as shown by the report—"anhalonium (mescal or mescale buttons, pellote)"—and by requiring those who sell these drugs to register and pay a tax, the same as is required of those selling opium and coca leaves, or any compounds of that character, and to account for the sales.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when the original law on this subject was being considered in the Senate there were so many amendments offered on the floor of the Senate without due consideration that we virtually destroyed the effect of the law. If the Senator from Kansas does not mind, I should like to have the bill to go over, and then I will see what the effect of his amendment would be.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What is the Senator's amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not now understand what it is.

Mr. THOMPSON. It can not possibly have any effect except that it requires those selling this particular drug to register and to pay a tax for it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is provided for in the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I feel impelled to ask that this bill go to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. THOMPSON. I object to that, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Under what rule does the Senator from Oklahoma desire the bill placed?

Mr. OWEN. Under Rule IX.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want it to go under Rule IX. I want to assure the Senator from Oklahoma that this is a bill which should pass. We do not, however, want the bill passed unless we are absolutely sure of accomplishing what the Government desires.

Mr. OWEN. I differ from the Senator from Utah with regard to the advisability of the passage of the bill; I object to its consideration now for that reason; but I have a right to move that it go under Rule IX, because I do not wish the bill to come up in my absence.

Mr. SMOOT. We are under a unanimous consent agreement, considering bills on the calendar to which there is no objection. If there is objection, the bills goes over. After we get through with the consideration of the calendar the Senator can make his motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. OWEN. I object to its consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MANUFACTURE OF NITRATES.

The bill (S. 4971) to authorize the designation and withdrawal of water-power sites, and the construction of water-power and other plants by the United States for the manufacture of nitrates, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill has been attached to the Army reorganization bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it be placed under Rule IX. It has already been passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to say, in the absence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who reported the bill, that I object to it going under Rule IX.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is any objection to my request, I will not urge it, but I made the request because, as I have stated, the bill has been put upon the Army reorganization bill.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to say that dispostion would be quite satisfactory, but I do not see the Senator from South Carolina in the Chamber, and in his absence I think that such action ought not to be taken.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This bill was reported from the Committee on Agriculture, and almost word for word it has been put on the Army reorganization bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

EXTENSION OF PAYMENTS ON LAND ENTRIES.

The bill (H. R. 6057) to amend section 14 of the reclamation extension act, approved August 13, 1914, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 10, after the words "upon the," to strike out "construction charge affecting said lands being increased 1 per centum" and in lieu thereof to insert "applicant's paying an amount equal to 1 per centum of the installment of the construction charge which he would have been required to pay had he accepted this act within the time limit hereinabove fixed," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 of an act entitled "An act extending the period of payment under reclamation projects, and for other purposes," approved August 13, 1914, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That any person whose land or entry has heretofore become subject to the reclamation law, who desires to secure the benefits of the extension of the period of payments provided by this act, shall, within six months after the issuance of the first public notice hereunder affecting his land or entry, notify the Secretary of the Interior, in the manner to be prescribed by said Secretary, of his acceptance of all the terms and conditions of this act, and thereafter his lands or entry shall be subject to all of the provisions of this act: Provided, That upon sufficient showing the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, permit notice of acceptance of all the terms and conditions of this act to be filed at any time after the time limit hereinbefore fixed for filing such acceptance shall have expired, conditioned, however, upon the applicant's paying an amount equal to 1 per cent of the installment of the construction charge which he would have been required to pay had he accepted this act within the time limit hereinabove fixed for each 30 days or fraction thereof which may elapse between the expiration of the time limit hereinabove fixed, and the date of filing, or making application to file, acceptance under this proviso and thereafter the lands or entry of any such persons so filing such notice of acceptance shall be subject to all the provisions of this act."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think a mistake was made in reporting that amendment. It does not carry out just what the committee really decided upon. The committee decided to require the applicant who came in under the act after the time had expired to pay 1 per cent of the installment that he would have had to pay if he had complied with the act, instead of paying 1 per cent for every 60 days. In order to carry out that idea we should strike out, after the word "fixed," on page 2, line 14, the words "for each 30 days or fraction thereof which may elapse between the expiration of the time limit hereinabove fixed, and the date of filing, or making application to file, acceptance under this proviso." I move that amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Washington to the fact that the Assistant Secretary of the Interior suggested that that amendment be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. JONES. I know he did, but that is certainly an error; and I should like to get the matter in conference, at any rate, so as to accomplish just exactly what was intended. The Assistant Secretary of the Interior said that that provision in the bill as it passed the House was too onerous; and that is certainly true; but I think the amendment he has suggested, that the committee really put in, carries out what the House provided.

Mr. SMOOT. The proper way to do that, Mr. President, is to accept the amendment just as it is, and then it will be in conference.

Mr. JONES. No; the part that is not stricken out will not be in conference. I want to strike out in line 14, beginning with the word "for" down to and including the word "proviso" in line 18. Then the whole matter will be in conference. I think that will carry out the idea the Secretary had and the idea the committee had in adopting the amendment. At any rate, it will go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

NONMETALLIC MINERAL LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 406) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that is a very proper disposition of that bill, as it will take some little time, as a matter of course, for its consideration and passage; but I do not think that it would be possible to overestimate or overstate the importance and the urgency of the bill, which undertakes to deal with valuable lands containing deposits of coal, oil, gas, phosphates, and other similar nonmetallic deposits, most of which are now withdrawn from entry and practically tied up, while money in large quantities is ready to go into the development of these lands.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. HARDWICK. I merely want to ask the Senator if this measure deals with the different substances mentioned only where they exist on Government land?

Mr. WALSH. That is all.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I only objected because I knew the bill would take some time.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that, and I merely desire to say that upon the conclusion of the bill which is now the unfinished business I shall ask the Senate to devote itself to the consideration of this measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands objection is made, and the bill will go over.

SALARIES OF LIGHTHOUSE KEEPERS.

The bill (S. 4426) to regulate the salaries of keepers of lighthouses was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "average," to insert "of $700 per annum," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4673 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4673. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to regulate the salaries of the respective keepers of lighthouses in such manner as he deems just and proper, but the whole sum allowed for such salaries shall not exceed an average of $700 per annum to each keeper; and the authority herein granted to regulate the salaries of keepers of lighthouses shall not be abridged or limited by the provisions of section 7 of the general deficiency appropriation act approved August 26, 1912, as amended by section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act Approved March 4, 1913.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator reporting the bill if the present law gives the Secretary of Commerce authorization "to regulate the salaries of the respective keepers of lighthouses in such manner as he deems just and proper"?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the only change in the law, I will say, as the report shows, is simply increasing the salary from $600 to $700 a year. I think if the Senator will look at the report he will find that the present law is left practically the same, with that exception.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is I have no objection to the consideration of the bill, but I thought it was a rather broad authority to give to the Secretary. I see, however, on reading the bill closer, that there is a limitation upon that authority by placing the salary not to exceed $700.

Mr. CUMMINS. The report shows that the only change is to increase the salary $100 per annum.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

The bill (S. 4425) to provide for the retirement of officers and employees of the Bureau of Lighthouses and the Lighthouse Service was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and the Secretary read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all officers and employees of the Bureau of Lighthouses and the Lighthouse Service who shall have reached the age of 65 years, after having been 30 years in the active service of the Government, may, at their option, be retired from further performance of duty; and all officers and employees of the Bureau of Lighthouses and the Lighthouse Service who shall have reached the age of 70 years shall be compulsorily retired from further performance of duty: Provided, That the annual compensation of persons so retired shall be one-fortieth of the last annual pay received for each year of active service in the Government, not to exceed in any case thirty-fortieths of the last annual pay received: Provided further, That such retirement pay shall not include any amount on account of subsistence or other allowances.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I must confess I do not understand the proviso, which reads:

Provided, That the annual compensation of persons so retired shall be one-fortieth of the last annual pay received for each year of active service in the Government, not to exceed in any case thirty-fortieths of the last annual pay received.

It seems to me that the first part of that sentence is quite inconsistent with the last part.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the measure is one introduced by my colleague [Mr. NELSON], and I note it has been reported by him. If the Senator from Montana feels that it is necessary to have the bill amended, I will ask that it be passed over for a moment until I can send for my colleague.

Mr. WARREN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not ask that it go over, except temporarily.

Mr. CHILTON. Let it be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. NELSON subsequently said: Mr. President, during my temporary absence the Senate passed over Order of Business 301, Senate bill 4425. I ask that it may be returned to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will return to Senate bill 4425.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say in relation to that bill that it provides for the retirement of superannuated employees of the Lighthouse Service. Some four or five years ago we made provision for the Revenue-Cutter Service, and two years ago we made provision for the Life-Saving Service. This is for the Lighthouse Service, the poorest paid service among all the Government employees. Their average salary has been only $600 a year, in addition to which they have been getting a ration estimated at 30 cents a day.

A good many of these employees have been getting old, and this bill proposes to retire them compulsorily when they are 70 years of age, and they may retire on their own motion at 65, and it gives them simply three-fourths of the pay they were getting at the time they retired. It is a very meritorious bill, and I trust there will be no objection to it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the passage of the bill was interrupted by a suggestion of myself, made out of no spirit of hostility to the measure at all, because as a boy I knew of the sacrificing services of these very worthy public servants. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota, however, that I directed the attention of the Senate to the language of the proviso, which I was quite unable to comprehend.

Mr. NELSON. It provides that their annual compensation shall be one-fortieth of the salary they are receiving at the time they are retired multiplied by the number of years they have been actually in the service, but in no case is it to exceed thirty-fortieths, or three-quarters, of their full pay. If the Senator will read the full proviso, he will see that it is very fair. It is based on service. That is, if the man is, say, 70 years old and retires, and he has served only one year, he would get only one-fortieth of the salary that he was getting from the Government that year. If he had served 10 years, he would get ten times that amount. It is multiplied by the years of his service, but with the qualification that in no instance shall it exceed three-fourths of the full pay.

Mr. WALSH. If that is the purpose it certainly is not expressed in the bill.

Mr. NELSON. That is the object of the bill. I want to say to the Senator that it is a bill carefully considered and prepared by the department; and if the Senator will examine the report he will find the reasons for it and an explanation of it in full.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that I have examined the report, and that there is apparently no reference in the report to this feature of the bill at all. The purpose suggested is a very worthy one, but it certainly is not expressed in the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think, upon reflection, the Senator will see that it is properly expressed:

The annual compensation of persons so retired shall be one-fortieth of the last annual pay received for each year of active service in the Government.

One-fortieth of the pay for each year of active service in the Government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It should not include the word "last," then——

"That the annual compensation of persons so retired shall be one-fortieth of the last annual pay."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is exactly right. It is one-fortieth of the salary for the last year that he served for each year that he has been in the service.

Mr. NELSON. With the limitation that it must not exceed three-fourths.

Mr. WALSH. I do not want to be understood as opposing this bill at all; but I submit that the language does not at all express the idea, and I regret very much——

Mr. NELSON. It is the language prepared by the department.

Mr. WALSH. I think I could improve on the department's language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that the difficulty can be obviated if, in line 12, after the word "be," he will insert the words "a sum equal to," so that the proviso will read:

That the annual compensation of persons so retired shall be a sum equal to one-fortieth of the last annual pay received for each year of active service.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that amendment. The effect of it is the same.

Mr. CHILTON. What we mean to do is to provide for taking the pay for one year divided by 40 and then multiplying it by the number of years that he has been in the service.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is what it says.

Mr. CHILTON. It was not clear to me when I read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota the construction which he places upon the 70-year provision. Is there any requirement that there shall be 30 years of service?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no. The provision is for compulsory retirement at 70 years, and at 65 they may retire on their own application.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Could a person who was 69 years of age serve one year and retire and get this pension?

Mr. NELSON. No; he could not, unless he was 70 years of age.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I know.

Mr. NELSON. If he were 70 years of age, he could be compelled to retire, and then he would get only one-fortieth of his salary for that one year.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE & PUGET SOUND RAILWAY CO.

The bill (S. 3101) authorizing the Secretary of War to extend the lease issued under the act of August 23, 1912, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Co. a tract of land in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, State of Montana, and for a right of way thereto for the removal of gravel and ballast material" was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to extend the area covered by the lease issued under the act approved August 23, 1912, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Co. a tract of land in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in the State of Montana, and for a right of way for the removal of gravel and ballast material," so as to include 241.67 acres, with necessary rights of way, for a term of 10 years from the approval of this act, in the name of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. a corporation of the State of Wisconsin (the grantee and successor in interest of the former lessee) for the purposes and under the conditions imposed by the provisions of the act of August 23, 1912.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment on page 2, line 1, after the word "filed," to insert "provided he shall have paid the price of 15.17 acres at the rate of $1.25 per acre, so as to make the bill read:

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES IN RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The bill (H. R. 384) to amend the act of June 23, 1910, entitled "An act providing that entrymen for homesteads within the reclamation projects may assign their entries upon satisfactory proof of residence, improvement, and cultivation for five years, the same as though said entry had been made under the original homestead act," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act of June 23, 1910 (Pub. 243, 36th Stat., p. 592), entitled "An act providing that entrymen for homesteads within reclamation projects may assign their entries upon satisfactory proof of residence, improvement, and cultivation for five years, the same as though said entry had been made under the original homestead act," by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That in the absence of any intervening valid adverse interests any assignment made between June 23, 1910, and January 1, 1913, of land upon which the assignor has submitted satisfactory final proof and the assignee purchased with the belief that the assignment was valid and under the act of June 23, 1910, is hereby confirmed, and the assignee shall be entitled to the land assigned as under the act of June 23, 1910, notwithstanding that said original entry was conformed to farm units and that the part assigned was canceled and eliminated from said entry prior to the date of final proof: Provided further, That all entries so assigned shall be subject to the limitations, terms, and conditions of the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, and all of said assignees whose entries are hereby confirmed shall, as a condition to receiving patent, make the proof heretofore required of assignees.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BINGHAM CANYON, UTAH.

The bill (S. 4) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Bingham Canyon, in the State of Utah, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other governmental offices in the city of Bingham Canyon and State of Utah, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $75,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, is this a $75,000 building?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a site and a building.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What is the inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. We just passed a bill providing for one for Nogales, Ariz., at a cost of $120,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I should like to explain the Arizona bill.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Oh, no!

Mr. OVERMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator from Georgia object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to know the size of the business of the place before we pass it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Last year the business was something over $12,000; and it is for other governmental offices as well as the post office. It is one of the very important towns in the State of Utah. It is where, among other mines, the Utah Copper Mine is situated—probably one of the biggest copper mines in the world.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah what is the population of this place?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The population of Bingham Canyon proper to-day is something over 3,000, but, as the Senator very well understands, coming from a mining State, there are people living all about, receiving mail at Bingham Canyon. There is a rural free delivery in active operation carrying the mails in different directions from the town of Bingham. Tributary to the post office there is a population of several thousand. I can not tell the Senator the exact number.

Mr. WALSH. I am moved to make these inquiries, because I was led to believe that these appropriations for public buildings were all going to be found in an omnibus bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They will, ultimately.

Mr. WALSH. I will ask the Senator from Utah whether that is his understanding about the matter?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; they will ultimately go into a general omnibus bill. I will say to the Senator that that has always been the practice in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair may be pardoned, he will say here that the receipts of the post office at this point for the last year—1915—were $12,314.78. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAL LANDS, KAYCEE, WYO.

The bill (S. 3986) granting certain coal lands to the town of Kaycee, Wyo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out lines 3 to 12, inclusive, on page 1, and the word "conditions," on line 1, page 2, in the following words:

That the following-described coal land, or so much thereof as the town of Kaycee, Wyo., may apply for within six months after the approval of this act, is hereby granted to said town as a source of coal supply for the use of said town and for the use therein of the inhabitants and industries thereof, to wit:

In section 26, the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, in township 44 north, range 81 east of the sixth principal meridian, containing 160 acres, more or less, upon the following conditions.

And to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to sell, or to lease, to the town of Kaycee, Wyo., the following-described coal land, to wit, southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, in section 26, township 44 north, range 81 west, sixth principal meridian, as a source of coal supply for the use of said town and for the use therein of the inhabitants and industries thereof, upon the following express conditions:

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to sell, or to lease, to the town of Kaycee, Wyo., the following-described coal land, to wit, southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, in section 26, township 44 north, range 81 west, sixth principal meridian, as a source of coal supply for the use of said town and for the use therein of the inhabitants and industries thereof, upon the following express conditions, that is to say: That said town shall, within two years from the approval of this act, open a workable vein of coal upon said land and shall continuously thereafter develop and operate a practical coal mine thereon for the purpose aforesaid; shall not assign or transfer said land or any interest therein; shall comply with such rules and regulations as may from time to time be prescribed by the United States Bureau of Mines and approved by the Secretary of the Interior for safeguarding the health and safety of the employees engaged in mining or handling coal therein; for the prevention of waste of the mineral resources thereof; for securing full reports from the town to the Secretary of the Interior as to the mining and disposal of coal mined in said lands, including construction, maintenance, and operation costs, amounts used for municipal purposes, amounts sold, purchasers, and amounts of receipts from sales: Provided, That if the said town shall at any time neglect or fail to perform any of the conditions aforesaid or any part thereof, and shall continue such neglect or failure after reasonable notice by the Secretary of the Interior, the said land hereby granted shall revert free and clear of all incumbrances to the Government of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether the town has signified its desire to have the bill enacted, and whether it will avail itself of the opportunity granted it by the act?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Whether or not it has officially signified it, I am unable to say; but it has unofficially done so, and the Senator will observe the amendment which was inserted at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I observe that. If the town is desirous of acquiring this property, Mr. President, I shall be very glad to aid it in securing it. I wanted to say to the Senator, however, that I observe that the discretion given to the Secretary is unlimited. He may sell or lease; he may sell at any price or lease at any price.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes. I will say to the Senator that the town of Kaycee is probably 75 or 100 miles from any railroad. It is simply a small inland town. It is a small settlement. This is the only available source of supply that they have. It would not pay anybody to open a mine or to enter the coal lands for this purpose. It is simply to provide a supply for the town for fuel purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

JAMES F. COLE.

The bill (S. 739) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James F. Cole was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; when 50 years after the war it is proposed to remove the charge of desertion against him. I do not know anything about the man, but——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is never too late to do justice. Let me have the Senator's attention for a moment, if he will withhold his objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will withhold it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This soldier, Mr. President, served honorably and was wounded, and the bullet is still in his body. This technical desertion has really no validity in fact. It ought not to appear on the record. It is a very worthy case. I happen to know something about it personally.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have not had time to read the report. Will the Senator let the bill go over?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am very glad to have it go over. I should like also to have the Senator look at the next bill on the calendar, the bill (S. 743) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Moses Chauncey.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will look at both. I see this bill is not recommended by the department, or rather the recommendation is against it, I think. I want to look at the merits of the case.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will go through with the report, that is all I ask him to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 739 and the next bill, the bill (S. 743) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Moses Chauncey, will go over.

OLLALA SLOUGH, OREG.

The bill (S. 1697) to declare Ollala Slough, in Lincoln County, Oreg., nonnavigable, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It declares that all of that portion of Ollala Slough in Lincoln County, Oreg., above a point where a line that is 120 rods south and running east and west and parallel with the section line between sections 8 and 17 in township 11 south, rage 10 west of the Willamette meridian, crosses said stream to be a nonnavigable stream.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GEORGETOWN, DEL.

The bill (S. 5503) to provide for the purchase of a site for the erection of a Federal building at Georgetown, Del., was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

MAIL CONTRACTORS.

The bill (S. 331) for the relief of mail contractors was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 12194) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Adolf Hartmann, late of Troop A, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 14, to strike out:

The name of Martin W. Ryan, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that that committee amendment be disagreed to, and I wish to make a very brief statement with respect to it.

Martin W. Ryan enlisted during the Spanish-American War. He served from June 20 to October 26, 1898. He reenlisted December 12, 1898, and served in the Philippines until he was honorably discharged December 11, 1901. He served over three years. There were two enlistments, and evidently he underwent two examinations by physicians. His services were accepted, the country had the benefit of them for three years and more, and it seems that some examiner reported that a disease of the stomach which he had began prior to the time of his service. It was not so severe that he was not on two occasions accepted, the country had the benefit of his services, and now because the disease had an origin antedating his service, as this examiner now claims, he is to be deprived of the benefit of a pension.

There was a good deal of testimony in this case, and I want to read very briefly from the report of the House committee. I wish to call the attention of the Senate especially to the following:

With the bill the petitioner files an affidavit in which he states that he is in part unable to earn a living, because of disease of stomach (indigestion and dyspepsia), and that he owns no property.

His allegations as to physical and financial condition are sustained by the testimony of lay witnesses.

A physician testifies that the soldier suffers most severely from disease of digestive organs—can not eat any solid food and usually vomits almost any food that he does eat—and is thereby rendered unable to perform manual labor.

From the evidence submitted in this case it is believed by your committee that a pension of $12 per month to this soldier is fully justified, and it is so recommended.

His claim was allowed in the House, but when the bill came to the Senate the Senate committee felt called upon to reject the claim because his difficulty had an origin antedating the date of his two enlistments. It may be that that is within the letter of the law, but I submit there is no pension granted in this bill which is more deserving than this particular case. Evidently he is in a very much worse condition than he was at the time he enlisted.

I have two other affidavits which have been sent to me, which just arrived within the last hour. I do not like to take the time of the Senate to read them, but I hope the chairman of the committee may see fit to recede from the position of the committee and let this claim be restored.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio, of course, understands that in the matter of the claims for pensions of the survivors of the Spanish-American War the rules established are entirely different from those in the case of survivors of the Civil War. The survivors of the Spanish-American War are required to prove that they suffered from disability contracted in the service and in line of duty. The committee of the Senate having this case under consideration found in the long hospital report of this soldier that there was no record of any treatment for dyspepsia or indigestion, although he had quite a long record, as set out on page 9 of the report, extending from June 26, 1899, to July 9, 1901. But this report also shows that the field examiner, who made the examination of this soldier, found that he had suffered from indigestion and dyspepsia prior to his first enlistment. That was not only found to be the case but the pensioner himself admitted it to be true. That appears in the report on page 9, where it reads:

However, the claim was sent to the field for special examination, by which means it was ascertained from good and credible witnesses that the soldier had suffered from the said indigestion and dyspepsia prior to his enlistment, the first time in 1898. He himself admitted this to be true. The claim was therefore rejected.

The Committee on Pensions felt that the claimant did not bring himself within the rule, and for that reason we reported adversely upon his application for pension.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee whether the committee received any statement from this claimant in reply to what was stated by the field examiner?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. We did not, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. I have here a statement, as I have stated, which has come to me within the hour, the soldier's own letter; and I will take the time of the Senate to read it, because I feel that a very great injustice is being done in this case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, I am going to object to the consideration of this entire bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Regular order!

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This bill embraces Spanish-American War pensions. I have objected to all such bills, for I want to take part in their consideration and discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1308) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PHILIP H. HEBERER.

The bill (H. R. 7239) for the relief of Philip H. Heberer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Philip H. Heberer $634 for injuries sustained while employed as a lineman in the United States telegraph corps near Valdez, Alaska, in June, 1914.

Preston, who was collector of internal revenue for the first election district of Mississippi from the 1st of June, 1869, to the 22d of May, 1873, which sum was repaid to the United States Government by Simon M. Preston, and its collection by him from D. C. Kearns having been hindered and prevented by the pardon of D. C. Kearns by the President of the United States and the remission of the fine equivalent to said sum.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James W. Cross, $892, as full compensation to said James W. Cross for personal injuries received as a result of an accident October 26, 1914, without negligence on his part, while he was engaged in the performance of his duties as a laborer at the State, War, and Navy Department Building.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a comparatively unimportant mistake in the printing of that bill as proposed to be amended. The amount named in the amendment should be $92 instead of $892, and I move that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I must confess when I saw this bill I thought a streak of liberality must have struck the Committee on Claims. I have never known it to do anything of this kind before.

Mr. SMOOT. We have a different Claims Committee now, I remind the Senator.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 8234) to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill will take too long to discuss before adjournment to-day, and therefore I ask that it go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator not think we can finish that in a half an hour?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hardly think we could finish it in 30 days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4866) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Commercial Pacific Cable Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Gladden, copartners, of Clarksburg, W. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS UNDER NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The bill (H. R. 6651) providing for the payment for certain services arising under the Navy Department was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I see the Senator who reported the bill is not in the Chamber at the present moment, but I should like to inquire from some Senator who is familiar with the matter why this class of claims is reported at this time in a separate bill? In the past they have always come in on an appropriation bill upon recommendation from the Navy Department, and I can not see why these claims should be picked out from all the others and a special bill reported in their favor. For that reason I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

REFERENCE OF CLAIMS TO COURT OF CLAIMS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 41) reported from the Committee on Claims on the 20th instant, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate bill No. 1414, providing for the adjudication by the Court of Claims of the claims of Hardt, Von Vernuth & Co.; F. A. Straus & Co.; Albert Eckstein; Barthels Manufacturing Co.; Dieckerhoff, Raffloer & Co.; Dieckerhoff, Raffloer & Co. (a corporation); G. Hirsch's Sons; Ludwig Littauer; Moeller & Littauer; Naday & Fleischer; William Jonas & Co.; Charles E. Hertlein; G. Robison & Co.; G. Robison, jr.; Paul Puttmann; Imperial Braid Co.; F. B. Vandegrift & Co.; and G. Robison & Son, together with all papers accompanying said bill, be, and is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims to find the facts relating to their claims for refund of import duties paid by them upon artificial silk in excess of the legal duties imposed by law upon artificial silk during the years 1901 to 1909, inclusive, and also to find the conclusions of law and equity applicable to the facts.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to say that the resolution merely asks for a finding of facts in connection with the claims referred to. I say that to show that I am entirely consistent. I do not ask in the resolution for any adjudication of these claims, but, as will be observed from the resolution itself, it merely asks for a finding of facts in these cases; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LESTER A. ROCKWELL.

The bill (S. 1362) for the relief of Lester A. Rockwell was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I see there is no report from the department accompanying that bill, and therefore I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HEIRS OF MYRA CLARKE GAINES.

The bill (S. 3294) to appropriate a sum of money to pay Rhoda Menz, W. W. Christmas, and James M. Christmas, heirs of Myra Clarke Gaines, for certain lands in Louisiana, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN W. CUPP.

The bill (S. 147) for the relief of John W. Cupp was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John W. Cupp, late postmaster at Galion, Ohio, $229.48, to reimburse him for the payment of that sum, which, as postmaster, he had deposited as funds of the post office at Galion, Ohio, in the Galion National Bank, and which funds were lost by reason of the insolvency and failure of the bank.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 2543) for the relief of the State of Kentucky was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ARTEMUS W. PENTZ.

The bill (S. 1429) for the relief of Artemus W. Pentz was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the name "Artemus W. Pentz," to strike out "$15,000" and to insert "$2,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Artemus W. Pentz, $2,000, as full compensation to said Artemus W. Pentz for the loss of left foot, dislocation of right arm at elbow, laceration of chin, and other bodily injuries, which resulted in partial paralysis, which occurred as the result of an accident January 5, 1914, without negligence on his part, while he was engaged in the performance of his duties as conductor of a dirt train on the Panama Canal excavation.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment proposed by the committee in this case by inserting "$4,000," instead of "$2,000." This is a case where a man in the performance of his duty in connection with work on the Panama Canal was injured by turning a hand brake, which was found to be defective, on a car belonging to the United States. As a result of that the car ran over him, he lost a foot, and is practically paralyzed, as the committee states. The committee states that there was an entire absence of anything in the way of negligence on his part, and it seems to me that for a man who has received such an injury, $2,000 is entirely inadequate. I think that we ought to be, if not liberal, at least just, to the men who meet with accidents of this kind in the service of their country.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator know what was the annual compensation or wage of this man?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know. The committee report does not state that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is a general law granting employees of the Government engaged on the Panama Canal one year's salary in case of injury. Most of the claims of that nature are based upon the annual salary of the employee, and it seems to me that the amount proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania would be even more than he was receiving as a wage.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no doubt it would be; but this is an extraordinary case. I will read the conclusion of the committee report. The committee says:

The committee believes that the extent of claimant's injuries, which have left him with one foot and partially paralyzed and wholly unfit to follow his accustomed occupation of railroading, entitle him to further compensation.

Then it recommends the payment of $2,000. I think, Mr. President, that $2,000 is not enough under the circumstances.

Mr. SMOOT. The Government does not pay at any time what the courts would allow.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not care as to that; I am talking in behalf not of what the Government does, but of what the Government ought to do, and I think it ought to do better in this case than the committee reports, and I therefore make the motion to amend.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me that we ought not to amend this bill when the Senator who reported the bill is not present and the chairman of the committee is not present. If the Senator insists upon any modification of the report, I shall feel compelled to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask that the bill go over?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; that it go over if the amendment is insisted upon.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not have it go over. I should like to have my amendment put to a vote, and if the Senate does not favor it, it can vote it down.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is nobody here to take the other side. No one here knows the reasons which induced the committee to make the recommendation which they did.

Mr. OLIVER. The Senate can vote down my amendment, but I certainly have a right to offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I insist that the bill go over until some Senator is here who knows something about the bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope the Senator will not compel me to withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been made, the bill will go over.

Mr. SHAFROTH subsequently said: Mr. President, a little while ago I made an objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. He has since explained the matter to me, and I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill, although I am opposed to its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, will resume the consideration of Senate bill 1429.

The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment of the committee proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, page 1, it is proposed to strike out the committee amendment inserting "$2,000" and to insert "$4,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, how much is the increase?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two thousand dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What was the extent of the injury?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A limb paralyzed, a foot cut off, and sundry other dilapidations.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we have not approved of an increase to that extent to-day.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I simply want to state that this is a deserving case. I am a member of the Committee on Claims. We did treat this case different from others. There are thousands of cases before the committee now. We can not, under the law, allow any more than $2,000, and I therefore trust that the Senate will vote down the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment reported by the committee to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5672) for the relief of sundry building and loan associations, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OLIVER. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4060) to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured, mined, or produced by convict labor, or in any prison or reformatory, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OLIVER. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I inquire if the calendar has been completed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has completed the consideration of the calendar.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, eight years ago to-day I addressed the Senate on the subject of national aid, in cooperation with the States and counties, in building post roads. During the time that has elapsed since the delivery of that speech I have grown more firm in the conviction that I was right at that time.

In order that I may economize time, and not take the time of the Senate during the future consideration of this bill to deliver a speech, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to print in the RECORD the speech just as I delivered it eight years ago to-day; and I should like to have it printed in the ordinary type in which the RECORD is printed; that is, in brevier. I send to the desk two copies of the speech, for the convenience of the printer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Alabama will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the question that I am about to discuss is not a new one. The speedy delivery of the mails and the transportation and distribution of production has claimed the attention of our most enlightened and constructive statesmen since the organization of the Government. The transportation and distribution of products is of more importance than production itself. It is the surplus which we sell that makes us richer, adds to the bank accounts, and cancels the mortgage. What the producer consumes at home adds nothing to our wealth. It is that which he sells and transports to the market that makes him rich. If the cost of transportation to the producer is equal to the difference between the cost of production and the selling price there is no profit. Indeed, he is poorer, because his land is being exhausted, his team and his wagon wearing out, the deposits of his mine are being removed, his timber is being consumed, and his manufacturing plant is undergoing wear and tear, all without net results. In all classes of agriculture and in all lines of manufacturing and trade economy of transportation is an important item in the amount of profit. There are three methods for the transportation of commerce—the railroads, waterways, and the common highways or dirt roads. I need not discuss the first method. It has been the subject of extensive discussion, legislation, and judicial construction, with which we are all familiar. Transportation by water has been liberally provided for by Congress. The dirt roads, over which 90 per cent of the internal commerce of the country must be moved first or last, have been sadly neglected.

"The time has arrived when Congress must meet the great question of national road improvement fairly and squarely and give it that thoughtful and serious consideration which it deserves. The farmers are being aroused, and already the National Grange, with a membership of more than a million farmers, is calling upon us for action in this matter. Another great organization, the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, is urging legislation in the same direction. Mr. President, the hordes of southern Europe and the menace of alien races may cast their sinister shadows over our great cities, but, sir, that great, silent, patient element of our population, the American farmer, is American through and through. The very citadel of American liberty and its most cherished traditions are guarded by the farmers, who are 91 per cent native born and constitute more than one-third of our population.

"These men have contributed to the wealth of the United States to an extent which staggers the imagination. The corn crop of 1907 alone was worth $1,350,000,000; the hay crop was worth $660,000,000; the cotton crop was worth $675,000,000; and the wheat crop was worth over $500,000,000. Mr. President, it will be observed that either one of these great agricultural crops has produced more actual wealth in one year than the combined output of all the gold and silver mines in the world and $100,000,000 more. The grand total of all crops for 1907 was nearly seven and one-half billion dollars, and it is estimated that the farmers of this country have created during the last nine years $53,000,000,000 worth of wealth. The value of agricultural crops exported in 1906 was $969,457,306, or 56½ per cent of the total exports, and but for the export of agricultural products the balance of trade would have been against the United States by $523,127,533. When the machinations of Wall Street, the dangerous practices of high finance, and the injustice of our tariff system bring upon us the woes of financial stringency, industrial depression, and hard times, we must realize that the tillers of the soil form the real basis of our wealth, and that to the creation of real wealth we should lend our aid.

"But it is not only the rural population that demands aid from the Government in the upbuilding of our public roads. The numerous resolutions of the boards of trade, chambers of commerce, associations of manufacturers, and the open advocacy of many of our great railroad companies indicate clearly that it only needs an organization of all these forces to bring about the united and effective efforts of city and country. Modern inventive genius is responsible for a new factor in the problem of transportation, which must be reckoned with in legislating for public roads. The automobile industry has now reached $110,000,000 per annum, and the makers and users of automobiles will soon find a plane upon which they can mutually press forward with the farmer in his efforts to obtain better roads. The time will come, during the lifetime of Senators who do me the honor to listen, when the traction engine and the automobile will be utilized on the improved dirt road in hauling to the market farm and forest products at a minimum cost, supplying the place of millions of horses and mules now employed in transportation.

"Mr. President, it is sufficient to call attention to resolutions passed by the legislatures of Maine, Tennessee, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Alabama, New York, and other States, with reference to national aid, to show how widespread is the sentiment among our State legislatures upon this subject. When all these powers and factors unite their efforts there will be such an era of internal improvement, of home building, of home beautifying, of wealth creation, that the waste places will be filled, squalid huts will give place to beautiful homes, the desert will blossom as the rose, and all the shocks and crashes of frenzied finance will fall harmless from the bulwarks of our splendid prosperity.

"The objection is made that such legislation would be unconstitutional. Fortunately, for our guidance, the question of national aid is not a new one. We have the precedent of national-aid legislation by Congress while the founders of our Government lived to know and approve of it. The first appropriation made was in 1806, when $30,000 was set aside for the purpose of commencing work on the famous old Cumberland Road. These appropriations then continued, with but little interruption, until May 25, 1838, when the last appropriation of $150,000 was made, which made the total amount expended on road construction during this period about $7,000,000.

"On March 14, 1818, the House of Representatives passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Congress has power under the Constitution to appropriate money for the construction of post-roads, military and other roads, and of canals, and for the improvement of waterways.

"Mr. President, what was the attitude of the leading statesmen in the early days of the Republic? Thomas Jefferson said, in a letter to Mr. Lieper, in 1808:

"Give us peace till our revenues are liberated from debt, and then, if war be necessary, it can be carried on without a new tax or loan, and during peace we may checker our whole country with canals, roads, etc. This is the object to which all our endeavors should be directed.

"James Madison, in a message to Congress, said:

"I particularly invite the attention of Congress to the expediency of exercising their existing powers, and, where necessary, of resorting to the prescribed mode of enlarging them, in order to effectuate a comprehensive system of roads and canals, such as will have the effect of drawing more closely together every part of our country, by promoting intercourse and improvements and by increasing the share of every part in the common stock of national prosperity.

"Henry Clay advocated the building of national roads in a speech made in Congress in 1818, in which he said:

"Of all the modes in which a Government can employ its surplus revenue, none is more permanently beneficial than that of internal improvement. Fixed to the soil, it becomes a durable part of the land itself, diffusing comfort and activity and animation on all sides. The first direct effect is on the agricultural community, into whose pockets comes the difference in the expense of transportation between good and bad ways. Thus if the price of transporting a barrel of flour by the erection of the Cumberland turnpike should be lessened $2, the producer of the article would receive that $2 more now than formerly.

"Daniel Webster, speaking in the United States Senate in 1830, used the following language:

"Under this view of things I thought it necessary to settle, at least for myself, some definite notions with respect to the powers of the Government in regard to internal affairs, and I arrived at the conclusion that Government had power to accomplish sundry objects or aid in their accomplishment, which are now commonly spoken of as internal improvement.

"While it is true that Presidents Madison, Jackson, and Monroe vetoed acts of Congress relating to public roads, it is beyond dispute that the veto of President Monroe was due to a provision giving to the General Government the right of eminent domain and of general superintendence, and this is practically true of the other veto message. President Jackson held that the right of appropriation was not limited by the specified powers of the Constitution. In his veto message he said:

"I have not been able to consider these declarations in any other point of view than as a concession that the rights of the appropriation are not limited by the power to carry into effect the measure for which the money is asked, as was formerly contended.

"On May 4, 1822, President Monroe, in a veto message to Congress, used the following language:

"That in whatever sense the term established is applied to post offices it must be applied in the same sense to post roads.

"John C. Calhoun was a staunch advocate of the doctrine of State rights and believed in a strict construction of the Constitution, but he was equally as pronounced in his belief that the Federal Government should take a hand in building and improving our common highways, rivers, and canals. In 1817 he introduced a bill in Congress to provide a fund for the construction of roads and canals, and in support of this bill he spoke in part as follows:

"Let it not be said that internal improvements may be wholly left to the enterprise of the State and of individuals. I know that much may justly be expected to be done by them, but in a country so new and so extensive as ours there is room enough for all the General and State Governments and individuals to exert their resources. Many of the improvements contemplated are on too great a scale for the resources of States or of individuals and many of such a nature that the rival jealousy of the State, if left alone, might prevent. They require the resources and general superintendence of the Government to effect and complete them.

"But there are higher and more powerful considerations why Congress should take charge of this subject. If we were only to consider the pecuniary advantages of a good system of roads and canals, it might indeed admit of some doubt whether they ought not to be left alone wholly to individual exertion, but when we come to consider how intimately the strength and political prosperity of the Republic are connected with this subject we find the most urgent reasons why we should apply our resources to them. Good roads and canals, judiciously laid out, are the proper remedy. Let us, then, bind the Republic together with a perfect system of roads and canals.

"While Secretary of War in 1819 Mr. Calhoun made a report to the House of Representatives on roads and canals, in which he said:

"No object of the kind is more important, and there is none to which State or individual capacity is more inadequate. It must be perfected by the General Government or not perfected at all.

"It is not necessary for the exercise of a power by the Federal Government that it should be expressly granted in the Federal Constitution, or that it should be 'clearly and directly traceable to some one of the specified powers' granted. Any number of powers granted, or all of them, may be combined and considered together, and any power necessary to carry out the general purposes of any or all of the power specified will be considered granted by implication, and as an incidental means of executing the powers specifically granted. (Pennsylvania v. Wheeling Bridge Co., 18 How. (U. S.), 421.)

"The Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 1, provides in part that—

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imports, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

"An appropriation of money for the improvement of the public roads of the country would certainly be for the general welfare of the United States, and it would seem that the Congress is clothed with ample authority under this clause of the Constitution to appropriate money for that purpose.

"In addition to this, Congress has a stronger and more specific warrant for making this appropriation under the authority conferred by the Constitution 'to establish post offices and post roads.' Cooley, in his book on constitutional law, says:

"Every road within a State, including railroads, canals, turnpikes, and navigable streams, existing or created within a State, becomes a post road whenever, by the action of the Post Office Department, provision is made for the transportation of the mails upon or over it.

"This provision of the Constitution is growing every year in practical importance and in its relation to the public roads, owing to the extension of the Rural Delivery Service.

"On August 1, 1882, President Arthur vetoed a bill making an appropriation for rivers and harbors; but the commercial interests of the country, through organizations of boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and other business associations, had brought such pressure to bear upon Congress that sentiment was developed in favor of reviving appropriations for rivers and harbors, and this bill was promptly passed over the President's veto.

"From that time on Executive favor and all constitutional argument seem to have yielded in favor of appropriations for river and harbor improvements; but by a sort of passive acquiescence it seems to have gone against public roads and highways, and yet the arguments accompanying each of the veto messages, from President Monroe to President Arthur, admitted that the principle of appropriating money for roads and rivers and harbors was the same, and the same arguments were urged against each. If, then, appropriations for improving our rivers and harbors, involving the same principle as appropriations for improving our roads, is constitutional, why will not an appropriation for roads be constitutional? What valid constitutional objection is there to the one which does not lie against the other?

"Post roads and public highways are highways of commerce, as much so as are railroads or rivers and harbors. They are the small arteries of our commercial body, which extend out into the country and gather up and bring to the market, railroad station, and wharf the great volume of the raw products of the country, which are the real constituent elements of our commerce. They are equally indispensable to our commercial growth and welfare, and are equally deserving of the fostering care of our Government.

"It is argued by many that the question of road improvement should be left entirely to the people of the States. It is argued that Federal aid savors too much of paternalism, and therefore the General Government should leave it alone; but this objection is irrational and without foundation. It is not proposed to appropriate money out of the National Treasury to aid the people in their private business. It proposes to appropriate public funds for a public purpose, which is not paternalism. Before any State can secure its share, or any portion of its share, of the money appropriated under the Federal-aid proposition, it must first show an equivalent amount of self-help and invite the cooperation of the Government. This will be a direct stimulus to the States to put forth their very best efforts. Federal aid, therefore, instead of stifling and causing a relaxation of the efforts of the people of the States, places a premium upon their efforts.

"If the Government should undertake to furnish us, without cost or individual effort, the necessaries of life, that would be paternalism. If we were asking the Federal Government to prescribe our daily bread, or to provide us raiment to clothe our bodies, that would be paternalism pure and simple. Such a function of the Government would be enervating; it would destroy individuality and repress all energy and ambition; but we ask no such fatherly care at the hands of our Government. We only ask that it contribute a portion of the cost of improving our public roads, and, in making this contribution, it will, so far from committing an unwholesome act of generosity, open up new and improved channels to the marts of trade and commerce, stimulate industrial enterprise, inspire every citizen of the rural districts with a brighter hope and a higher ambition, and add a new tie to bind him with increased loyalty and patriotism to his country.

"Congress has been exceedingly generous in its appropriations for Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines. It has spent large sums in these island territories for internal improvements, and much of it has been expended on the construction and improvement of the public roads. These appropriations were made to an alien people who add but a meager contribution to our national revenues, have but little more than humanitarian claim upon our Government, and have shown no thrift, no spirit of progressiveness, and no industrial enterprise or aptitude.

"These appropriations, it would seem, have found a sanction under our Constitution and general public policy. If so, then what valid objection can be interposed to appropriating money for a similar purpose to our own people? Our own people deserve the first consideration at our hands. They have demonstrated to the world their superior thrift, energy, industry, and enterprise. It is from them that we derive our national greatness and our national revenues, and they have a right to expect to be first considered and to receive even-handed justice from our Government of its benevolence and the distribution of its revenues.

"Another reason for national aid is to be found in the fact that nearly all of the great appropriations made by Congress are for projects that do not benefit the rural districts. The shipping interests have had the rivers and harbors improved to expedite their business; the cities have been supplied, at a cost of $300,000,000, with post offices and customhouses; the railroads have received large appropriations, and have made use of the credit of the Government; millions collected from the people have been loaned to the banks without interest, and ironmasters have depended upon the Government to construct great locks and dams for facilitating the assembling of materials at cheap rates for making iron. The tariff laws have been shaped to benefit the manufacturers, but none of them are intended to benefit the great American farmer. Some of our ablest statesmen, and many of those most solicitous of the public welfare, often oppose measures which ultimately prove the greatest boon to the people. On the other hand, it has frequently happened that Congress, in its zeal to extend the blessings of our Government to the greatest number, has given its sanction to projects which savor more or less of futile experimentation. Congress, however, and I might say wisely so, has been slow to stamp its approval upon such legislative projects, but after they have once been inaugurated and have met with popular favor and proved a benefit to the people it has been equally slow to take any step which would cripple their action or retard their development.

"Mr. President, let us now consider the Rural Free Delivery System, which is so intimately connected with roads. What has been the history of this service? The friends of this measure were a long time gaining the ear of Congress, and the question was agitated many years before it received legislative approval. It was regarded by many as an impractical theory, an iridescent dream; so, to give it a trial, Congress in 1897 appropriated the sum of $40,000, only $10,000 of which was used the first year. This appropriation met with such popular favor, and there was such a demand for rural delivery, that it was not only renewed, but increased by 25 per cent in 1898. The appropriation of 1898 was increased by 200 per cent for 1899, and an equal rate of increase has continued for each of the 11 years the service has been in operation. During these 11 years they have increased in the aggregate from $40,000 in 1897 to $34,985,000 in 1907. It is stated in the last annual report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General that on June 30, 1907, there were 37,728 rural delivery routes in operation, the average, or standard, route being 24 miles.

"The carriers on the 37,728 routes traveled daily over 901,068 miles of the roads of the country, which is nearly half of the total mileage of the public roads of the United States. Every road over which these mails go is a United States post road, and, under the Constitution, Congress has authority, and in equity and justice should contribute to their improvement and maintenance. While the extension of this service has been marvelous, it has yet encountered no serious obstacle. It has been confined to communities blessed with good roads. Such communities, however, have been very largely supplied, and the future extension of the service must needs be mostly to communities not having good roads. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, in his annual report for June 30, 1907, to which I have already referred, has this to say with reference to the bearing of good roads on rural delivery:

"The maintenance of good roads not only insures an early and more expeditious delivery to the patrons residing on that portion of the route last to be served, and from whom most complaints come, but lessens the liability of irregular or suspended service on any part thereof.

"It was estimated that the carrier who travels a 24-mile route daily, over bad roads, could, with much more ease, travel from 10 to 15 miles additional over good roads. But suppose we take a more restricted estimate and say that the average carrier could travel 6 miles more if we had good roads. This would increase the average or standard route to 30 miles, and would eliminate every fifth carrier now employed, and would also abolish all the crossroads post offices, both of which would be a direct saving to the Government. By increasing the average or standard route to 30 miles, and eliminating every fifth carrier, we would reduce the force of carriers by 7,516, which at their salary of $900 per year would be a direct annual saving of $6,764,400, to say nothing of the abolition of the numerous star routes and local post offices, thereby saving to the Government many more millions. It is necessary for the continued growth of this service that something be done toward improving our roads. We can not permit it to be checkmated in its growth. No service rendered by the Government is dearer to the hearts of the whole American people than the free-delivery mail service in our cities and in the rural districts. Our people want this service continued and extended. We want to see rural delivery reach its highest degree of efficiency, so as to add to the charms of our country life. We want it so improved and extended that it will reach out into the remotest corners of our country.

"The Government sends its mails over 925,248 miles of dirt roads every day in the week. The Rural Delivery Service would extend over 2,000,000 miles if the roads were improved. As pointed out in the recent report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, its efficiency and perfection depends upon the system of roads over which the carrier is required to go. No class of men in the Government service performs more arduous duties and are more poorly paid. They are required to drive their team and wagon over miserably poor, muddy, and oftentimes almost impassable roads, through all kinds of inclement weather, they are required to furnish their own team and equipment and to make an average of 24 miles daily, for which they are paid only $900 a year. An investigation made by the Post Office Department, about 18 months ago, shows a moderate estimate of the original cost of horses and vehicles to be about $275, and that an average cost of maintaining an outfit was about $250, making the average annual cost of a carrier's outfit from $300 to $350. They carry with them a traveling fourth-class post office, so to speak; they sell stamps, register letters and packages, receive money orders, and, in a measure, perform all the duties of a postmaster. I believe when we come to increase the salaries of Government employees, these should be among the first to receive our consideration. Why should they not be as well paid as the city carrier, who goes over paved streets, and is not required to supply any team or vehicle? I have introduced an amendment to the pending Post Office bill, increasing their salary to $1,000 per year, with 30 days' leave of absence, which I think should pass.

"Mr. President, the Government has been generous in its donations to railroads in and through many States. There have been patented to the railroads 44,464,719 acres of public lands. Grants to railroads of a much larger number of acres have been forfeited. The Government has in this way aided in the construction of 14,930 miles of railroads, and the bonds of railroads, amounting to $64,623,512, have been guaranteed, both principal and interest.

"The Government has from time to time donated for wagon roads 2,014,084 acres of public lands; for canals, 4,500,724 acres, and for river improvement 1,980,593 acres; in all, 53,055,121 acres. The Government has, in cooperation with the States on the lower Mississippi River, appropriated $16,500,000 to aid in the construction of levees and to prevent overflows and the destruction of life and property. No well-informed person would say that the building of levees on the Mississippi River is to improve navigation.

"I do not want any Senator to suppose for one moment that I do not heartily approve all these appropriations. They have my full sanction. I believe they were wise and prompted by the most enlightened and constructive statesmanship.

"These benefits, to a degree, have been local in their application. What I am insisting upon is a continuation of this wise and beneficial legislation in such a way as to extend its benefits to all the people in every section of our country.

"Mr President, upon the rural population has fallen the entire cost and responsibility of constructing and maintaining our public roads. It is only to a limited extent, and locally, that there has been legislation which at the present day in any way shifts this burden, and it still rests upon the people of the rural districts. This is inequitable, undemocratic, and in direct violation of the express principles upon which we boast our Government was founded.

"No country has good roads, except where the general government has shared in the cost and responsibility of creating and maintaining them. All the countries of Europe which have improved roads have a national system whereby the national government shares in the cost and assists in the supervision of building and maintaining them.

"Our present system of road administration is largely modeled after that abandoned by other progressive nations more than a century ago. In England road administration began, like our present system, with the smallest unit of government, which originated by an act of Parliament in 1555 and provided for the election of a road surveyor for each parish and for the working of the roads by compulsory labor. The parish was found to be too small as an administrative unit. A history of highways, appearing in the Edinburgh Review, January–April, 1864, contains this statement:

"From the days of Elizabeth the inconveniences resulting from the maintenance of highways by single parishes have been constantly apparent, and accordingly successive governments, without distinction of politics, made the attempt to combine parishes into highway districts and to transfer the superintendence of their roads to boards employing the services of professional engineers.

"The decided trend of road administration in England has continued away from localization. Subject to the formation of road districts, it was provided that one-half of the expense of maintaining the roads should be borne by the county, and, finally, in 1882, Parliament provided that one-fifth of the expense of the county authorities should be refunded by a parliamentary grant. This is also true in its essentials of the development of road administration in the other nations of Europe, but with us we have continued in vogue a system of penurious localization.

"We can not escape responsibility for our miserable highways by contending that our Government is young and that we have not been a Nation long enough to make the comparison with the nations of the Old World possible, because road building did not begin in France until the great Napoleon inaugurated the system of national highways, which is to-day giving France the most superb roads in all the world. England struggled with roads almost impassable until the latter part of the eighteenth century, when the teaching of Macadam, Tresauguet, and Telford began to be effective, and we may say that the present road system of England is attributable to the direct aid granted by Parliament. The advocates of national aid can have no stronger testimony in support of this policy than the following statement made by Commercial Agent Loomis, of St. Etienne, in 1891:

"The roads of France are now practically all built, and they are substantial monuments to Napoleonic foresight and shrewdness. The work of the engineers in the department of public works in France to-day is not to build new roads, except in rare instances, but to keep those already constructed in a state of high efficiency. There have been no important new roads opened in France for a dozen years, and the country is so traversed with excellent roadways that no more lines of communication are likely to be exploited save in the case of military necessity. The wagon roads of France, always passable and reaching all centers of population, no matter how small, are the chief competitors of the railways, as means of communication by water are not numerous.

"The road system of France has been of far greater value to the country as a means of raising the value of lands and of putting the small peasant proprietors in easy communication with their markets than have the railways. It is the opinion of well-informed Frenchmen who have made a practical study of economic problems that the superb roads of France have been one of the most steady and potent contributions to the material development and marvelous financial elasticity of the country. The far-reaching and splendidly maintained road system has distinctly favored the success of the small landed proprietors, and in their prosperity and the ensuing distribution of wealth lies the key to the secret of the wonderful financial vitality and solid prosperity of the French nation.

"Our national wealth for 1907 was placed at $116,000,000,000, while that of France was placed at $42,000,000,000; yet we have improved only 150,000 miles of our public roads, while France has improved 340,554 miles.

"Is this condition of our public roads an enviable reputation for this great country? After laying claim to superiority over all other nations along almost all other lines of development should we be content to drop to the bottom of the list in road improvement? Can we, at the peril of our commercial interests, afford it? Can we, at the sacrifice of the general well-being and comfort of the great body of our rural population, tolerate it?

"Some of the opponents of this proposition would lead us to believe that the macadamizing of all the 2,151,000 miles of roads in the United States would bankrupt the Government. It would be just as absurd to macadamize all the roads in the United States as it would be to build a railroad or dig a canal through every man's farm. It is well known among highway engineers that a horse can, for a short time, exert about four times his average tractive force without injury. By reason of this fact a team of horses can draw for 2 or 3 miles as much on a common earth road as they can draw all day on good macadam, gravel, or sand-clay roads.

"It should be apparent to any rational being that this 2,000,000 miles of public road would be classified according to the traffic and the requirements in each section of country, and only the main arteries of travel would require so expensive a form of construction as broken-stone macadam. It would be entirely feasible and proper to improve many thousand miles with gravel, many more thousand miles by a mixture of sand and clay, and probably more than one-half of this great total would be adequate if maintained as first-class earth roads. So that it is absurd to figure on the cost of improving our public roads at $5,000 per mile for the entire mileage, or at $4,000, or even at $2,000.

"The burden of inadequate transportation facilities falls not alone upon the farmer, but upon the consumer. If it costs 25 cents per ton per mile to haul the products of the farm to the railroad station the consumer must pay this additional cost without increasing the farmer's profits one penny, and the farmer must pay the increased price for the finished product which he obtains from the cities, because the same facts hold good both going and coming. Some years ago corn was burned as fuel in the Mississippi Valley because it would not bear the cost of transportation, since the margin was insufficient. The railroads lost the freight and the markets the product.

"It may be argued that if the advantages to follow road improvement are so great, the States should take action and levy sufficient taxes to improve them. Some of our States have already passed road laws, providing for a road-tax levy on their taxable property. Such laws, however, are necessarily confined to the wealthier States, whose taxable property is sufficient to raise the large sum from a small levy. All of our States are not able to levy such a tax. For instance, a tax of 1 mill, levied by the State of Pennsylvania, would raise more money than a tax of 100 mills levied by the State of Nevada. So it is not from a lack of interest in good roads, nor from a want of progressiveness, that all of our States have not passed highway laws, but it is because the taxable property of most States is so small that to raise a sufficient amount of money for practical results would require an exorbitant rate of taxation.

"Furthermore, to undertake by State taxation to raise all the money necessary to build and improve our roads will continue the burden upon those upon whom it has so long rested. The State revenues are raised by direct taxation, and the levy is upon visible property. The farmer's property is all visible, and, therefore, never escapes taxation; while a large per cent of the property of the people of the cities is represented by stocks and bonds, is easily removable from place to place, or concealed, and is rarely ever subjected to taxation. The farmers have thus always been forced to bear a disproportionate share of the burden of taxation, which is an injustice which should be relieved against.

"Mr. President, of all the civilized countries on earth this country has the poorest roads. In all else that is progressive it stands first. In material wealth, in varied resources, in the products of agriculture, in the making of iron and steel, in the number of miles of railroad, in the wealth and opulence of its cities, we stand first, and yet the farmers, who largely contribute to this wealth and greatness, have had less done for them than any other class of our people. Good roads are avenues of progress, the best proof of intelligence; they aid the social and religious advancement of the people; they increase the value of products; they save time, labor, and money; they are the initial sources of commerce, which swell in great streams and flow everywhere, distributing the products of our fields, forests, and factories. The highways are the common property of the country; their benefits are shared by all, and they are needed by all; they benefit all, and all should contribute to them. What fair-minded man will say that the people who live on the public roads should be required to build and keep them in repair for the use of the general public? They could not if they were willing. The burden is more than they could bear. No Government on earth has ever enjoyed good roads where compulsory labor is relied on to build and maintain them.

"The effects of good roads reach everybody. Both city and country share in their benefits. In justice and equity, therefore, everybody should contribute to the cost of their construction and maintenance, but an equal distribution of this cost can not be secured under State laws and methods of taxation. Our national revenues are raised largely from duties, paid on consumption, and are thus more equally distributed among the people. Hence, an appropriation of money from the Federal Treasury to build and improve our roads would force every consumer to bear a proportion of the cost. It is not asked that the Government bear the whole cost, but only a part of it; and this is the only method whereby we may hope to secure a national system of improved roads, with an equitable distribution of their cost among those sharing in their benefits and blessings.

"What are the savings to be effected by good roads? Investigations conducted by the United States Office of Public Roads and by various State commissions have established that the average cost of hauling over wagon roads in this country is 25 cents per ton per mile, and that the average haul is over 8 miles. The cost of hauling in Europe has, in many cases, been reduced to as low as 7 cents per ton per mile, and it has been established that good roads will reduce the cost to the farmers to as low as 10 cents per mile in this country. This means a reduction by half of the annual cost of transportation to the farmers. It is only necessary to consider the fact that the immense tonnage of farm products is hauled over the common roads to the railroad stations to realize what a tremendous saving is possible when we reduce the cost of transportation even 12½ cents per ton per mile. The importance of this saving is all the more evident when we compare the cost of hauling on wagon roads with the cost of rail and water transportation.

"In 1906 the average freight rate by rail was a little over seven one-thousandths of a cent per ton per mile. For the same year the mean ocean freight rate on wheat, corn, and rye from New York to Liverpool, a distance of 3,100 miles, was a little more than $1 per ton, or three ten-thousandths of a cent per ton per mile. Thus we see that railroad and water transportation rates have been continually reduced, until they have reached a marvelously low figure, while the cost of transportation over our common roads has remained practically unchanged for more than a generation, and will continue so until we can inaugurate some national system of improving our roads.

"This duty devolves upon our National Government. It has abundant surplus in the Treasury to accomplish this purpose, and how better could this surplus be used? It has money, and can afford it; while the States and the people have not the money, and can not afford it. Why allow our national revenues to lie idle in the banks when they might be stimulating our internal improvement and giving employment to thousands of the unemployed?

"Mr. President, the amendment I have offered does not increase the amount of the appropriation made in the Post Office bill. It merely proposes to divert from the sum appropriated for the Rural Delivery Service the small amount of $500,000, to be used as provided in the amendment. I do not undertake to lay down any rule, or prescribe any of the details by which the money may be expended. It is proposed to leave that to the cooperation of the post-office and agricultural authorities. They were selected in order to have the benefit of the experiments that have been made by the good-roads divisions of the Agricultural Department and the experience and knowledge of the rural delivery division in the Post Office Department. The methods and means of putting into operation the Rural Delivery Service was left to the Postmaster General, and so were the means of putting into effect and operation the irrigation system left to the Interior Department.

"This appropriation seeks to ascertain a practical demonstration of the effect of road improvement in the Rural Delivery Service in cooperation with the States and counties, and the benefits and advantages to the service by reason of the improvement. I do not believe any effort as to details in the execution of this plan could be prescribed by law.

"A number of States, under their constitutions, are not permitted to make appropriations for road construction and maintenance. The State of Alabama is in this situation; but the last legislature, realizing the great importance of public roads and the inadequacy of present methods to improve and maintain them, submitted an amendment to the constitution authorizing appropriations for road construction, which will doubtless be adopted by the people at the polls in November. In that event Alabama will at once be able to contribute its share, in co-operation with the National Government, along the lines of the amendment I have submitted to the pending Post Office bill, in the improvement of the roads in every county in that State. The State of Kentucky will vote this year on a similar amendment to their constitution, and perhaps there are other States where the constitution does not permit the use of public funds for internal improvement.

"No government owes more to its people than does ours. No people in the world are more loyal, more patriotic, or more devoted to their government than our people. In time of war they have successfully defended it against every foe, and in time of peace their efforts at industrial advancement and intellectual attainment have reared a commercial empire which excels all competitors, and a civilization which is unsurpassed.

"These virtues merit substantial recognition from the Government. Our people should receive governmental assistance in their struggles, as far as the legitimate functions of government will permit. No more urgent and acceptable aid can be extended than a liberal appropriation for improving our roads. This would prove a benefit to our cities and a blessing to our rural districts. Many modern improvements have contributed to the amelioration of the hardships of farm life, but much remains yet to be done. Good roads will add more than any other one thing. Give our farmers good roads, and with the telephone and rural delivery bringing him in easy contact with the outside world, and with his daily intercourse with nature, he will prove the most prosperous and contented and patriotic citizen on the American continent.

"Mr. President, I am making a plea for the farmers, not because they are better than any other class of our people, but because they are as good. They do not ask for special favors, but demand a square deal and fair treatment.

"The distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], chairman of the Naval Committee and an active and influential member of the Appropriations Committee, declared a few days ago in this Chamber that 70 per cent of the appropriations made at this session of Congress were in preparation for war or reparation of past wars. A most startling statement when we consider that the United States is at peace with all the world and no strained relations exist between this and any nation on the globe.

"I ask the Senate to pause long enough to consider the importance of agriculture and its wealth-producing power, and compare the appropriations made by this Congress in aid of agriculture with those made in preparation for and reparation of war. The appropriations for war amount to the round sum of $400,000,000, while for agriculture we grudgingly appropriate about $10,000,000. One is designed to kill and maim, make widows and orphans, and fill the land with sorrow and mourning; the other is to feed the hungry and clothe the naked, bring joy and happiness to our people, the building of peaceful homes, and the encouragement of patriotism and love of country.

"The toiling millions engaged in agriculture last year produced more than $7,000,000,000 worth of products; they fed and clothed 90,000,000 people at home and shipped abroad $1,000,000,000 worth of the products of their labor, or 56½ per cent of the total exports of the country. These farmers, for whose benefit and encouragement Congress will this year appropriate only $10,000,000, as against $400,000,000 for purposes I have just mentioned, are not receiving the consideration they deserve.

"The internal commerce of the country last year was about $20,000,000,000, nearly all of which must first and last be hauled over the dirt roads at an average cost of 25 cents per ton per mile, or more than 30 times the cost of transportation by rail, the average rail haul being less than 7 mills per ton per mile.

"In order to show the immense burden imposed by the dirt roads, I have selected five of the leading staple farm products to prove my contention—wheat, corn, cotton, hay, and tobacco.

Corn crop, 1905–6.

Total tonnage marketed	19,083,000
Average weight of load—pounds	2,696
Total number of loads hauled	14,156,528
Average length of haul—miles	7.4
Average cost of hauling per ton per mile—cents	.19
Total cost of marketing crop by wagon	$26,830,698
Average cost over hard roads per ton per mile—cents	.10
Saving due to hard roads	$12,709,278

"The railroads charged for hauling 100 pounds of corn from St. Louis to New Orleans, a distance of 647 miles, 16 cents. To haul 100 pounds of corn over the Missouri dirt roads a distance of 8.8 miles costs the farmer 10 cents.

Wheat crop, 1905–6.

Total tonnage marketed	12,123,000
Average weight of load—pounds	3,323
Total number of loads hauled	7,296,418
Average length of haul—miles	9.4
Average cost of hauling per ton per mile—cents	.19
Total cost of marketing crop by wagon	$21,651,678
Average cost over hard roads per ton per mile—cents	.10
Saving due to hard roads	$10,256,058

"The railroad charge for 100 pounds of wheat from Chicago to Buffalo, a distance of 525 miles, is 12 cents. To haul 100 pounds of wheat a distance of 5 1/6 miles over the dirt roads of Illinois costs the farmer 7 cents.

Cotton crop, 1905–6.

Total tonnage marketed	2,530,000
Average weight of load—pounds	1,702
Total number of loads hauled	2,973,560
Average length of haul—miles	11.8
Average cost of hauling per ton per mile—cents	.27
Total cost of marketing crop by wagon	$8,062,173
Average cost over hard roads per ton per mile—cents	.10
Saving due to hard roads	$5,076,183

"To send a bale of cotton by rail from Birmingham, Ala., to Norfolk, Va., a distance of 763 miles, costs $2.55. To haul a bale of cotton a distance of 11 miles over the dirt roads of Mississippi costs 95 cents. If the railroad haul cost as much per mile as the dirt road, the cost of sending a bale of cotton from Birmingham to Norfolk would amount to $88.32, or about twice its value at the average price. It costs 18 cents per hundred pounds to haul cotton seed a distance of 13 miles on a dirt road in Alabama, or one-third of its market value.

"The rail haul for tobacco from Durham, N. C., to Richmond, Va., a distance of 161 miles, is 25 cents per hundred pounds. It costs 20 cents to haul a hundred pounds of tobacco over the dirt roads of Virginia for a distance of 11½ miles.

"The average farm price of hay December 1, 1905, was $8.52, and the value of an average load in the United States at that time was $11.87. The cost of hauling the load to market was $2.33, or one-fifth of its value.

"The gross earnings of the railroads in 1906 were $2,082,482,406 and the operating expenses were $1,532,163,153. The ratio of operating expenses to earnings was 62½ per cent. Against these earnings was charged for interest, rents, betterments, taxes, and miscellaneous items the sum of $590,386,554 and for dividends $229,406,598, leaving a surplus of $100,000,000. These large sums collected from the public were returned to the people for labor and material, and the money is now in the channels of trade and commerce. It is estimated that the annual cost of hauling over the dirt roads exceeds the total gross income of the railroads. What has become of this enormous sum? It has not gone for material or labor and has paid no dividends. It is merely a tax collected by the roads, none of which can ever be returned to those who paid it. It is a contribution to the miserable roads over which the commerce of the country is carried.

"The cotton crop in Alabama last year was 1,200,000 bales, and the cost of delivering it to market was 95 cents per bale, or a total cost of $1,140,000. This was $540,000 more than the cost would have been over hard roads. Bad roads in Alabama, therefore, wrung from the pockets of the farmers in that State in one year on one article alone $540,000, every cent of which was an absolute loss. It is worse than loss, for they paid it in time and wear and tear of their wagons and teams.

"Mr. President, I ask permission of the Senate to insert in the RECORD an illustration, showing the benefit of good roads in Montgomery County, Ala.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bacon in the chair). Without objection, permission is granted.

"The illustration is as follows:

[Illustration omitted.]

"Mr. BANKHEAD. If I have established my contention that the Constitution does not prohibit but expressly authorizes Congress to appropriate money in aid of road construction; if I have shown that there is no invasion of the rights of the States and that the scarecrow of paternalism does not anywhere show its face, the only questions remaining to be settled are: Is it good governmental policy? Is it a good investment, and will it yield a return to the people sufficient to justify the outlay? Will it materially reduce the cost of transporting the vast internal commerce of the country? Will it increase the profit of the producer and also benefit the consumer? If the expenditure will result in a saving directly to this large number of our citizens, and, indirectly, to all our people, and they are willing for the Government to make the expenditure, why not now begin this long-delayed but beneficial legislation?

"It is not the rural population alone that would be benefited; if so, it would be in the interest of a class, and this I could not approve. Those in the city are equally interested, and will enjoy equal benefits and results. The merchant exchanges his goods and wares for farm products, either by barter and purchase or sale. If the farmer can deliver his products at a reduced cost to himself, his profits are larger, he is enabled to buy more goods, and carries home with him more of the luxuries and necessities of life, and adds to the happiness and contentment of the family.

"Mr. President, the educational side of the question is sufficient to control my action, if no other interests were involved. A system of efficient public schools can never be maintained until the roads in the rural districts are improved, until the disgraceful cabin, now used as a schoolhouse, gives place to a more imposing structure, located in centers of population, over which waves the flag of our country, inspiring confidence and patriotism. A wide-awake, progressive school in every township, in a comfortable building, and provided with the necessary libraries, apparatus, and equipment, would do more than any other one thing to inspire confidence and respect in the hearts of our young American manhood and womanhood, and it then could be said of America, as was once said of Rome, 'All roads lead to the schoolhouse.' This Republic must depend for its future greatness upon an intelligent and home-loving people. The religious and social life of our people is largely influenced by the conditions where they reside.

"Good roads are the most potential and successful immigrating agents in this country. The most desirable farmers and the best wives and helpmeets are the young men and the young women raised on the farms. Under existing conditions they are continually drifting to the towns and cities. They are progressive and social in their nature, and will not remain on the farm unless they can have those benefits and pleasures that association and companionship afford. The loneliness of the country home, away from neighbors and friends, where the schools and the churches are poorly maintained, where the farmer and his wife and children are denied the advantages of educational and religious training, are the principal causes for the removal of large numbers of our people from the country to the towns and cities. The farmer is seeking better advantages for his family, and unless the country can be made to supply, in some measure, these benefits, there will continue to be a congestion of population in the cities.

"We send a commission to Europe to investigate the question of immigration, and many States maintain immigration bureaus in order to secure desirable farm and industrial labor. The question is often asked by the intelligent and thrifty immigrant, Have you good roads? The most desirable immigrant comes from a country where he is accustomed to good roads, and if he is located where the roads are almost impassable for a great part of the year, he will remain no longer than to make and harvest the first crop.

"One of the problems in connection with the transportation system of the country, and one which has in many ways been the subject of discussion, is the congestion of traffic and the inability of the railroads, during certain periods of the year, to move promptly the products of the farm, factory, and mine. Great inconvenience, and oftentimes enormous losses, are sustained both by the producer and the consumer because of the inability of the railroads to deliver freight to its destination at times when it was most needed and commands the best prices. The railroads have not been able to expand and enlarge their carrying facilities in proportion to the increase in production. At certain periods they do not have sufficient locomotives and cars to meet the demands of commerce, while at other periods thousands of cars and locomotives, representing an investment of millions of dollars, stand idle. During the harvest season, and before the rain, snow, and freezes come which render the roads in many sections of the country impassable and useless, the farmer is compelled to rush his products to market, which results in an overflow, depreciates prices, and severely taxes the capacity of the railroads.

"It has been urged as a probable means of relief the improvement of the waterways of the country, which would, in a large measure, assist the railroads in moving articles ready for transportation, in addition to many other benefits, but it would not avoid the congestion. It would only assist in relieving it. An improved road system, permeating the country districts, would remove the principal cause, would enable the farmer and small producer to place his products on the market at such times when the price is commensurate with their value, or when most convenient to him, and his time could not be better employed. The American farmer is more prosperous to-day than at any time in his history and in a better position to dictate the price at which he will sell the products of his labor by withholding it from the markets. If the internal commerce of the country could be delivered to the railroad stations at any time during the year, and as the market required, the railroads could properly handle the entire freight of the country. If farm products must be delivered within a limited time, owing to the condition of the roads, the market is congested, the railroads are overtaxed, prices fall, the producer's profit is greatly reduced, and the consumer is greatly inconvenienced.

"The result of road improvement, wherever tried, has been largely to increase the value of farm land, for the homeseeker prefers to locate where improved roads provide their many advantages. Indeed, I have been assured that lands have even doubled and quadrupled in value along and adjacent to improved dirt roads.

"We hear a great deal being said about the destruction of our timber supply. Mr. President, I do not hesitate to say that, in my opinion, there is sufficient timber, composed of small tracts, belonging to farmers and other landowners, in this country to-day, and which is now considered worthless, because of its distance from the railroad, that could be placed on the market were the roads sufficiently improved, that would supply the timber demand in the United States for 75 years, the value of which alone would improve the dirt roads of this country.

"Mr. President, in closing I wish to touch upon a question which I consider of vital importance. It is a question not so much of dollars and cents, not of constitutionality, but one which affects our morality, our character as individuals and as a Nation, and the stability of our free institutions. Year after year the human tide flows from the country to the city, and the day may come when the words of the poet may apply to this Republic:

"Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.

"Do not let us have great mobs of the unemployed, combining the scum of Europe with the misled boys from our American farms, so long as there are millions of acres of land waiting to be tilled and homes waiting to be built. Good roads will make farm life attractive; they will bring the isolated dweller closer to his neighbor, and I feel confident they will check the movement of our rural population to the great cities."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, there are quite a number of appointments on the Executive Calendar which ought to be referred, and it will take just a minute to do that. Therefore, in order to get these appointments before the proper committees, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were opened, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 25, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 24, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, that though there are wide differences of opinion among men upon questions of theology there is great unanimity of opinion upon pure religion and questions of ethics, since long before the ten great commandments were written on the tables of stone they were written in the hearts of men, so that, above the value of all that is temporal, a premium is set upon honesty, integrity, sobriety, virtue, and nobility of soul. There is nothing stronger than faith, purer than virtue, warmer than love, nor more enduring than hope; and we pray that these may live and grow until pure and undefiled religion shall be shed abroad in every heart. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 22, 1916, was read and approved.

INCREASE OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12766) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of House bill 12766, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to have a vote on two or three propositions in the Senate amendment, and if the gentleman is willing I will be very glad to confer with him during the day and see if I can arrange with him to that end, or have him, if he will, confer with the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. HAY. I will ask the gentleman how, under the parliamentary situation, he can select out any particular part of the Senate amendment and get a separate vote on it? It comes here all as one amendment.

Mr. MANN. It does not seem to me that there is any difficulty at all about it, I will say to the gentleman. I will be very glad to go over it with him during the day if we can make an arrangement.

Mr. HAY. Let the gentleman object.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to object.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman can point out to me, under the parliamentary situation, how we can get at a vote on any particular provision on this Senate amendment, I would be very glad to know it now.

Mr. MANN. I think I know six different ways of doing it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

JUVENILE COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8348—the juvenile court bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8348, the juvenile court bill, with Mr. DICKINSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8348) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia," and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 35. That the court shall have power to devise and use a seal, to devise and publish rules and regulate the procedure for cases coming within the provisions of this act, and for the conduct of all probation and other officers of the court, and such rules shall be enforced and construed beneficially for the remedial purposes embraced herein. The court may devise and cause to be printed for public use forms of process and other papers and reports connected with the cases coming within the provisions of this act.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, when the bill was last under consideration an amendment was proposed, I think, to section 33, which amendment was pending at the time of the recess in the consideration of this particular bill. At that time it was thought that the amendment should be perfected, and it has been perfected, and the amendment has now been taken up by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], who has charge of the bill, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and will be offered with the consent of the House, I understand, at the close of section 31. I have seen the amendment, I will say, and it seems to be a better amendment than the one I proposed, and therefore I will ask that when the gentleman from Massachusetts comes he will have the privilege of returning to section 31.

Mr. MANN. He is here.

Mr. GARD. Then I will ask that we may return to section 31 for the purpose of offering an amendment relative to the jury system in connection with this pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has an amendment pending to section 31.

Mr. GARD. It is suggested, Mr. Chairman, that we now go ahead with the reading of the bill, and we will procure the amendment and have it incorporated later.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman, who says we will go ahead with the reading of the bill, if the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], if adopted, would not debar further amendments to the section?

Mr. GARD. I think not.

Mr. WALSH. I am inclined to think it would.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. IGOE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12027) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had receded from its amendment to the bill (H. R. 11471) to amend paragraphs 177 and 178 of an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, relating to the duty on sugar, molasses, and other articles, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4256. An act to amend section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to permit national banks located near the boundary line of adjoining States, subject to the discretion of the Comptroller of the Currency, to select only a majority, instead of three-fourths, of their directors from residents of the State in which they are respectively located.

JUVENILE COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 39. That the accounts of the clerk of the said court shall be rendered quarterly and shall be transmitted to the Attorney General, examined under his direction, and referred to and settled by the Auditor for the State and Other Departments as in the case of accounts of clerks of United States district courts.

The salaries of the judge, clerk, and other officers of the court specially provided for shall be paid by the disbursing clerk of the Department of Justice from funds advanced by the Secretary of the Treasury from an appropriation for that purpose.

The compensation of jurors, rental of quarters for the court and its officers, and the incidental and miscellaneous expenses thereof, as well as the board of children in institutions to which the court may commit them, shall be paid from the same appropriations and in the same manner as the same or similar expenses for the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia are now paid, and the authorization of such expenses and the examination and settlement of the accounts therefor shall be controlled by the statutes and regulations in force at the time regarding the same or similar expenses of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That all expenses of the juvenile court and its officers for the fiscal year 1917 shall be paid by the United States marshal for the District of Columbia from the appropriations for those purposes made in the act providing for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1917, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to advance, upon requisition of the Attorney General, funds from such appropriations to the United States marshal for payments in accordance with this proviso.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the success of this bill. I have not heretofore had anything to say upon its terms and provisions, because it has been so thoroughly discussed and so splendidly presented by the gentlemen who have been instrumental on the committee in getting up the terms of the bill.

I want to compliment the committee upon the drafting of this bill and the splendid provisions it contains. It is a long step in advance for the city of Washington and the District of Columbia. It seemed to me when I was serving on the District Committee—during the brief time I served on that committee was under the Republican régime, and I was a minority member—that there was much that could be done toward modernizing the conditions in the District of Columbia. With other members of the minority I tried to get some progressive legislation adopted. Unfortunately, there was a time in the history of that committee when all of its time was taken up with property rights of property owners in the District of Columbia, street openings, and improvements of that kind, which benefited some particular section of the city and some group of property owners. I am glad to say that a complete change has come over the attitude of the committee legislation toward the District of Columbia. They are really legislating now, under the present conditions, as if the District were composed of human beings, citizens with rights, children, and other problems that a great municipality has. I am glad to see that the dollar element in legislation for the District is dropping below the human element, and that the human element is being put above the dollar element.

Thus for the first time we have begun to legislate for the District along lines of real progressive human improvement. Now, we have had for many years, why I do not know——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Long before the gentleman from Missouri came to Congress we legislated for progressive human measures in the House of Representatives. We passed laws preventing children from working in shops and factories, and that became a model for legislation throughout the country. We passed a model law for fire escapes, requiring all buildings that had human beings in them in the nighttime to be provided with suitable fire escapes, and much other legislation of a similar kind, so that the gentleman's statement is not well measured.

Mr. BORLAND. I am going to give the gentleman credit—because he chanced to serve on the committee at the same time I did—with being an earnest advocate of the fire-escape law. I do not know of any other progressive legislation that occurred at that session, but I am going to give him credit for that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That law was passed before the gentleman became a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman recollects that the only fight we had on that subject in that committee was to keep the fire-escape law from being repealed at the demand of the big property owners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But the enactment of the fire-escape law came before the committee of which I was chairman——

Mr. BORLAND. I am giving the gentleman credit for that; but the gentleman probably recalls that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], and myself fought all night here for two nights on the 3d and 4th of March, 1911, to keep the fire-escape law from being repealed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I remember that very well.

Mr. BORLAND. But we are now legislating for the children, and are putting the District of Columbia on a modern plane in the treatment of its children. During all the time that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] speaks of, a conviction in the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia was a criminal conviction, and branded the child as a criminal, and destroyed the political, social, and civil rights of that child. Now, for the first time that brand is taken off the children, and they are being treated as delinquents, as wards of the State rather than as criminals. There was then no distinction between the neglected child and the vicious child. They were all herded together under the same law that branded them as criminals, and a conviction in that court made them criminals in the eye of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more. I have been interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The juvenile court procedure is rather an innovation, anyway, is it not, all over the country?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; the gentleman is right. The juvenile courts are a product of modern thought and modern conditions. They treat the child not as a criminal but as one who has not yet a fair chance in life, and that is the attitude in which the child ought to be treated. Heretofore our legislation with regard to juvenile offenders has been such as to confirm their criminality, such as to make them a constant menace and liability upon the State, and in later years we had them to deal with as criminals. We had to provide at the expense of the taxpayers jails, police officers, and courts to take care of criminals, who in many cases had been manufactured by society itself. Now, society is undertaking to remove the cause, and is giving the delinquent child an opportunity in life, one of the best things that democracy can do for its citizens—giving them an equal chance in life. When a man has reached years of discretion, hold him responsible for discharging his duties of citizenship. I hope this bill will pass. I hope it will put the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia on the plane of the juvenile courts of all the other great, progressive cities of the United States. I think it is a long step in advance in legislation for the District of Columbia, and when we can get away from legislating purely for the opening of streets and alleys and the improvement of private real estate in the District of Columbia, and can legislate for the great citizenship of the District of Columbia, American citizens living in the Capital of the Nation, then we have made a long step in advance in legislating for our National Capital. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I regret exceedingly that a Member on the other side of the aisle has cast reflections on this committee after five years of control by his party by saying that this is the first time in its history that any progressive legislation for human welfare has been reported by that committee to this House. I want to compliment the gentlemen who, not only while he was a member of the committee but since then, has been greatly concerned to give all consideration to questions relating to property so far as District matters are concerned. Why, even those of us who have short memories can remember his activity on the question of assessments for street improvements, and also to compel the citizens employed in the departments here to work not only eight hours but to work longer than eight hours by cutting down 10 per cent of the Government's employees. At this late day he has seen a new light, and he wishes to pass humane measures, and in that way he casts a reflection upon a committee that has been doing good service by reporting bills here limiting the hours of women's employment and other measures of like humane purpose. I am glad that at last he has taken a change of heart and has publicly confessed that his position in the past, which only concerned property rights——

Mr. BORLAND. I am glad to welcome the gentleman as a recruit. He does not have to welcome me.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not yield to the gentleman. I am glad he has made his confession of bad faith in the past, and that he sees a new light. [Laughter.]

But I rose, Mr. Chairman, to ask the gentleman having this bill in charge whether any provision has been made for compelling delinquent parents, when these children are taken over by institutions, to reimburse the District for the money expended by it for the sustenance of these delinquent children? In this item you compel the District and National Government to pay for the board of these delinquent children. I can conceive of many instances where parents are in a position to support the child and have been delinquent, more or less, in making proper provision in their home. I have not been able to discover any provision where you compel the parents, in case they are able, to reimburse the Government for the expenses entailed in the care of these wards.

Mr. TINKHAM. There is such a provision in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. It may have escaped my attention. I was reading the latter half of it and did not see any provision covering that point, but if the gentleman from Massachusetts says there is I will accept that, and the gentleman can direct my attention to it later on. It just came to my mind whether the committee had taken that matter under consideration.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I believe section 22 provides for that feature which the gentleman from Wisconsin speaks of. Section 22, line 19, says:

The court may, upon petition of any person interested and after service of an order to show cause upon the parent or parents or other person having the duty under the law to support said child, and a hearing, adjudge that the expense of caring for said child by said Board of Children's Guardians, or other custodial agency or institution, or such part thereof as may be fixed by the court, shall be paid by the person or persons bound by law to support said child, in which event such person or persons shall be liable to pay to the Board of Children's Guardians, or other custodial agency or institution, and in such manner as the court may direct, the money so adjudged to be payable by him or them; and willful failure to pay said sum may be punished as a contempt of court.

Mr. STAFFORD. That section, I think, covers the point that I had in mind.

Mr. TINKHAM. It seems to me that it is complete.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the pro forma amendment for the purpose of saying a few words in regard to this juvenile court bill. It is not a subject of very great satisfaction to us who inherit Anglo-Saxon law to remember that it was only but yesterday that the child was considered on an equality with regard both to his responsibility and punishment with adults under the law. It is only but a little while ago, as history goes, that a child convicted of petty larceny was executed under the English law. Consequently it is a subject of congratulation that the belated moral sense of the great Anglo-Saxon people everywhere is demanding separate consideration for the child because of any delinquency or violation of the code laid down by man as his written law.

Now, it certainly ought to be within the desire of every Member of this House to further the consideration and the passage of such beneficent legislation as is here proposed. I am not altogether in favor of all the provisions of this juvenile court act. I will say, as a whole, it is a most beneficent and admirable piece of legislation. I congratulate the author of the bill on introducing it and the chairman of the committee on reporting it. I sincerely hope that if there are no material changes, or at least no vital changes, that will injuriously affect the efficacy of the bill, it will receive consideration and be passed by this House. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 31 of the bill for the purpose of perfecting the clause which was pending when the bill was last under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to section 31 of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, when the bill was last under consideration an amendment offered by me was pending to section 33, which amendment I now desire to withdraw, and also to amend section 31 by adding the following language, which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 31 by adding at the end thereof the following: "Persons charged under this section shall be entitled to a jury trial on demand therefor, or the judge upon his own motion may call a jury."

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 41. That all fines, penalties, costs, forfeitures, and other money judgments imposed or taxed by said court shall be paid to the clerk thereof, to be covered into the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia, and the juvenile court may issue execution in default of payment thereof: Provided, That this section shall not apply to cases arising under the act of March 23, 1906, referred to in the succeeding section of this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the members of the committee or the chairman how the fees or money judgments are divided at the present time and whether this makes any change.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the honorable Representative from Massachusetts, I will say that it is our understanding that there is no change made in the way the money received by the court is divided.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 42. That said juvenile court shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of all cases arising under the act entitled "An act to provide for the care of dependent children in the District of Columbia and to create a Board of Children's Guardians," approved July 26, 1892, and all acts amendatory thereof. So much of section 2 of said act aforesaid as provides for the appointment and removal of said board by the judges of the police court and the judge holding the criminal court of the District is hereby amended so that said section 2, as amended, shall read as follows: "That the members of the Board of Children's Guardians shall be appointed by the judge of the juvenile court: Provided, That there shall always be at least three representatives of each sex upon the board. All appointments to the said board, except such as shall be made for the remainder of unexpired terms, shall be for the term of three years. The judge of the juvenile court may remove for cause any member of the board: Provided, That such member shall be given an opportunity to be heard in his own defense. The members of said Board of Children's Guardians in office at the time this act becomes effective shall continue in office for the respective terms for which such persons shall have been appointed, unless sooner removed as herein provided. Said juvenile court shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in all cases involving children arising under the act entitled 'An act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or of his or her minor children in destitute and necessitous circumstances,' approved March 23, 1906. The court may, in its discretion, order payments under this act to be made through the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, who shall make daily returns to the clerk of said court of all such receipts; and it shall be the duty of the clerk, within 48 hours after the receipt thereof, to disburse, by check, all moneys collected under said act to the parties entitled; and said juvenile court shall continue to have and exercise the jurisdiction conferred upon it by the act entitled 'An act to provide for the support and maintenance of bastards in the District of Columbia,' approved June 18, 1912. Nothing in this act shall be construed to modify, abridge, or appeal any portion of the acts establishing the National Training School for Boys and the National Training School for Girls, or any act supplementing said acts or amendatory thereof, except as provided in section 20 hereof."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, there is one proposition in this section that strikes me with some degree of doubt as to whether it ought to be in there, and that is the provision that refers to the wife. It seems that under the provisions of this bill, whether the wife of a neglectful husband has children or not, she can come into the juvenile court and get redress. I do not think the wife ought to bring into the juvenile court, that is created for the purpose of being the guardian and protector of children of the District, who has differences with her husband, if she has no children that were dependent on the father for support. I think it would give a good deal of leeway to the court to determine what in other jurisdictions would be alimony proceedings, and so forth. I think it is perfectly proper where the wife has children for the mother to be looked after by the juvenile court, but where she is childless it gives a good many women power to go into the juvenile court without a full and free hearing and exact unreasonable sums from the husband through the instrumentality of this juvenile court. I do not know what the committee's reason may be, but it occurred to me that the wife herself ought to go to the proper court and keep the juvenile court free from adults only.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the honorable gentleman from Georgia, I would state that his theory is absolutely correct and is followed and worked into this act in the language found at the bottom of page 26, as follows:

Said juvenile court shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in all cases involving children arising under the act entitled "An act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or of his or her minor children in destitute and necessitous circumstances," approved March 23, 1906.

An act passed March 23, 1906, devolved upon the juvenile court the jurisdiction over cases of nonsupport where no children were involved, and also cases of nonsupport where children were involved. The language of this bill does exactly what the honorable Representative from Georgia desires, namely, it devolves upon the juvenile court only the consideration of cases of nonsupport where there are children involved. Where a child is not involved the bill by its very words, which I have read, leaves the disposition of the case to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, as the words at the bottom of page 26 say that the juvenile court shall only have jurisdiction in cases involving children.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I desire to ask the gentleman if at the present time the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia does take up cases involving the nonsupport of a wife, there being no children the issue of the marriage?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, it does.

Mr. GARD. Is it intended now by this bill to take such jurisdiction away from the juvenile court?

Mr. TINKHAM. Where there is no child that is the intention.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 43. That prosecutions in adult cases shall be on information by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what is the purpose of making a different form of prosecution in section 43? In this section you place in the hands of the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia the authority upon his own motion to charge a person with a crime and bring such person into court. We have grand juries in this country for the purpose of making criminal investigations in felony cases. When misdemeanors are not presented to the grand jury, there is always required a sworn affidavit of the prosecution to bring a man into court. In this bill you propose to bring charges in court simply upon the operation of the corporation counsel without authority from any person except himself. He is authorized to charge crime upon information not sworn or in writing.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the question of the honorable Representative from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] I desire to say that he will find in the beginning of the bill that no process can be started before this juvenile court without a petition which is sworn to.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That section applies to children; but the rule is changed in section 43, where you exclude all those previous provisions of the bill and you simply authorize the corporation counsel upon his own motion to arrest any person, without a warrant, affidavit, or anything.

Mr. TINKHAM. There is no authorization, it seems to me, in section 43 which allows of anything more than the prosecution in the court after the individual has been brought there—the adult—by due process of law, under some law which brings him properly before that court.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Let us read that provision—

That prosecutions in adult cases shall be on information of the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia.

That is just as plain as language can make it. It could not be any plainer. These prosecutions shall be upon the information of whom? Upon the action of the corporation counsel alone; and he is not even required to disclose the information that prompted his action.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, anyone to-day can apply to a court of minor jurisdiction making a complaint and ask for a warrant. If the court issues the warrant, the warrant goes into the hands of the officer, and the person is arrested and brought before the court, and there is prosecuted by the private individual.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; and that is exactly what I stated; that is what I contend for now, but section 43, I have just read, nullifies the existing law and provides for criminal prosecutions by action of corporation counsel.

Mr. TINKHAM. It seems to me that this is more modern and better in protecting the rights of the individual citizen, by not giving the right to anyone or everyone to go in and make a complaint, but providing that that person must and shall go, if he has a complaint, to the corporation counsel, a public officer, and unless the public officer approves the complaint shall not be filed or information made to the court. It seems to me that that is a protection rather than opening the doors wider.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman certainly never has been a prosecuting counsel. As a matter of fact, whenever you require a prosecutor to sign his name to an affidavit and swear that another man has committed a crime, in half of the cases they refuse to do it. The gentleman knows that all kinds of charges are made before grand juries by anonymous communications. Prosecutors bring information to the grand jury room by sticking a notice under the doors and various ways, except by going to the front themselves and signing their name to the proposed indictment. If the juries notice this information an investigation is held. But this bill proposes that the district corporation counsel upon his own motion shall proceed to prosecute a man and put him in jail if he sees fit to without anyone swearing or stating under oath that he has violated the law. I can not support this bill. There are several serious objections to this bill, and I am here to aid in exposing them and defeat the bill, if possible.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will look at section 31 he will see that these prosecutions against adults—and this section which he refers to only refers to prosecutions against adults——

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; all of these prosecutions except this class that is enumerated in section 43.

Mr. TOWNER. This provision in section 31 says that whenever in the course of any proceeding it shall appear to the court that the adult, the parent, or the guardian is guilty of some violation of the law he may order a prosecution. The section to which the gentleman refers, and with which he finds fault, only provides who shall have charge of that prosecution. I see no difficulty such as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Why use the word "information" if the gentleman's contention is right? It is provided here that the prosecution in adult cases shall be on the information of the corporation counsel. Why use that word, if there is to be an affidavit? The language is plain.

Mr. TOWNER. I will state to the gentleman that that is for the reason that no person is ever placed on trial under our law except upon definite statement of a charge.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is true, and that is what I am contending for now.

Mr. TOWNER. If in the course of the proceeding it shall be found that this person ought to be prosecuted, then it is made the duty of the corporation counsel to file the information specifying the child and put the adult on trial.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman states the law correctly.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman's idea and objection, it seems to me, are entirely imaginary.

Mr. TRIBBLE. And the gentleman from Massachusetts states the law correctly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Why, gentlemen, that language is just as plain as can be. There is nothing to do under this statute, except the corporation counsel of the District simply calls on you or me to answer in a court for any crime he may see fit to charge us with.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I do not see why the honorable Representative from Georgia should object to a public official making a complaint rather than a private individual, when the disposition of the merits of the complaint must be made before a court, an open court, a court with a jury.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I object to it because I refuse to allow any man to charge another with a crime without disclosing his identity. When a citizen is charged with crime and called upon to give bond, go to jail, and stand trial in the court, there should be a record in writing showing the authority of prosecuting counsel. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides trial of all children under 17 years of age and the manner of placing them in institutions of corrections. No provision is made for separating the white children from the negro children. Provision is made for the appointment of officials, both men and women, and yet no regulation is provided to prevent white girls or boys from being turned over to a negro official. The judge of the court and his officials have too much authority in disposing of children who are so unfortunate as to not have parents capable of protecting them. The judge of the court appoints his board and removes the members at will. If the board refuses to do his bidding, they may be discharged. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, this juvenile court is given exclusive jurisdiction of all class of criminals under the age of 17 years. Murder, arson, and rape may be charged, and yet the courts are forbidden to take charge of the criminal without direction of the juvenile judge. The murderer or rapist under 17 years may be sent to the institution for correction on the action of the juvenile judge. I am not willing to make a place of refuges for hardened criminals in the same institution with helpless little girls.

Mr. Chairman, this court will deal with numberless little girls and boys of tender years, helpless, motherless, fatherless, and orphans. I have carefully studied the authority granted to officials in this bill. I am afraid the helpless will not be protected and the guilty go unpunished. Therefore I oppose the bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think there is some merit in the contention advanced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE], and therefore I desire to offer the following amendment: In section 43 I move to strike out the language contained therein and substitute the following language:

That all prosecutions shall be conducted by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia.

I will say that is for this reason, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. GARD. I will repeat it.

In line 21, page 27, as a substitute for section 43, I offer the following language:

That all prosecutions shall be conducted by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Or one of his assistants.

Mr. GARD. It is suggested "or by one of his assistants," but I think the words "corporation counsel" will cover.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 27, after "43" lines 21 and 22, by striking out lines 21, 22, and 23 and inserting: "That all prosecutions shall be conducted by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, the reason for my offering this amendment——

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman kindly allow me to state my reason and then I will yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I thought the gentleman omitted to state in adult cases.

Mr. GARD. No; I did not. Section 10 of this act provides that no child shall be brought into the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia unless there be filed a verified petition stating the facts that bring such child within its provisions. Now, section 31 of the same act provides that once a child having been in the court, having been properly brought into court, that the court itself has plenary jurisdiction and included within the jurisdiction and proper order is any person who has contributed in any way to the delinquency of the child. Now, it would seem to me that the entire language of section 43 might possibly be construed as being another and additional and uncalled-for means of bringing an adult person into the juvenile court.

I think the proper intention of the bill is to have the prosecution of any and all cases in the juvenile court conducted by the corporation counsel of the District. It is surely not the intent of the framers of the bill or any juvenile court bill to have conduct of the prosecutions. The corporation counsel is to stand in the relation of a friend to the child and to the court and to conduct entirely in an unprejudiced and unbiased and nonpartisan way the cases, always in the interest of the child and always in the interest of the administration of justice.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I do.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks that the general provisions of the law and the provisions of section 31 would make it unnecessary to provide in this section anything in reference to the manner in which the prosecution should be begun? The gentleman left out of his amendment, I understand, the words "on information."

Mr. GARD. Yes; I left out the words concerning "adult cases" and "on information."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman think that is unnecessary?

Mr. GARD. It seems to me that when the adult is brought into court he should have the same procedure against him that the child has; that there should be filed a verified petition against him. I do not know the case should be thrown so widely open as to permit the corporation counsel upon mere information to file in the juvenile court some sort of paper and have a man brought in without any process, but I do think it is the intention of the bill to have the corporation counsel appear in all necessary prosecutions in the case.

I think the situation is covered by the language of sections 10 and 31.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield further?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If I understand the gentleman correctly as to his intention, I do not think his amendment is at all sufficient. There is no other provision in the bill for commencing a prosecution against adults by petition, if I remember the provisions of the bill correctly, and his amendment would simply leave the whole matter in the air as to how the prosecution should be commenced.

Mr. GARD. I do not desire to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] has expired.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, the honorable Representative from Ohio [Mr. GARD], I think, has for a moment forgotten the language of this bill in previous sections, and its intention and purpose principle. He will realize as soon as I have spoken that there are no prosecutions of children under this act; that the very purpose of this enactment is that there shall be no prosecutions; that the criminal law shall not be worked against the child, nor even its language used. I will say that this section was put in simply that there might be a method, as has been well indicated by the honorable Representative from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], for beginning actions allowed by the bill, such as bastardy, nonsupport, and contribution to delinquency against adults. Unless there was a provision as to how these adult cases should begin and proceed, how they should be brought in to the machinery of the court by such language as is contained in section 43—and it is the prosecution of the adult, the child can not be prosecuted under this act—there would be no adequate method for their pursuit. I therefore hope that section 43 will not be amended, but will stand as recommended by the committee.

Mr. EMERSON. I think something should be added in there, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] and others, requiring the filing of an affidavit by somebody who makes the complaint.

Mr. TRIBBLE. What about the words "sworn information" in there?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, if an amendment is offered by the honorable Representative from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] to effect the purpose he has indicated, I shall not object for the committee.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I offer that amendment.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? Let me call the attention of the gentleman having charge of the bill, and the gentleman offering this amendment, to this fact, that there can be no prosecution against an adult except upon order of court, and therefore an affidavit is unnecessary. It would be perfectly ridiculous to require an affidavit.

Section 31 provides:

That whenever in the course of any proceeding instituted under this act it shall appear to the court that a parent, guardian, or person having the custody, control, or supervision of any child coming within the provision of this act.

And then subsequently it says the court shall have plenary jurisdiction in such matters, and shall cause such parent, guardian, or other person, as the case may be, to be brought before it, upon either a summons or a warrant for such order in the premises as the court may see fit to make.

And then this subsequent provision, section 43, is put in justly, as I think, and properly, as I think; that the charge of the prosecution shall be made against this adult by the corporation counsel and shall be made on information.

Now, what else do gentlemen want? No prosecution can be made under any circumstances against any adult except upon order of the court as disclosed in the proceedings against the juvenile. Gentlemen, if amendments like this are adopted, you will destroy the efficacy of this bill.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. EMERSON. Does not section 31 refer to cases wherein in the examination of a child for the commission of some crime it developed that some adult was brought into it? Is not that the case?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, and I call his attention to the fact that no adult can be prosecuted except in that manner and under the provisions of section 31. In other words, he can not be prosecuted except upon order of the court. No information can be filed under any circumstances, and no punishment can be inflicted under any circumstances except upon the order of the court.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is exactly right about this proposition. This language occurs in every bill that comes in regarding offenses committed in the District of Columbia. Every bill that comes here contains a provision that these prosecutions shall be upon the information of the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia or upon the information of the United States attorney for the District of Columbia. In other words, this language determines jurisdiction between those two courts. If it were unusual language it might bear more scrutiny, but this language is used in every bill that comes before this House in reference to criminal prosecution.

Mr. EMERSON. Is it true, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky, as the gentleman from Iowa states, that there can be no prosecution against adults under this law except on motion of the court? I understood he made that statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I agree with the statement made by the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. EMERSON. Why is this section 43?

Mr. TOWNER. This is only necessary because it ought to specify some person to conduct the prosecution, and in justice to the defendant it ought to give him notice of what the specific charge is.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. But it does not say that. Section 43 says that prosecutions in adult cases shall be made on information.

Mr. TOWNER. And section 31 says that the only prosecution against adult cases and the only place where there is any penalty to be inflicted is in these cases as specified in the section as arising upon the hearings and order of the court.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. Does not the gentleman think——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read again?

Mr. GARD. I will ask unanimous consent to be recognized for three minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, the question I desired to ask was whether or not the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] thought the words "on information" applied to the manner of beginning a proceeding against an adult charged with the violation of any part of this law, or whether it was just the means of setting in motion the conduct of a case by the district attorney as the prosecuting officer.

Mr. TOWNER. No. I will say to the gentleman if he will read carefully the language of section 31 he must see that this prosecution must be ordered against the adult by the court. That is the only way an adult can be brought into court.

Mr. GARD. I am frank to say that if that is the purpose of it, I concede that the argument of the gentleman is good.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes, in which to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Does not the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] think there is quite a conflict between section 43 and section 31 as they stand now?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman, no. If the two sections are taken in connection—and they must be, because they refer to each other—section 43 provides that in prosecutions against adults the information shall be filed by the corporation counsel. Now, the only place in the whole bill where any kind of penalty is stated as against adults is in section 31.

Mr. HOWARD. I see that.

Mr. TOWNER. And the only place where there is any penalty or punishment inflicted is under section 31, so that it is proper, as the gentleman will understand, when the court determines that prosecution shall be made against an adult for violation of this section 31 that the statute should provide who shall conduct the prosecution, and it is certainly right and proper that it should state that it be done by information which shall specify the particular charge.

Mr. GARD. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to withdraw the amendment proposed by me.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RAKER). The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. So that there can be no opposition in the terms.

Mr. HOWARD. Does not the gentleman think that from the language of section 31 the sole language in section 43 would be that "prosecutions in adult cases shall be conducted by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia"? Would not that accomplish the same purpose that the gentleman wants to accomplish by this provision, and there would be no confusion?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not see any objection, but I do not think it would strengthen it.

Mr. HOWARD. I think it would eliminate all doubt.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman is overlooking the fact that no adult can be fined or punished or sent to jail unless there is a written charge against him of some kind, and this simply provides for the written charge.

Mr. HOWARD. Why do you want in here the language that "all prosecutions in adult cases shall be on information by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia," when the gentleman knows——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. The word "information" is used in about 35 States of this Union as the modus operandi of getting the case to the grand jury in the different courts of the country. Why do you use it if you do not mean it in the accepted sense?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The word "information" is used simply as applying to a minor charge or misdemeanor.

Mr. HOWARD. Not in court procedure. "Information" in court procedure means that upon which a prosecution is predicated in nine cases out of ten. It is so in the State of Texas and in a dozen of other States that I might mention. They use the word "information" instead of the word "indictment" or "warrant." It is the initial step to put into operation the prosecution.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend section 43 by striking out the word "information," so that said section when amended will read as follows:

That prosecutions in adult cases shall be conducted by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, amend section 43, as follows: Strike out the words "on information" and insert the word "conducted," so that the section will read: "That prosecutions in adult cases shall be conducted by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HOWARD. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 20.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 44. That the judge and other officers holding office at the date of the passage of this act shall continue in office until the terms for which they were appointed shall expire and until their successors are duly appointed and qualified.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, before this bill is completed I would like to ask the chairman of the committee or the gentlemen having charge of this bill this question for my own satisfaction. I think the question I am going to propound to the gentleman will determine to a very large extent whether I shall support this bill or not. Under section 4, I believe it is, of the bill, I notice that the juvenile court has jurisdiction of all classes and conditions of crimes that are committed in the District of Columbia by a child not less than 17 years of age. I want to ask this gentleman whether this section applies or the juvenile court can retain jurisdiction in cases of murder, criminal assault, arson, and the like, if they are committed in the District of Columbia by a child under 17 years of age?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, in reply I will say it is in the discretion of the court to refer any case of which it gets jurisdiction under section 4 to the grand jury to have proceedings taken in the usual way.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to ask the gentleman one other question. Is it obligatory on the court to transfer cases of that character to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia?

Mr. TINKHAM. It is merely discretionary, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOWARD. If this bill gives the discretion to the juvenile court to retain jurisdiction in cases of this sort over 17-year-old boys or girls, as the case may be, when every other State in the Union holds males and females of this age to the strict accountability of the law in such cases, I shall not vote for this bill. It is with some degree of reluctance that I want to lay before this House a condition that exists in the District of Columbia that, in my judgment, does not exist in any other place of its size in the civilized world.

There is more money per capita spent in the District of Columbia upon the education of all classes of our citizens than there is in any other city in the United States of America. Every available instrumentality is employed in the District of Columbia for the education and the refinement of all classes, white and black alike. They have their training schools, their technological schools, their high schools, their practical colleges here, where young people can get an education way above that given to those in the most liberal States in the Union, and in this city of 385,000 people, one-third of whom are black and two-thirds of whom are white, 75 per cent of the crime in the District of Columbia is committed by the one-third element of the population.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask for three minutes more.

Mr. EDWARDS. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be allowed five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Is this a filibuster?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know that I will use the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS] asks unanimous consent that his colleague be allowed five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. A good many gentlemen from some sections of the country are always ready and glad to criticize the section from which I come on the subject of crime, when if you will go to your court records here you will find that 75 per cent of the crimes of all kinds committed in the District of Columbia are committed by one-third of the population, although they are in an environment and they are afforded all the facilities to train this class of our citizens, to advance them in civilization, to teach them to become law-abiding citizens, to teach them to be better and more helpful citizens. In this District, where the Government of the United States with generous hand has dealt with them, we find that the cold records of the courts show that 75 per cent of all crimes, including felonies, are committed by a little less than one-third of the population of this city. Seventy-five per cent of the time of this juvenile court will be consumed in the trial of cases concerning one class of citizens in this District.

Mr. MADDEN. How many classes of citizens have we in the United States?

Mr. HOWARD. Two.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought we had only one.

Mr. HOWARD. In what State?

Mr. MADDEN. In the United States.

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, I mean white and black, if the gentleman wants to know. That is what I am talking about. I am comparing the negro and the white man. Why, take the great Federal prison in Atlanta. The number has been reduced now, thank God, but formerly we got a great number of them sent to that prison from the District of Columbia. At one time all of that class from the District of Columbia were dumped into that one prison. Now they divide them up, and Fort Leavenworth is getting some of them. The negroes of the District reduced the "good-conduct" records in these institutions 25 per cent. And I want to call your attention to the national training school out here on which we expend thousands of dollars annually, and to the girls' training school on which we are spending thousands of dollars annually. You go out there and see who is there.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWARD. In just a minute. I am not jealous of the expenditure of this money. If you can reform them, for God's sake double the sum, but you can not "make a silk purse out of a sow's ear."

Mr. MADDEN. I wanted to ask the gentleman whether he was opposed to the education of American citizens?

Mr. HOWARD. Not at all. I am very heartily in favor of it; but I am opposed to taxing my people in Georgia to give all sorts of hifaluting curleycues in the way of education to a crowd of Washington niggers that is of no benefit to them. That is what I am opposed to.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I should like to say to the gentleman from Georgia that since the war there has been no distinction made between white and black as to the public fund appropriated for the education of the citizens of the State of Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. Of course not; but I am just bringing this matter home.

Mr. MADDEN. I was not raising any question about Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. When it comes to exempting a 17-year-old young nigger buck from prosecution for criminal assault in the District of Columbia I will sit here till the ants drag me out before I will vote for such a bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it not the policy of the gentleman's own State and of all the better elements of the South that the more you can educate and improve the condition of the black race the better it is for society in general?

Mr. HOWARD. And we are doing it, and 375,000 of them this very minute are in the public schools of Georgia, and 95 per cent of the taxes are borne by the white citizens of that State. [Applause.] I am getting tired——

Mr. TOWNER. I am glad that that is true, and I want the gentleman to help here in the District of Columbia just as much as his own people are helping down in Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. I am helping here. I get ashamed that I do help to the extent that the money is being wasted in the District of Columbia upon certain lines of education inaugurated by a crowd of fanatics. What you want here, as elsewhere, is to teach negroes and white folks, too, to learn to work their hands as well as their heads.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the per capita expenditure for education in the District?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, there is, as it seems to me, no point, no strength of argument in the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia unless it shall be this, that inherently the black man is incapable of improvement and education, and therefore what we do for him is money thrown away. Now, he does not mean that, because his own action, his own conduct, the action of the people of his own State has been directly contrary to that proposition. They understand that if the black man is educated he will make a better citizen than uneducated. They understand that if the black man is sober he will make a better citizen than if he is drunken. They understand that everything that is done to improve the intelligence, elevate the character, Christianize the colored man is just as much an improvement to him as it is to the white man.

If money is wasted in the District of Columbia for any purpose, we ought to see to it that no waste occurs. It is not a legitimate argument to make that because we do expend money for the education and improvement of the colored man in the District of Columbia that that money is thrown away unless you take this absolutely indefensible position that to improve the colored man is not to improve his condition or make him a better member of society.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not want gentlemen to understand that I meant to convey the impression that I did not believe in education. I want gentlemen to understand that it was the inequality of the distribution of the fund that will be expended under this particular section of the juvenile court that I was speaking of.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, I think the gentleman knows that this fund will not be drawn on color lines but upon the lines that this bill specifies, namely, the lines of delinquency. It is unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, unfortunately we all know that the colored man has not yet achieved such a high place in civilization as the white man has. We all know the reason for that, and we all ought to sympathize with it; we ought to redouble our efforts in his behalf; we ought to make any sacrifice necessary to secure the accomplishment; that certainly we ought to desire for the elevation of the black man as an American citizen to what we demand as the standard of the best American citizen.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes upon this theme.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the committee for 10 minutes upon this theme. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I want the time to say something about the possibility of the education of the race about which we have been listening from two eloquent Members.

There happens to be within 7 miles of my home the famous Wilberforce University, an institution that was opened some time before the war, and which attracted a good deal of attention because at that time there was much speculation as to the capacity of the people of this race to be educated.

I am not desirous of saying anything that would indicate that I was speaking for any particular locality, nor that I am speaking for any particular institution, but I do happen to know something about what has been done there and I believe that it is quite typical of what can be done elsewhere.

Aside from the Wilberforce University there are others I have visited, including Howard out here in the Capital, and Hampton, Va. I do not believe that any American citizen, unprejudiced, can find himself in the locality of such institutions mentioned, and especially Tuskegee, for example, without feeling like taking his hat off in honor of the men and women who have done such wonderful work. When I think of the inspiration that must come from the study of a life like that of the late Booker Washington, who earned and deservedly bore the title of "Doctor"—I do not believe anyone who studies that life can refuse to show a proper appreciation that must be manifested when an opportunity is made possible by the Government to do a great work. I remember distinctly that when Tuskegee Institute was opened there were only two old tumbledown buildings. I happen to know that it is now pretty nearly a university of buildings in itself. When you go there and look into the faces of more than 1,000 young people whose faces are as black as your hat and recall the status of their parents but a generation removed, then, and only then, you will realize what they have accomplished in so short a time. The proper education is suggested by their commencements, which demonstrate as an object lesson the real work of the institution; it is not simply a professional, but rather an industrial education. Its motto is, "Get ready to produce a better article than is yet made, and your place is secure."

When I think of that, it seems to me that the country can not do any better thing than to espouse with encouragement and approbation the education of the right character of these people. We must not increase their embarrassments, but we should multiply their opportunities. I certainly share with what has been said not only by those who have fugitively spoken of what has been accomplished in certain localities and by those who have studied and made reports of the burdens of the people of the Southland in supporting a dual education—a burden growing out of the presence of two races to be educated—I appreciate the burden, and I am one of the Members that want to openly express my gratitude to all sections of the country for what has been done. It is difficult for me to understand the source of racial difference expressed here. I think, however, that we in certain sections are able to appreciate what seems to be—what I would hesitate to call prejudice, and yet that seems, in a sense, to be what it is. Too frequent are the attempts in this body to deride the efforts of the colored race. I have had the opportunity of seeing what can be done in our section for these people in the way of education so well carried on that is being done in institutions like Tuskegee. It will be difficult to comprehend fully the great work done by the Wilberforce University.

In its more than half century of existence it has extended hope and self-helpfulness to thousands of youth of the black race who are now filling every avenue of achievement to the great credit of their race and generation.

I want to again say that I do not think there is any function of this Government that is more warranted, that ought to receive warmer approval than the function of lifting out of the degradation of human chattelhood into the bracing atmosphere of American citizenship a race of people. This can not be done by constant racial heckling. It must be done through the system of education, which enlarges opportunity rather than increases discrimination.

I happen to be the head officer of an institution that was wondrously criticized because it opened its doors to the education of the black as well as the white. This was done as early as 1853, when it required a peculiar courage to do it. One of the traditions that appeals to me of the early beginnings of that epoch was when distinguished citizens came from the Southland, men interested in education, members of my race, and said to the famous Horace Mann, who was then the president of the institution, "You can not secure funds needed for this institution so long as you admit members of both races"; and added that if he wanted to build, it would be necessary to make it exclusive and not to admit the members of the black race.

The tradition says that Mr. Mann stood out in front of the building and listened intently to the utterances of the two distinguished men, from Cincinnati, as I remember it. To them he said, "There is nothing I need so much to-day as funds with which to build this institution, but rather than sacrifice this principle of opening the doors of opportunity to a race that is now excluded from educational privileges I would see those buildings crumble into dust." It will be recalled that this prospect for a race was one of the incentives for the great educator that led him to decline the governorship of Massachusetts to accept the presidency of that institution. That is the institution where our distinguished and much-beloved Gen. SHERWOOD was educated, and he understands the sentiment that prevailed at that time. Last year one of the members of the graduating class was a colored boy. He was universally respected for his manly traits and splendid scholarship. You may criticize me, if you please, but that black boy was admitted into the president's home upon all annual occasions equally and with the same respect that any member of my race was admitted. There was absolutely no discrimination. He was treated as all other members were. He sat at the senior dinner table, and when some one suggested that some may object to it, my own son, the president of the class, replied, "Put Herman by my side; I will see that he is respected." That colored boy graduated last June, and he fills a position to-day in Texas at a salary higher than my own son commands, a member of the same graduating class. I took more pleasure in securing for him through public-spirited people his position than anything else that was accomplished.

I do not believe that any man needs to apologize to any people at any place or at any time for standing for the open door of opportunity to the colored boy and the colored girl. [Applause on the Republican side.] Speaking as an independent Representative on this floor, not because there are colored voters in my district—and there are, of course—but because I believe it is my duty, I want to say that I join in the utterance of every Member, on whatever side he sits, in the recommendation that educational influences shall work continually upon the class that up to a certain time was denied the privileges of education. I shall oppose all discriminations that attempt to hinder any race in its efforts to better itself. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think it should be the duty of every strong man of every race to help every weak man of every race to help himself, and I know no better work that man can do than to furnish means for the education of those who are unfortunate in not having the means to find education for themselves. It will not do to say that one class of our citizenship commits more crime than any other, and therefore that we ought not to educate them. It will not do to say that one class of Americans who are fortunate ought to stand out against another class who are less fortunate. No race in all the history of civilization has given greater evidence of advancement since the day of their freedom than has the colored race. They were totally illiterate the day they were declared free, and to-day there is not to exceed 30 per cent of illiteracy in the race in America. They are engaged in every activity in the land. They are doctors, lawyers, preachers, scientists, physicians, artists, manufacturers, bankers, farmers, and educators. Our duty should be, if they are less virtuous or less law-abiding than others, as you say, to lift them up to that high standard that will make them realize that something is being done for them which is worthy of the plaudits of civilization.

No one knows whether the figures given by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] are true or not. I do not think he knows. He said 75 per cent of the crimes in the District of Columbia are committed by the black people. A statement like that should not be made unless it is known to be true. All statements of that kind injure the community, injure the race, and our duty here is to upbuild the moral standard of every community in the land, to enact laws that will encourage the negroes to realize that they are human beings, and to surround them with every protection within our power, to make them realize that they have a place in the land of their birth, to give them an equal opportunity in the race for life. This is a struggle for existence for every man who lives, and there ought not to be any handicap placed on the less fortunate of those who live in our midst. Let them start out in the race for life on even terms, and if they can win let them win. If some one else wins, then all glory to the winner. Educate them, treat them decently, give them as much consideration as you would the Filipino, to whom you propose to grant self-government, while at the same time objecting to the exercise of the constitutional rights of the negroes who live within our midst and who were born here. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars was appropriated by this House to kill coyotes Saturday because they are a menace to the community where the gentleman who presides lives, and yet it would be objected to by you gentlemen from the South if $250,000 were appropriated to educate the black man, who is a citizen of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is a man who lives who is more strongly in favor of educating the races than I am. I am not prejudiced against the negro race, and no man can truthfully say so. Yet I was born and reared in the South until I was almost grown. Since the Civil War closed we have had the negro there, and it was our duty to do the best we could for him, and the greater number of the States began to educate the negro as soon as they did the white, and in doing that I want to say to this committee that we conceded to each State the right to enact laws for separate or joint schools, and to each individual of that State the right to select his own company and to go to school with a negro if he so desired, but in doing so we did not delegate to the individual the right to select for us our company or to compel us to go to school and to be educated with the negro. My State educates the negro, but in doing so we believe, as did Dr. Washington, to whom reference has been made, who often said that it is better to educate him amongst his own race in separate schools.

and to teach him to be useful in his own race. Oklahoma not only has separate schools, but we have the separate coach and waiting room, which we find to be very satisfactory. And I say to-day that you can educate the negro all you please, and you can associate with him all you want to; you can sit at the same table and eat with him as often as you desire, but it is a physical and mental impossibility to raise him to the standard of the white man. The best negro that ever breathed can not be raised to as good a moral standard as the commonest of the common white man, and you can try it all you want. The more you educate him and the more you, a white man, associate with him the less respect he will have for you. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is not possible to educate him up to the standard of the white race. Mr. Lincoln said, in 1858, that he was of an inferior race and could not be elevated to the standard of the white man, and I borrow that expression, and I say to you, educate the black to be a useful man and useful woman in their own race, and teach them that at the very moment they undertake to bring about social equality with the white race in these United States they are making the mistake of their lives, and when they do they will go on and be a race that will not receive the respect of any nation, but will be looked upon as an unreliable and inferior race. They are a separate race, and must remain so, and the white man or woman who starts out in these United States to teach social equality, to teach that the negro can be elevated and have a right to take his position in society in this country with the white race is not as good as the negro he is seeking to elevate and is misleading, and I say ought to be banished from the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, my father owned more slaves than any man in our section of the country. I know that those negroes were treated well by my father and his family and there existed a very warm attachment between the slave and the master. There was a mistaken idea among many people in the North as to the treatment of the slaves by the masters. The slave was property, recognized as such by the Constitution. These slaves were sold to our people by our northern friends at magnificent figures [laughter], and we cared for them and provided for them in every way. The negro's best friend now is the southern white man. We teach him to be industrious and law-abiding, but we do not recognize him as the social equal of the white man. God Almighty made the great white race the superior race. Mr. Lincoln said so in his debate with Douglas in 1858. He said "the white man is superior" and "as long as the negro race and the white race remain together there must be the position of the superior and the inferior. I as much as any man favor the white man occupying the superior place." Mr. Lincoln said that he was opposed to intermarriages between the races. He said that he was opposed to political and social equality between whites and negroes. Did you know that Mr. Lincoln said that? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] talks about his boy going to school with a negro boy. Well, every fellow to his taste; that could not and would not happen with us. [Applause.] We believe in educating the negro along practical lines and we believe in educating them in separate schools. You gentlemen mistake the temper of your own white constituents when you believe they favor educating negroes and whites in the same schools. You are going to wake up to this fact sometime when somebody makes a campaign in your district that you ought to have white schools for the whites and separate schools for the blacks. Republicans, Democrats, and Progressives all will favor that idea, and when you gentlemen talk about throwing them together in the same schools, opening wide the doors with negro boys and white boys sitting side by side at the same desk, you do not speak for the rank and file of the white race in your districts. [Applause.] It is not best to mix negro and white children in the same school.

A few of you Republicans over there who want to ride into office on the negro vote misrepresent the feelings of your own race upon this matter in order to get the negro vote. [Applause.] Treat the negro right! Why, they tell a story about a man in Mississippi—a shrewd Illinois Yankee—who went down there to live, and called the negro men "mister" and the negro women "mistress," and at the end of the year he beat them out of everything that they made [laughter]; but the southern white man called the negro man "Rastus" and he called the negro woman "Mandy," and he treated them well, and paid them what he owed them. And these negroes said to him, "We don't like dat white man what comes from way up yonder in Illinois and calling us niggers 'mister' and 'mistress,' and shaking hands around here and then beating us out of de last cent we made during de year. We had rather for you white folks to call us 'Rastus' and 'Mandy' and pay us what you owes us; dat's what we likes." [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, every time the race question is mentioned here the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] rises and rushes to the rescue. He represents a district so dark-hued with buck negroes, and of such "ransome" rank odor that you can see the kinks on it from the Capitol and smell it across the continent. [Laughter and applause.] I understand that marriage between white persons and negroes occurs in the gentleman's district.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say, if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. HEFLIN. Is that true?

Mr. MADDEN. There is no negro in my district or in the United States, as far as I know, who is in favor of intermarriage. I am opposed to it and they are opposed to it; and they are opposed to the licentious cohabitation of black women and white men and of black men and white women, as the case may be, and so am I.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, Jack Johnson, a negro as black as melted midnight, married a white girl in Chicago. Is not that true?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did not the gentleman vote against the bill here to prevent marriages between whites and blacks in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thought the gentleman did. The proof of the pudding is in the chewing of the bag. The RECORD shows how the gentleman stands on this matter.

Mr. MADDEN. Just wait a moment. I voted against a bill that made it a crime for black men and white women to marry. I would vote against it to-day if it were up for consideration.

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield further.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman asked me a question.

Mr. HEFLIN. And the gentleman has answered it. He can explain it some other time. I voted for that bill to prevent marriage between the races here, and I would vote to prevent it anywhere in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this discussion has nothing to do with the merits of this bill, and I ask unanimous consent that all debate be closed upon this section in five minutes, after the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] has spoken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid somebody misunderstands somebody here to-day. For fear that my attitude of silence, if I remain silent, might be misunderstood, I want to add just a few words to what has been said.

Let me say in the very beginning that nobody will question my attitude toward the negro man. I was born in a slave State, reared there until I was old enough to leave home, have associated with negro children, and, like my eloquent friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], have "sopped from the same skillet" with negro boys, as I expect he has; and let me say in this connection that I expect I hold in as respectful reverence the memory of an old colored woman as any man on this floor, from any section. I was nursed in the arms of a negro "mammy," and I am proud now to stand on the floor of the Congress of the United States and say that that old black woman, acting under the inspiration of a suggestion from my father, was the first subscriber to the fund out of which was erected that splendid monument to President Lincoln out here in Lincoln Park. Her name is inscribed upon it. She nursed my mother, my brothers, and my sister, and she nursed me.

But we who were raised among negroes know more about them than you people do who were not raised among them. Like them? Certainly we like them. Would I help them in every way I can in every noble effort to improve the condition of their race? Of course I will. Educate them? Of course. Vote taxes on the property owners of this country to educate them? Unquestionably. But there is where I stop. Surely, those of you who advocate their sitting in the same schools—boys and girls, white and black—and sitting around the same festal board—white boys and black girls and black boys and white girls—do not contemplate the ultimate goal to which you are drifting. Is there a man in this whole broad land whose face is white who would for one moment tolerate the idea of social equality between his daughter and a negro man, whoever the negro might be? I am in favor of educating the negroes of our country, but I would educate them in separate institutions; I believe it means a degrading and lowering of the standards of civilization and of education and of moral refinement whenever you invite the black boy and the white boy and the white girl and the black girl into the same school. It is absurdly harmful.

It is not necessary to fondle and hug the negro in order to be his friend. I am his friend, but I know his place. I have but one boy, and I would rather have him grow up in gross ignorance than to enter any school on earth that opens its doors to white and black alike. And when you do it you are doing the negro himself an incalculable harm.

The old-time darky is generally a good citizen; but I tell you, gentlemen, that the negro of the present age—the young negro—speaking broadly, is the most complete upstart and abominable nuisance that God Almighty ever allowed to walk the earth. It is not the old darky, reared among the southern people, but it is the new product that is a menace to civilization and to the happiness of his race. There is only one thing to do, and that is to keep them to themselves. So far as I am concerned, I am unalterably in favor of separate schools. Suggest something for the benefit of the negro, and I will go with my friend from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], just as far as they will go; but I will not open the door and invite the black and the white into the same school. It would demoralize the white and make bad "niggers" of the black.

Mr. MADDEN. All we have asked is for them to have an equal opportunity before the law.

Mr. RUCKER. I am in favor of giving them an equal opportunity before the law, but not in the household or in the school or in the church or in any social relation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee may return to section 18, in order that an amendment, agreed to by the committee, may be submitted by the honorable Representative from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the committee return to section 18. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARKLEY: Page 11, line 12, at the end of the line, insert the following:

"Provided, however, That when such child shall be charged with an offense punishable by death or imprisonment for life it shall be the duty of the juvenile court to refer such case forthwith to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for proceedings under the common law governing such cases."

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, how does this change the fact? This juvenile court has no jurisdiction over such cases.

Mr. TINKHAM. The bill as it now lays before the committee gives complete discretion to the judge as to what disposition he shall make of any case which comes before him. The act provides specifically in section 18 that the judge has discretion to refer any case which is of a criminal nature to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to be prosecuted in accordance with usual criminal procedure. The amendment just offered makes it obligatory upon the judge to report and certify to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, where higher criminal prosecutions are pursued, all cases of children under 17 years of age who have committed an offense punishable by life imprisonment or death. The amendment takes away the discretion of the judge in these cases.

Mr. MANN. Suppose a child 3 years old committed murder.

Mr. TINKHAM. A child 3 years old could not commit murder in contemplation of law.

Mr. MANN. Can not?

Mr. TINKHAM. No.

Mr. MANN. It could not commit murder, but it could commit the act.

Mr. TINKHAM. In contemplation of law, a child under 7 is presumed to have no criminal intent.

Mr. MANN. Supposing a child was 7 years old or 10 years old, and nobody thought the child should be punished for murder. The juvenile court would have no jurisdiction of it at all.

Mr. TINKHAM. Under the proposed amendment, the judge would have no discretion; the case would have to be certified to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to be prosecuted in the usual manner.

Mr. MANN. In other words, if a child 8 years old, who possibly was non compos mentis, should commit an act which might be murder, under this amendment the juvenile court could do nothing at all with the child except to turn it over to the supreme court for indictment or failure to indict. It could not do anything at all with the child. Is that the desire of the gentleman?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will say to the honorable Representative from Illinois that I believe the proposed amendment would accomplish just that result. The amendment, however, was not proposed by me, and there is doubt of its soundness as a matter of public policy.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, in the case of an 8-year-old child, under this amendment the juvenile court would have jurisdiction to determine whether or not the child had committed murder, and in case it had committed murder, it would turn the child over to the court having jurisdiction to try that case.

Mr. MANN. Very well; but suppose no one wanted to try the child accused of having committed murder. Then the juvenile court has no jurisdiction whatever.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the child was guilty of murder the juvenile court would have no jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. The juvenile court could only determine whether a certain act is alleged to have been murder.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Is it not true that section 10 of this existing act provides that no petition—and that is the petition that brings the child in—no petition shall charge the child with the commission of any crime or misdemeanor as such? In other words, there is no charge of crime in the juvenile court. Therefore there could be no consideration of crime in the juvenile court. If there is consideration of a crime as a crime, necessarily it must be begun in another jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. So far as crime is concerned, the juvenile court has no jurisdiction. Under the Constitution, if I recollect rightly, the charge must be made by a grand jury under formal indictment. There is no such process in the juvenile court. Here the child is brought into the juvenile court because the child has killed somebody. Well, if this amendment means anything at all, it means in such a case that the juvenile court must send the case to the grand jury when perhaps no one desires that to be done. But the juvenile court might properly have this child committed to the care of some one where the child would be brought up properly. This amendment would cut that out.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. Does not the gentleman think it would be entirely cured by fixing the minimum age from 12 to 17 for offenses, and that all children charged with offenses punishable by death between the ages of 12 and 17 should be transferred to the Supreme Court? A common-law rule, as I understand it, limits the age to 9 years.

Mr. MANN. That is not involved in this bill. As I understood the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], his idea was that this bill was too stringent against the child. That was the notion that I got the other day. I do not know whether I was correct or not.

Mr. BARKLEY. I made no statement about the bill the other day at all.

Mr. MANN. I thought it was the gentleman from Kentucky. The matter was discussed that way the other day. We had quite a discussion of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The object I had in view was this: Where the juvenile court brings in children informally, which it always does, more or less—having presided over a juvenile court myself, I know that is true—these children are brought in in an informal way, an investigation is held by the judge of the juvenile court, and if it is determined that the child has committed a crime for which death or life imprisonment would be the punishment, the practice is not to leave it to the judge's discretion; but it is that he should turn it over to the court to make it obligatory on the juvenile court that he should turn it over to the Supreme Court.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands that the juvenile court could not punish for such an offense.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the juvenile court has no jurisdiction of murder.

Mr. MANN. It can not punish for the offense. Now, does the gentleman believe that there is no conceivable case where a child of tender years may commit some act for which he might be charged with a crime, possibly punishable by death, where no one would contend that the child should be tried at all for the offense?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that is true, but the investigation of the juvenile court would bring that out.

Mr. MANN. Oh, but under the gentleman's amendment the juvenile court would have no jurisdiction except to transfer the case to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for investigation by the grand jury, and the juvenile court itself could do nothing with the child, when very likely that would be the very case where the juvenile court would prove its value.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman knows that, as a matter of law, a child of 8 can not commit murder.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is presumed not to be able to commit murder.

Mr. MANN. In some places I think the limit is fixed at 7 years. I do not know what it is in the District of Columbia. A child might be weak-minded. That is a matter of proof. A child might be insane. That is a matter of proof.

Mr. BARKLEY. That would all be developed in the investigation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the juvenile court could not try that question, under the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. The juvenile court could not try it, of course, but the juvenile court could investigate the circumstances.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. As soon as the offense is presented, where the offense is punishable by death or imprisonment, the juvenile court must send the case to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for investigation by the grand jury, and the juvenile court can not do anything with the child.

Mr. BARKLEY. What would be the object in bringing such a child before the juvenile court at all then, if it could make no investigation of the matter?

Mr. MANN. The object would be to bring the child before the juvenile court in order that the juvenile court might take a child that was weak-minded perhaps, and put the child in a school, or in a home somewhere.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course; but what would be the object in bringing before the court a child who had done something which in an adult would be a capital offense, punishable either by death or imprisonment, unless the juvenile court had the jurisdiction to investigate the circumstances connected with the offense, to determine whether the child was guilty of that offense, and if he found that it was guilty, turn it over to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia?

Mr. MANN. Of course, the juvenile court can not determine the guilt, where it is a matter of crime.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object to the request, let me make to gentlemen this suggestion for their consideration: Of course, the act of killing a human being by a child of immature years would be an act of delinquency. That act would make it proper for the juvenile court to consider the case. Now, if you made it compulsory that the juvenile court should turn that child over to the Supreme Court of the District, even if the child was only 8 or 9 years old, when, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says, of course, he could not by anybody be considered as responsible—if you make it compulsory to turn that case over to the supreme court, then you oust the jurisdiction of the juvenile court entirely.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. TOWNER. And you make it so that if the case is not indictable, if it shall be determined that there shall be no prosecution for murder, then you can not even have the child brought before the juvenile court to be dealt with as a delinquent. Now, is it not better to leave it as it is in the bill, in the discretion of the juvenile court, so that if it is an act of killing of a human being which can not be considered as murder but only an act of delinquency because of immaturity, then the juvenile court can deal with the case as is proper; but if the child is 15 or 16 years old, or very near the age where the question of responsibility would properly enter, then within its discretion the juvenile court may send the case to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for its consideration?

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the present language of the bill would we not meet a situation where conflict of jurisdiction would be likely to arise? Because if somebody 16 years old, for instance, has committed an offense for which he ought to be punished by imprisonment for life or for some other long term, the juvenile court would say, "We will not certify this case to the supreme court, but will take charge of it ourselves; we will put the child on probation or in some private or public institution which is not a penal institution." Then the grand jury institutes an original proceeding and indicts that person for the criminal offense. Now, what would be the situation there, where there was a conflict of jurisdiction between the juvenile court and the criminal court of the District of Columbia?

Mr. TOWNER. To suppose a case of that kind is to suppose that your juvenile judge would not act reasonably upon the case.

Mr. BARKLEY. Those cases do arise in the States.

Mr. TOWNER. I know that is very true.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 46. That this act shall take effect from and after the 1st day of July, 1916, and all provisions of law inconsistent with or repugnant to this act shall be considered inapplicable to the cases arising under this act.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the committee.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I should not at this time dignify with notice by word or act a most unjustifiable and untruthful attack made upon this bill unless I had been requested so to do by many Members of this body.

This attack has been published in a paper which has a circulation in many States of the Union, and has been, evidently, read by many people who, misled by its untruthful assertions, have communicated with their Representatives requesting them to vote against the bill. This article is as follows:

A BILL WORTHY OF RUSSIA—A BILL THAT WILL ENABLE THE ROMANIZED OFFICIALS TO PUT PROTESTANT CHILDREN IN PAPAL PRISONS—AS UNAMERICAN, UNJUST IN CHARACTER AND PROVISIONS AS IT IS IN HARMONY WITH OLD WORLD DESPOTISMS AND HIERARCHIES—URGENT DEMAND FOR EVERY PATRIOT TO PROTEST TO HIS CONGRESSMAN WITHOUT A DAY'S DELAY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 31, 1916.

Juvenile court bill H. R. 13048 enables judge to bring any child before him and to proceed against it secretly in chambers without notice to parent or guardian. The record may be withheld from all but guardian ad litem, appointed by court, and who may be faithless to the child. Court can commit child to any private or sectarian institution and by severe punishment extort support from parent. Neither appeal of habeas corpus releases child, who is denied presumption of innocence and jury trial guaranteed adult criminals.

Immediate protests should be poured into Congressmen from patriotic Americans from every section of the land. Do not delay an hour; write your Congressman, and then quickly circulate petition signed by your friends and neighbors and let it follow your letter.—G. O. Nations.

Judge Gilbert O. Nations wires the above facts and calls for prompt action from all patriotic citizens.

This measure is so thoroughly un-American, unjust, and undemocratic in many features that the good it might do is far overbalanced by the despotic provisions.

It would give Romanized officials opportunities for greatly increasing the number of inmates in papal prisons, known as Houses of the Good Shepherd, without there being any redress from Protestant parents.

The bill has too many features of the star chamber to appeal to true Americans and is far more despotic than democratic in spirit and character.

It should be defeated.

(Cut out the following petition; paste it on a sheet of blank paper and get as many of your friends as possible—adult citizens—to sign the same and mail to your Congressman. If you find that you can secure more signatures than can be placed on the blank sheet, paste a second blank sheet under the first. This is important and should receive your attention.)

PETITION TO CONGRESS.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Believing (1) that H. R. 13048 is a thoroughly dangerous bill, depriving the accused child of just rights and even rights accorded to criminals;

(2) That it marks the return of star-chamber methods, which foster despotism and injustice;

(3) That it might easily be used to recruit sectarian institutions in defiance of the religious convictions of parents; and

(4) That the bill is another step in a general movement to substitute reactionary theories and practices of Old World despotisms for the time-honored democratic provisions of our Government; Therefore

We, the undersigned, adult residents of ——— ———, State of ———, earnestly petition your honorable body not to pass the bill (H. R. 13048) entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in the District of Columbia," or any other like measure.

I have stated to you that the accusations are completely false and totally misleading, and I submit to you the following reasons for my assertions:

The first charge that is made in the beginning of the article is that the bill enables a judge to bring a child before him and to proceed against it secretly in chambers without notice to parent or guardian. This charge is false. Section 10 of the bill provides that no person, including the judge, can summon a child into court without filing a petition. Sections 11 and 12 provide in clear and explicit language that no child shall be summoned before the court without notification to its parent or guardian, except where the petition alleges that some penal law or regulation partaking of the nature of a crime has been violated, and then the child can only be summoned at the discretion of the judge upon the facts presented without notice, which is a power in such cases that all courts have had from time immemorial. Section 15 gives the judge the right to exclude the general public from the room where the case of the child is being heard, but, in accordance with the exact provision of this section, any persons having a direct interest in the case are entitled to be present. Such a provision to exclude the general public from a room where a child's case is being heard is found in the juvenile-court laws of Alabama, Arizona, Delaware, Georgia, Hawaii, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Massachusetts, city of Boston (Mass.), Michigan, Mississippi, Montana, New Jersey, New York City, Monroe County (N. Y.), North Carolina, North Dakota, Rhode Island, and Washington. All recent juvenile-court laws passed by enlightened Commonwealths give this protection to the child, its reputation, and its future welfare.

The next charge made is that the record may be withheld from all but the guardians ad litem appointed by the court. This is false. The words of the bill found in section 15, are as follows: * * * and the records of all cases may be withheld from indiscriminate public inspection in the discretion of the court; but such records shall be open to the inspection of such child, his parents, guardians, or his authorized representatives." This provision is not a novel one, as the withholding of a child's record from indiscriminate public inspection is provided for in laws of the States of Georgia, New Jersey, New York City, Monroe County (N. Y.); Oregon, Rhode Island, and Virginia, all recent laws passed by enlightened Commonwealths for what is the true benefit and protection of the child and its future.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts be permitted to conclude his remarks. He desires to speak only a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. The next charge is that the judge can commit a child to any private or sectarian institution. The intent of this statement is to excite in the mind of the reader the thought that the child could and would be placed in surroundings antagonistic to the religious beliefs in which they had been brought up by their parents. This statement is also false, because section 25 provides that any child placed under private guardianship or in a private institution, shall be placed, as far as practicable, with an individual or institution having the same religious belief or practices as that of its parents. It is the law in 44 States of this Union that children may be committed to private institutions in the discretion of the court. Section 22, part A, provides that the Board of Children's Guardians, consisting of nine persons, residents of the District of Columbia, and, consequently public officials, shall visit as often as twice a year all institutions receiving children under the act, and section 22 provides that every child under the jurisdiction of the court shall be subjected to a visitation of a probation officer, or other agent of the court, at the discretion of the judge.

The next charge is that neither appeal nor habeas corpus proceedings lay to release the child from custody. The complete falsity of this statement is found in the clear and explicit language of section 30, which gives full and adequate appeal from all orders and decisions of the court. There are no words in the bill which refer to any proceedings of habeas corpus; a habeas corpus would lay for the release of a child as a matter of constitutional right, which could not be abridged by any act of Congress.

The final charge is made that the child is denied the presumption of innocence and of a jury trial, which is guaranteed criminals. The whole theory of modern juvenile court law is that the child shall not be charged with a crime and thus have its self-respect destroyed, its future blasted, and a criminal record established against it. Any other theory in relation to the correction and restriction of children is barbaric and cruel. The constitutionality of this treatment of children and the abolition of a jury trial has been established by decisions of the supreme courts of Pennsylvania, Illinois, Florida, North Carolina, and Michigan.

Democracy will not brand its children with criminality where none exists, but leaves such methods to despotisms, autocracies, and other agencies of evil.

The publication of this article was made for one of the most evil and reprehensible purposes which can actuate the mind of man, to excite religious prejudice and sectarian antagonism, and I desire publicly to brand and indelibly stamp the publication or circulation of false statements with a purpose to kindle religious prejudice and inflame sectarian or racial antagonisms as being, next to treason, the highest crime which can be committed in the American Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CLARK of Florida: Add as a new section at the end of the bill the following:

"SEC. 47. That in the administration of this act the white and negro children shall be kept entirely separate, and under no condition shall they be sent to or kept in the same institution, and that no probation officer shall be appointed to deal with or in anywise look after any child of a different race to that of which such probation officer is a member.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is absolutely germane, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to this part of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am offering the amendment as a separate section, as an additional section. It is germane to the matter contained in the bill. It goes to the administration of the bill itself, and there can not be any question as to its being in order at this time.

Mr. MANN. The provision in relation to the probation officers and the services that they perform——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, have I not the floor?

Mr. MANN. I made the point of order and I have the floor, but I am willing to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I will yield to my distinguished friend over there. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] made the point of order, and I think he is entitled first to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I made the point of order as well as the gentleman from Massachusetts. It is well settled that an amendment to a bill must be not only germane to the provisions of the bill but to that portion of the bill to which it is offered. The provisions in the bill in relation to the probation officers are partly in section 7, in relation to service and summons, and section 13 and various other sections in the fore part of the bill. An amendment of this sort would, I think, have been germane to that portion of the bill, and it would have been in order if then offered. But Members are not permitted to wait until certain portions of the bill relating to probation officers and the selection of homes for children have been passed over with no amendment offered, and then at the end of the bill offer an amendment which relates to these sections in the bill which have been passed over in the early part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois concedes that the amendment would be germane to certain portions of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I see no reason why the amendment would not be germane to that portion of the bill which provides as to what shall be done with the children and how they shall be taken in hand by the probation officer. Those provisions of the bill have been passed by, been agreed to by the committee. Now it is proposed at the end of the bill to insert something that has no relation to the provision in the fore part of the bill, but to put it in at the end of the bill, relating to provisions which have been passed over where it would, if it had been offered, have been germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. The gentleman concedes that it would be germane to a certain part of the bill where these subjects were provided for. What the Chair would like to know is, Is not this a general provision which goes back and takes care of all other provisions of the bill by disposing of the two classes of people because of race?

Mr. MANN. Certainly it is, but I do not think it is in order at this place. That is what it does on its face. It controls and changes the provisions of the bill which have already been agreed to. That is what it is designed for. Of course, it affects the provisions of the bill that have already been agreed to, and my point is that it should have been offered when these matters were under consideration; that it is too late after the committee has perfected the bill relating to one particular matter in the bill to offer an amendment to that at a subsequent place in the bill, although it happens to be offered as an independent section it does not make any difference, in my opinion.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, the only point made against the amendment is as to its germaneness. The amendment of the gentleman from Florida simply seeks to provide a separate and distinct machinery of two separate and distinct classes of people being dealt with by the juvenile court. In other words, it tends to strengthen the administrative features of the bill. I submit in view of the wording of the amendment that it is germane.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I can not understand the reasoning which goes to the effect that the amendment offered in the form of a new section would have been in order in another part of the bill and when offered as a new section, undertaking to define the administration of the bill, is not in order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as the probation officers are concerned, the act provides in another part of it for the appointment of probation officers. This amendment at the close of the bill, for one purpose, seeks to declare what kind of probation officers shall be appointed. It seeks to do one other thing, it seeks to declare the manner in which what has gone before shall be administered. I submit that bills have passed here time after time and this question has never been raised before on a proposition of this character.

When the bill is practically completed and a new section is offered describing the manner in which it shall be administered it certainly must be germane; there is no question but that it is absolutely in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without further comment on the matter, the Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to say now with reference to the amendment—and I say it in all good faith—this bill makes no provision at all for the separation of these children with reference to the institutions where they are to be kept and who are to manage them. The gentleman from Massachusetts, a moment ago in his speech vindicating this bill, alluded to the fact that arrangements were made in the bill for the visitorial power of the Board of Children's Guardians in the District of Columbia.

I want to inform this House—and it may be the gentleman does not know it, and perhaps he does—of the fact, as I am informed, that the Board of Children's Guardians in the District of Columbia has a physician, and their physician is a negro woman; that white children who are farmed out in the District under the practice—when they find a child unable to be cared for by its parents they go to some private citizen and say, "We want you to take this child, and we will pay you $12 or $15 a month," or whatever the amount, and he takes charge of the child.

When that little white girl is taken sick the custodian is forced, under the law, to telephone for this negro woman doctor to come and minister to her wants. That is the procedure of the Board of Children's Guardians of the District of Columbia. If this bill passes as it is we are going to behold the spectacle in the Capital City of this Nation of white girls and negro boys being housed in the same reform institution, just as sure as you live. I am not against the negro and I have no desire to raise any race issue, but a white man who has no pride of ancestry and who has no hope for his race and no pride in his race, I have very little respect for. If the races of this country are to get along and live together in peace and harmony under that flag they must be kept separate. There is no other way to do it, and it acts the same in one part of the United States as it does in the other. We are no different in the section from which I come than are the people in the other sections of the country. Gentlemen from the border States, where the negro votes hold the balance of power, may stand upon this floor and for political purposes make speeches such as we frequently hear, but their people at home entertain the same sentiments upon this question that we do, and they will never submit to an admixture of the races. I am appealing now for the adoption of this amendment in order to treat these negro children right and treat them fairly, to take care of them, and take care of them separately from the others, which will have to be done if you want peace in this country as between the two races.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust, as a true and sincere believer in the principles of our Constitution and in its assertion of the equality of all men of whatever race or whatever color, that this amendment will not be adopted.

Does the honorable Representative from Florida [Mr. CLARK] think he is upon the soil of Florida and legislating for it? Does he think he is in the South? Does he think he is upon territory the inhabitants of which believe in the proscription and persecution of any race or creed, or upon territory which denies the equality of man because of race or color? Does he not know that he is upon national territory which denies any such difference; upon which there is no such difference? Does he not know such legislation as this House should pass for this territory which belongs to the Nation should represent national ideas; should represent not sectional thought and sectional prejudice but national ideals?

He may legislate in Florida as Florida public opinion may allow, but he can not legislate upon national territory except as national public opinion will permit, at least without a most powerful protest and the strongest contest with all of the real Americans, the true Americans in this House who recognize and believe that an American citizen is entitled to every American right without any inequality or discrimination, whatever his color may be or his creed, whatever his wealth is or his poverty, or whatever his strength is or his weakness.

To a little further develop the principle involved, I assert that upon this national territory, the District of Columbia, which does not belong to Florida any more than it does to Massachusetts, which does not belong to Illinois any more than it does to Oregon, when this House passes legislation for it that legislation should and must be in conformity with national spirit, national principles, and national thought.

If you adopt this proposed amendment and segregate by law the negro and the white, you will upon this national soil recognize differences of race and of color which the Constitution in its spirit and in its words has said should never again be done by the National Government or by national legislation. You will be making law for national territory which is unnecessary, uncalled for, and offensive to a majority, perhaps to at least two-thirds of the States of this Union, to whom belongs this national territory, the District of Columbia. This amendment should be decisively and overwhelmingly defeated. This Congress, in 1916, so many years after the national question involved in this amendment has been decisively and forever settled, should by the defeat of this amendment place the seal forever against any retrocession into medievalism, against any race persecution, and announce to the States of this Union that never again shall a Member of this National House propose by any law to proscribe, needlessly offend, or publicly outrage a race which is as truly American and entitled to every American consideration in law and in treatment under the law as any man who sits upon the floor of this House, or who has ever sat upon the floor of this House, or who ever will sit upon the floor of this House representing a great, free, liberty-loving American constituency.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] has so well said seems to me a sufficient argument why the amendment as a whole should be defeated. An attempt at segregation, such as is here made, should not be permitted to succeed in this House. It is unwise, uncalled for, and as the amendment is written can not be enforced. I call the attention of the committee to the last half of the amendment, which is as follows:

> That no probation officer shall be appointed to deal with or in anywise look after any child of a different race to that of which such probation officer is a member.

If it were definitely settled how many different races make up the population of the District of Columbia, we should then of necessity have a different probation officer for every race, for if we did not no probation officer could handle any children of a particular race unless he were a member of it. What an absurd proposition that would be. Suppose it should be decided just what are the different races of mankind. Representatives of them all probably would be found in this city. If this amendment should prevail, we should be compelled to have one probation officer for the Caucasian race, one for the Mongolian, one for the Negro race, one for the Indian race, one for the Malay race, and one for every other race that could be distinguished. We should have some difficulty in distinguishing what are races and what are branches of races, tribes, and nationalities; and when we had decided those difficult questions, then we should have to appoint a probation officer for each race represented in the District of Columbia. This portion of the amendment is absurd and would be entirely incapable of enforcement.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted, the Congress of the United States will be taking a backward step, and I believe that the American people are not ready for that sort of action. The enactment of the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], if it could be enforced at all, would require a probation officer for an Irishman, another for an Englishman, another for a Jew, another one for a German, another for a Swede, another for a Yankee, and then would come the question of how you would classify a Yankee, whether he would be classed as black and white or as black or white, for I apprehend that these men who live in the South are Yankees, if anyone can be so classed. They have been there long enough to be called Americans, and if anybody in America can be called Americans these men certainly can be.

It is a humiliating spectacle to witness the Congress of the United States seeking to enact a law to prevent the brand of crime being placed upon a child in the District of Columbia, and in that law at the same time attempting to segregate the races, and saying on the face of the law that no man can be appointed a probation officer except he be of the race with which he is called on to deal. I have always believed that we were Americans acting in the Congress of America for America and Americans, but it does not look like it. It would seem, according to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] that we are divided according to races, and the division is sought to be made by those who claim to be Americans speaking for America. Oh, it is a humiliating spectacle to witness! It is an outrage upon the sentiments of the American people to have such an amendment proposed, to say nothing of its being adopted. If we were dealing with the question of what was to be done with the people of Florida, that might be one thing, for they have views that they may have a right to express, perhaps, within the borders of their own State, but I presume to say that we are speaking for all the States of the Union, and not for Florida, and not for the States south of the Mason and Dixon line any more than for those north of the Mason and Dixon line. When we seek, on the floor of this House, to restrict the rights of Americans we go beyond our constitutional privileges. I thought the war of 1861 to 1865 settled the question of what American rights were, but it seems not, for the spirit of secession seems to be just as strong here to-day as it was before the war. They talk about the feeling of amity existing between the people of the States, but every time a question comes before the House, where a question of race can be raised, it is raised on the Democratic side of the House by some Member occupying a place on the floor from the Southern States, where more than half the citizens living in that State are not allowed to exercise their constitutional privileges. The negroes are good enough to count as part of the population which gives you men from the South representation here, but they have no right to speak or vote, and no one here to speak for them——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope, however, the time will soon come when the people of America will rise in their might and protest vigorously against any such attitude on your part. [Applause.]

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I am especially sorry to hear such utterances from any man on the floor of this House——

Mr. MADDEN. Of course the gentleman is.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes; I am. I am ashamed to hear them.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not make any difference whether the gentleman is ashamed or not—nobody cares.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will not refer to each other personally.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman from Illinois continued to speak, Mr. Chairman, when the Chair admonished him he was going beyond his time; and now, with the same characteristic method, without asking permission to interrupt me, utterly disregarding me and other southern Members on this floor in their rights, he rises on the floor and, without addressing the Chair, he breaks in at this time. Mr. Chairman, what is it we ask? Is it any innovation here in the District of Columbia? Oh, no, Mr. Chairman. We have a Republican here—one, sir, who is known to be as good a Republican as the gentleman from Illinois or any in this House—who is chairman of this school board. Who was it made him chairman of this school board; was it the Democratic Party? No, Mr. Chairman, the Republican Party made him chairman of the school board, and this board, composed of negroes and whites, has instituted a system in this city that separates the negroes from the whites, and then gentlemen come here and rant about the discrimination against the poor blacks here in the District of Columbia. [Applause.] Oh, Mr. Chairman, that is politics; it is purely politics. It is, of course, for home consumption. [Applause.] It is political; it is an effort to bring the minority back into power, because they know only by such petty politics as these they have any chance for getting back the control of the destinies of this country.

Mr. Chairman, this bill provides merely that there shall be a separation of the whites and the blacks. We provide for the instruction of these children while they are detained. How long will they be detained? Your school board provides for their separation here, sir. Your school board provides they shall be taught in separate schools and provides that they shall be taught by people of their own race. Why should these little children be brought into the schools of detention of the juvenile court and not be segregated, as they are in the other schoolrooms of the District? They are taught in their respective segregated rooms and they are taught by teachers of their own race. Why, now, when they are detained shall those who need teaching the most, who need the greatest amount of instruction, why should they not be segregated? The gentleman from Massachusetts gets up and talks about the Constitution. It is not at all surprising to me that they should arrogate this to themselves as a party, especially when they are put in charge of the bill, the Democrats showing that much courtesy, and this is their return, sir, for putting men who are not of their own kind in charge of this bill. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will pass. I believe, sir, without this amendment this law can not pass. I for one declare that without some restriction of this kind we are not doing right to the taxpayers of the people of South Carolina, who contribute to the support of this national territory, this national ground of which gentlemen speak so much. My people, who are taxed to maintain the schools of this District, have got a right to be heard here, and their opinion to some extent should obtain in its consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 15 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimouse consent that all debate on this amendment close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he will give me 5 minutes out of that 20?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, did not the Chair recognize me before the gentleman from Kentucky interposed?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will give the gentleman from New York my five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Chair recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin first.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that the color question has been projected into this debate. During my service here I have always refrained in any way from trying to precipitate the color issue so far as the solution of that question concerned the Southern States, but when it comes to determining what should be the policy on the color question in the District of Columbia, then I will not surrender my rights in advocacy of what I believe should be the policy that should be adopted.

I need make no apology to this House or to any constituency that I have gone to school in my younger days with colored persons and have served in college with colored persons. It was a privilege indeed to be associated with such a man as former Assistant United States District Attorney Lewis when he was attending Harvard Law School. He had the ways of a perfect gentleman that made him popular with the student body generally.

But what are you trying to do by this proposed amendment? You are seeking to force by legislation something that is entirely uncalled for. It is not the color of the skin that will determine the criminality of these unfortunates who are assigned to these respective institutions. They will be segregated not according to color, but they will be segregated according to their habits and the delinquency with which they are charged. Can you not leave it to the heads of the institution to determine how this beneficent law shall be administered, rather than by arbitrary legislation prescribe that one with perhaps a little colored blood shall be segregated by himself or shall be refused admission to an institution, unless it is maintained separately and distinctly for that race?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I just wanted to ask the gentleman, if his doctrine is correct, why we have a Chinese and Japanese exclusion act in the United States?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because the Chinese and the Japanese are not native to our soil. The colored people are native and have a right to be here. They were brought here in many instances against their will. They are our wards. We should not attempt to continue this racial prejudice 50 years after the war. By this legislation you are attempting to revive the old animosity which I had hoped had been long forgotten. Leave it to the administration of the officials of this beneficent law how it shall be carried out. They are not going to mix promiscuously large numbers of persons who are afflicted with loathsome diseases, or criminal taint, or anything of the like with those, either white or colored, charged with minor offenses. What is the purpose of this amendment here unless it is to unduly hamper the officials in the administration of the law, and prevent the delinquents from being assigned to the institutions where they can receive the proper attention that they deserve? Can you not trust the one who has charge of the administration of the law, in charge of the detention home, that he will properly administer the law and not offend the sensibilities of any class? Leave it to him to determine what is right and proper.

Mr. HOWARD. Is the gentleman in favor of the wisdom of the separation of the races in the schools in the city of Washington?

Mr. STAFFORD. In my own community there is no separation, and in northern communities generally with which I am acquainted there is no objection to the work of segregation, and I doubt the need of the separation of the races in the District of Columbia.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Do you not think that when the representation on the school board is 33⅓ per cent of the negro race, when their taxable property is only 28 per cent, and that representation agrees with the balance of the board, the majority of which is Republican, that they should be segregated, they know what they are trying to do?

Mr. STAFFORD. By this amendment you are taking discretion away from those in control, and enforcing separation which can not be justified. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer this as a substitute for the other amendment and ask unanimous consent to withdraw the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to withdraw his former amendment and now offers another amendment in lieu thereof. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend on page 28 by adding a new section, as follows:
"SEC. 47. That in the administration of this act the white and negro children shall be kept entirely separate, and under no condition shall they be sent to or kept in the same institution, and that no negro probation officers shall be appointed to deal with or in anywise look after any white child, nor shall any white man be appointed as probation officer to deal with or look after any negro child."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 35 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 35 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] is recognized.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has the time, and I have entered into an arrangement with him that I shall wait on him. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Let us vote, then, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 53.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. CLARK of Florida and Mr. TINKHAM took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a separate section on page 28:
"That all crimes involving capital punishment or life imprisonment, where the child so charged has attained the age of 12 years, shall be committed to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for such action as is prescribed by law: Provided, That should no action be taken in the said case the child shall be returned to the juvenile court for such action as may be necessary for the proper care of said child or disposition of said case."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment was to meet an objection offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. The old common-law rule, as I understand, as to infancy is 10 years. This bill makes amenable to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia directly any child that has attained the age of 12 and is between the ages of 12 and 17 that has committed any crime which involves capital punishment or imprisonment in the penitentiary for life.

I can not consistently support this measure unless this provision is added. I think it is an important provision. It gives exclusive jurisdiction to the supreme court in this class of cases where the child has attained the age of 12.

Now, to meet the objection offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if this child is committed to the supreme court, being over 12 years of age, and the supreme court, after an investigation of the facts surrounding the commission of the crime, decides that the child is not guilty of a crime which carries with it a punishment equivalent to capital punishment or life imprisonment, the case is retransferred to the juvenile court, for the juvenile court to take such action in the premises as it may deem meet and proper.

Now, it does not take a single, solitary right away from the juvenile court that it should properly exercise. I think the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], who is a friend of this bill, will agree that this amendment does not work any hardship upon the children. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] in charge of the bill will admit that this amendment ought to go in for the purpose of meeting the objections that have been interposed by several gentlemen on the floor of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HOWARD. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, about the pending bill and amendments I know little and will say nothing. I regret exceedingly that this debate has strayed off into a futile discussion of the race question. You might just as well be discussing the great question as to who hit Billy Patterson, or who fired the Ephesian dome, or how old is Ann, or who was the man in the iron mask as to be discussing this color question. [Laughter.] It is gradually and slowly settling itself, and all the talk Congress can do will not expedite the settlement. At any rate, it has no proper place in the consideration of the pending bill.

The suggestion I want to make is this: You have wasted three mortal hours on a question that is absolutely immaterial; that is, most of the talk was about one that was immaterial. If you gentlemen keep on wasting time in this way, we are going to be in session when the frost comes next fall. As we all want to get away from here, my advice to all, on both sides of the Chamber, is, leave out these superfluous debates. [Applause.] Stick to the business before the House and get away from here. I wish Congress could adjourn to-night. [Applause.] Because as long as we stay here some gentleman with an inflammable temper is liable to precipitate a debate that will ring around the world and will do a wonderful amount of devilment. [Applause.] Of course, there is no danger of most of the Members doing that. But you can never tell what anybody is going to do when he is in a close personal contest in a debate.

You Republicans are just as much interested in getting away from here as the Democrats are, because you have to look after your fences as well as the Democrats have. [Laughter.] You have not the world by the tail with a downhill pull by any means. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Pretty nearly. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, no; you have not. Your tail hold will slip. [Laughter.]

Having said that much, I am going to say something about this educational question. I have a perfect right to talk about it. I was born and reared in Kentucky. When a child I played with the negro children as well as with white children. I worked with the negroes. I ate with them sometimes out in the fields by the big springs at harvest time. These things did not alter our social relations one whit—a fact thoroughly understood by both the Caucasians and the Negroes. I live among them now. There are 5,000 of them in my district that vote, and most of them, unfortunately, vote the Republican ticket [laughter], although in increasing numbers they are accumulating sense enough to vote the Democratic ticket. [Renewed laughter.] There is another reason. Some of the hardest fights that ever I made in court have been, by appointment of a judge, generally to defend some poor, friendless negroes, and I have made just as hard a fight for them as I would have made for the President of the United States, or the Governor of Missouri, or anybody else, and I would do it over again. [Applause.] Many of my southern brethren here have done likewise. If they get into trouble in my town they come to see me when I am at home, and I aid them just as much as I would the white unfortunate. Personally they are friendly to me and mine and we are friendly to them. Another reason why I talk about it is that from the very beginning Missouri has given negro children precisely the same school facilities that she has given her own white children. [Applause.]

I will tell the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] a thing that he does not know. If Missouri were to adopt the Massachusetts qualifications on suffrage, the Vermont qualifications on suffrage, or the Mississippi qualiffcations on suffrage, which Mississippi copied verbatim from Massachusetts and Vermont, it would not disfranchise 10 per cent of the negroes in Missouri. You have to get old ones, who were grown up past school age before they were made free, to find negroes in Missouri who can not read and write, and, as a matter of fact, a good many of them in Missouri and in Kentucky and other border States could read and write before the war.

Now, what is all this hullabaloo about that you have been carrying on here for three hours, when you ought to have passed this bill two hours and a half ago? [Laughter.] It is about a question that is as dead as the men who lived before the flood. This color question is working itself out, and it is got to be worked out, as Mr. Speaker CANNON knows—because he was born down there—it must be worked out by individual communities and States. [Applause.] That is the way it must be worked out; and the trouble is—and I say it with all kindness—that you Northern people do not know half as much about it as we do. [Applause.] That is the truth. Nobody who has any sense, Democrat or Republican, wants to mistreat the negroes. We give them work; we treat them in a kindly way; and what is more important, we pay them full wages. The idea that we maltreat them is absolutely preposterous. We want to give them a fair chance in the race of life, and I have always said that Dr. Booker T. Washington did a great work. His advice to them was to go to work and prepare themselves at what are called vocational-training schools in order to make a living. If I had my way about it, that would be the principal feature in all the schools of America, white as well as black. [Applause.] The Germans have what they call bread-and-butter sciences, and all of us, with a few exceptions, so few that it is not necessary to mention them—your children, my children, and the children of nearly everybody else in this country, black, white, yellow, or red, must spend the most of their lives in learning and in practicing the bread-and-butter sciences. [Applause.] To sum the whole discussion up: We have 11,000,000 negroes in this country. We are tied to them and they are tied to us. Certainly it is best for the country to make the best citizens that it is possible to make of them. Increase their virtue and intelligence and the Republic will be better off. Some of you Republicans made speeches for political effect, and I have a lurking suspicion that some of these Democrats did, too, for local effect. [Laughter.] I leave off where I began by urging you, one and all, without regard to political affiliations, to cease from wasting time in useless and unnecessary debate and go to work and get ready to get away from here at the earliest possible moment consistent with the proper transaction of the public business. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MANN. There is but one amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. One amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendment to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8348) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CLARK of Florida moves to recommit the bill (H. R. 8348) to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with instructions to report the same back instanter with the following amendment: Add to the bill as an additional section the following:

"SEC. 47. That in the administration of this act the white and negro shall be kept entirely separate, and under no condition shall they be sent to or kept in the same institution, and that no negro probation officer shall be appointed to deal with or in anywise look after any white child, nor shall any white man be appointed as probation officer to deal with or look after any negro child.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. The bill which the House had under consideration was H. R. 8348, and the House simply took the provisions of H. R. 13048 and substituted that as one amendment. Now, the gentleman's motion is to recommit H. R. 13048 instead of H. R. 8348.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is true. I ask that that correction be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that that correction be made. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 197, answered "present" 5, not voting 119, as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred H. Res. 215, respectfully report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution the Committee on Military Affairs be, and hereby is, discharged from the consideration of H. R. 12766, a bill to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, with the Senate amendments thereto; that the said Senate amendments be, and hereby are, disagreed to by the House and a conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the said bill; and the Speaker shall immediately appoint the managers on the part of the House, without intervening motion.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not a privileged rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the rule provides that the Committee on Rules shall not report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

Paragraph 4 of Rule XVI provides:

When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn, lay on the table, for the previous question (which motions shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to amend or postpone indefinitely.

Further:

After the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution, one motion to recommit shall be in order, and the Speaker shall give preference in recognition for such purpose to a Member who is opposed to the bill or joint resolution.

There is no distinction between a motion to recommit and a motion to refer, so that paragraph 4 of Rule XVI provides in two places for a motion to refer or a motion to recommit. This matter was before the House on October 9, 1913 (p. 5520 of the RECORD, vol. 50, pt. 6), at which time a rule was reported from the Committee on Rules in reference to the urgent deficiency bill providing:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this order the bill (H. R. 7898) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, be taken from the Speaker's table, that the amendments of the Senate thereto be disagreed to in gross, that the conference asked by the Senate be agreed to, and that the Speaker, without intervening motion, appoint managers on the part of the House.

The present rule is drafted, I think, upon that rule in all probability. I made the point of order at that time that that resolution was not privileged. The Speaker finally overruled the point of order and held that the motion was privileged and that there was no right to make the motion to recommit. As far as I can gather, the Speaker based his decision upon these grounds: That the right in the minority to move to recommit would still exist when the conference report was made to the House. That is what the Speaker stated.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will permit, the other day when these questions were floating around here in the air, and, being threatened, the Chair took particular pains to investigate that question. And the Chair has no doubt in his mind whatever that you can make a motion to recommit a conference report, and make it with instructions, at that.

That case was where the rule provided that the House should agree to a conference asked for by the Senate, and under the practice of the two bodies the House that has asked for a conference acts last upon the report and the House that agrees to a conference acts first upon the conference report. Therefore, when the Speaker stated at the time this matter was up before that the rights of the minority would still be preserved to make a motion to recommit the conference report, it was based upon that proposition, but the right to move to recommit a conference report does not exist after one of the bodies has acted upon the report and the conferees are discharged, and if this bill comes back to the House with a conference report it will be after the Senate has acted upon the conference report, and if the Senate agrees to the conference report it would be too late to make the motion in the House to recommit the bill to the conference committee, because the conferees on the part of the Senate will have been discharged, and the rules provide that you can not make the motion to recommit a conference report to the conferees after the managers on the part of either the House or the Senate have been discharged.

There is no chance for the minority to make a motion to recommit this bill except at this time, if the conferees agree upon a report, as we have the right to assume that they will, and if the Speaker holds that you can bring in a rule to send a bill to conference by disagreement, cutting out the motion to recommit, then you absolutely destroy the right of the minority to make the motion to recommit. In the argument on that question on October 9, 1913, Mr. SHERLEY, on page 5521, said:

If the Speaker will permit, I should like to suggest another matter. The Senate having asked a conference and the conference being ordered, the matter will have to come to this House before the Senate can act on it, and therefore the condition that the gentleman presents when a motion to recommit would not be in order on a conference report can not arise as to this particular matter.

Mr. Speaker, as I understood at that time, and as I understand from the reading of what took place at that time, the Speaker put his decision upon the proposition that the Senate having asked for a conference, the House agreeing to the conference, the conference report would have to come before the House when the conferees were not yet discharged, and when the motion to recommit the conference report would be in order. But under this rule before the conference report comes to the House the Senate must have acted upon the conference report and it is too late to make a motion to recommit the bill to the conference committee.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I understood fully the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The situation here is not a complex one nor is it an unusual one. On the 23d of March the House of Representatives passed a bill to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States. That bill in the regular course went to the Senate, and it has been acted upon by the Senate, the Senate having adopted two amendments. One is an amendment which strikes out all of the House bill and inserts an entirely new bill. The other amendment amends the title. The Senate action in the regular course has been reported to the House in the usual way, and an effort was made by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to secure, by unanimous consent, a disagreement to the Senate amendments and to ask for a conference. That was objected to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and under the rules of the House the House bill as it was amended by the Senate went to the Committee on Military Affairs, where it now rests. The resolution which is presented here is in accordance with numerous precedents. It provides for the discharge of that committee, a disagreement to the Senate amendment, and a request for a conference. The motion to recommit, to which the gentleman from Illinois referred, does not apply, nor can it, in my opinion, by any possible construction of the rules be brought to apply to a situation such as that which we have before us now. If this matter can not go to conference in this way, how else can it go to conference? There is only one other way—that is, by unanimous consent—and that has been tried.

Is it possible, Mr. Speaker, that by any sort of construction of any rule of the House this House can be said to have so tied its hands as that it can not ask for a conference upon a bill? The motion to recommit, to which the gentleman refers, applies to an entirely different situation. It is true that the general rules of the House prevent the Committee on Rules from bringing in any special rule which would deprive the minority, whether a partisan minority or a numerical minority, or whatever it might be, of the power to make the motion to recommit, and thereby to make a record of what it desires. The minority had that opportunity and it exercised it when this bill was before the House. That general rule which the gentleman from Illinois read was never intended to apply to a situation such as this. It was intended to apply to a bill up before the House for consideration in the regular way under the general rules of the House. It had its application when this bill was before the House at a previous time. If the Speaker has before him volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents and will turn to paragraph 3246——

The SPEAKER. What is the paragraph?

Mr. GARRETT. The particular paragraph to which I would call his attention at this particular moment is 3246, page 230. There is a resolution which with a change of verbiage so as to make it applicable to this particular bill is in the exact language of the resolution which is now before the House——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that was before this rule was adopted preventing the Committee on Rules from reporting a bill closing a motion to recommit.

Mr. GARRETT. It was before the adoption of this particular general rule.

Mr. MANN. At that time, of course, it was in order.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; and the argument which I am making is that there is nothing in this general rule which was ever intended to change, or which does change in any way, the procedure there had and adopted. The general rule does prevent the Committee on Rules from bringing in a special resolution which would avoid a motion to recommit where a bill is under consideration under the general rules. The so-called preparedness bill is not under consideration now. That bill is in the Committee on Military Affairs. This is a resolution brought in under the general paragraph which gives power to the Committee on Rules to report at any time an order of business.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the Committee on Rules could report a rule, Resolved, that upon the adoption of this rule House bill so-and-so shall be considered as passed, and thereby cut out the motion to recommit?

Mr. GARRETT. Well, that question is not before the House at this time.

Mr. MANN. Well, it looks to me as though it were quite on all fours.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not care to express an opinion on that at this time, but the point is, this bill has been before the House——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the last words in this rule:

And the Speaker shall immediately appoint managers on the part of the House, without intervening motion.

And now as near as the Chair can find out that is what the gentleman from Illinois is objecting to. The Chair simply desired to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the discrepancy or difference between this present rule and this one that is set forth in section 3246 of Hinds' Precedents.

Mr. GARRETT. Then, Mr. Speaker, suppose that expression "without intervening motion" were left out; the gentlemen from Illinois could not then make a motion to recommit. He could make a motion to instruct, but he places his whole argument upon the proposition that the rules provide that you can not prevent a motion to recommit. Even if that language "without intervening motion" were stricken from it neither the gentleman from Illinois nor any other gentleman could make a motion to recommit under the rules.

The SPEAKER. He could not make a motion to recommit now, but if that language were stricken from the rule he could make a motion to recommit the conference report.

Mr. HAY. No; there is no conference report.

Mr. GARRETT. There is no conference report, Mr. Speaker. This is an effort to bring about a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows, and it is to be hoped there will be a conference report.

Mr. MANN. Nobody objects to a conference.

The Speaker will remember that this matter came up when the present distinguished occupant of the chair was in the chair, on the Post Office appropriation bill, which came before the House with Senate amendments. On a rule from the committee that did not cut out the motion to recommit, the Speaker held I was in order in offering a motion to recommit. That is the way the parcel post got into the law, one of the greatest reforms that has been accomplished during the days of the Speaker in the chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not wish to interrupt the gentleman, except to call his attention to that one thing.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I have said all that I really have to say. When the conference report returns here, of course, a motion to recommit that will be a different proposition. The Speaker is not called upon to speculate about what may happen on the adoption of a conference report or what may happen to a conference report when it is brought back. The immediate thing before the Speaker of the House is an effort to bring about a conference. The right to make a motion to recommit, to which the gentleman has referred, does not apply to a conference or to a request for a conference. It may apply to a conference report, but it does not apply to a request for a conference, nor does it apply to a rule providing for a conference. It applies to a bill, of course, and probably may apply to the conference report when it comes back.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is anticipating and looking forward to what will happen, and that is that a conference report will be brought in here, and under the ordinary practice he would have the right to make a motion to recommit it, but that under the peculiar circumstances under which this one will come back here, if it ever comes, under this rule he would be cut out from that forthwith.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, under this proposed resolution I respectfully submit, if that is the Speaker's understanding—I do not think it is the understanding of the gentleman from Illinois—that he would be prevented from making a motion to recommit by reason of this resolution when the conference report comes back. It was speculating upon a contingency, if I understood the gentleman from Illinois correctly, that he then might be cut out. The gentleman from Illinois did not argue that under this rule, when the conference report was returned, he would be prevented from making a motion to recommit. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois if I am right in my understanding of his argument?

Mr. MANN. That is right. I am always frank with the House on a parliamentary proposition. The effect of the rule would be to prevent a motion to recommit ever being made.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman does not speak of the technical effect. He speaks of what might happen.

Mr. MANN. I speak of the technical effect.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman insists that this rule would prevent a motion to recommit upon a conference report when it comes in, I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I do not think there is any disagreement between us at all. This rule prevents a motion to recommit now, and if this rule be agreed to the House asks for a conference, and when the conference report comes in it must have been acted upon by the Senate first, and it is not in order then to move to recommit.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman submit to an inquiry?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman were permitted now to make a motion to recommit, to where would he move to recommit it? Do I make myself clear?

Mr. MANN. I will answer that when I reach it. [Laughter.] I have the motion prepared.

Mr. GARRETT. The bill is now before the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. But if this rule be adopted, or any other rule, it will not then be before the Committee on Military Affairs, allow me to remind my distinguished friend from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. That is very true. It will be in conference.

Mr. MANN. No; it will not. It will be in the House, and the Committee on Military Affairs discharged. That is the process. I know that the Speaker wants to uphold the rights of the minority in these matters. In the old days, on a motion to recommit, there was a conflict between the majority and the minority as to which should make the motion. After a long contest, lasting over years, on this subject the House in the revision of the rules put the provision in that the motion to recommit would be preserved and given to the minority. Now, of course, if you are going to cut that out by a rule, a technical construction, you can do it by a ruling of the Speaker. If you can send this bill to conference and cut out the motion to recommit, the Committee on Rules could have brought in a rule that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the consideration of the bill H. R. 12766 and that it be considered as passed by the House, and thereby cut out the motion to recommit. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] was frank enough not to want to answer that question; and yet, if you can do the one you can do the other. No one desires to prevent this bill from going to conference. All we desire, as far as I know, is to have the House express its opinion upon some of the propositions involved in the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, of course the gentleman recognizes the fact that, so far as this matter is concerned, there is practically but one amendment. There is an amendment amending the title, of course, but the real amendment is the Senate bill, which was substituted for the House bill.

Mr. MANN. I recognize that fact, and I recognize there are various ways by which you can test the sense of the House upon the subject.

Mr. GARRETT. It would probably require a special rule even to do that.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it would. I have five ways prepared, at least. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT. I wish again to call the attention of the Speaker to the language to which the gentleman referred in his opening remarks. I read:

> After the previous question shall have been ordered on the discharge of a bill or joint resolution, one motion to recommit shall be in order, and the Speaker shall give preference in recognition for such purpose to a Member who is opposed to the bill or joint resolution.

Now, there is another rule which provides that the Committee on Rules may not bring in a special rule which will cut off the power to move to recommit being given to a Member under that general rule. That applies on the passage of a bill or joint resolution. It does not apply to an order of procedure proposed from the Committee on Rules to get a bill into conference.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is an attempt on the part of the Committee on Rules to do by indirection that which it could not do directly.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asked the Chair in his opening remarks if this bill could not be sent to conference in the way it is proposed in this rule; how could it be sent there, unanimous consent having been objected to? Why, Mr. Speaker, it would have been perfectly easy for the Committee on Rules to have brought into this House a rule providing that it should be in order to move that the Senate amendment to this bill be disagreed to, and that a conference be asked for. Does the gentleman say, if that had been done, it would not have brought the question directly before the House and the right of the minority to recommit would have been preserved? Of course it would, and the only purpose of the Committee on Rules in bringing in this form of rule—an unnecessary form of rule—is to cut out the right of the minority to make the motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman spoke of bringing this bill before the House by a rule. Under the rules, is it not in order for the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], by direction of his committee, to report this bill back, and to move that the House go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and after five minutes' debate, close all debate?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows that this is not a privileged bill, and if the Committee on Military Affairs reported it back, it would go on the calendar, and it could not be called up except on Calendar Wednesday, when the Committee on Military Affairs was called.

Mr. MANN. Yes; the gentleman could get it up on unanimous consent.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman could not get it up by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not try.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman tried, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objected to it.

Mr. MANN. I was willing for it to go before the House.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman says I can get it into conference. I can not get it into conference except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says he knows he can not get it into conference.

Mr. HAY. As the gentleman has pointed out, he has demonstrated that I can not get it except by unanimous consent.

Mr. LENROOT. There is no question but that the Committee on Rules could have brought in a rule making the motion of the gentleman in order, and then the motion to recommit would not and could not have been cut off by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HAY. Why did not the gentleman offer that amendment to the rule?

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman would have if he had not been notified beforehand that any suggestion of the minority would not have any weight in the Committee on Rules. I make that answer, if the gentleman desires to know.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in reference to the discussion which took place upon the rule that has been referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the Chair will observe that that was a running discussion, and the Chair, in finally making the ruling, did not give an opinion upon it, but it must be gathered from the various remarks of the Chair throughout the discussion.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to close this statement, and then I will yield to the gentleman. I would like to offer for the Chair's consideration the note in the Manual upon that ruling, giving the understanding of the compiler of the Manual of the Chair's decision. I read from the note under section 725:

Ruled by Speaker CLARK (Oct. 9, 1913, 1st sess., 63d Cong., p. 5522) that a special rule providing that a House bill with Senate amendments shall be taken from Speaker's table, Senate amendments disagreed to, conference agreed to, and that Speaker shall without intervening motion appoint conferees, is not in violation of clause 56 of Rule XI, since the motion to recommit may be made on the conference report.

That was true in respect to the question that was then before the House, but it is not true with reference to this case, for the reason suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. LENROOT. Because in the case that was before the House then, the Senate had asked for a conference, and the Senate would act upon the conference report last. Therefore both sets of conferees would be in existence at the time the motion to recommit would be made. In this case the House asks for the conference, and the Senate will act first, agreeing to the conference report; the Senate conferees will be discharged, and therefore a motion to recommit would not be in order, because there would be no Senate conferees to recommit to.

Mr. HAY. Can not the House vote down the conference report?

Mr. LENROOT. It could vote it down. But it was, on the motion to recommit, which the Speaker and the compiler of the Manual so understood, ruled that the point of order was not well taken, because the right to make the motion to recommit was preserved upon the conference report.

Mr. POU. Awhile ago the gentleman spoke of a notice that he received. I will say to him that he certainly did not receive it from any of the majority members of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, I am not going into what occurred in that meeting, but I was forced to say what I did by what the gentleman from Virginia said. I could repeat it if necessary, but I shall not do so.

Mr. POU. I do not think the gentleman ought to intimate that something occurred that certainly did not occur.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say this in general language, that the minority members of this committee were given plainly to understand that this rule was to be passed exactly as it stood. I do not say the gentleman or any other member of the committee said so, but we understood that perfectly, and the gentleman understood it also.

Mr. POU. I wish to say that it was purely an inference on the part of the gentleman from Wisconsin, without anything at all being said upon the subject.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not mean to say that any gentleman said, "Now, Mr. CAMPBELL or Mr. LENROOT if you offer any amendments they will be voted down, so it is no use to offer them," but I do say that we gathered such an inference as any Member would gather from things that occurred there.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, let me ask my friend, who is always frank, if he is not confusing the matter of instruction with the matter of recommittal?

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all. This does cut off a motion to instruct as well as a motion to recommit, of course.

Mr. GARRETT. It cuts off a motion to instruct.

Mr. LENROOT. It cuts off both. The motion to instruct, however, is one that the Committee on Rules are not compelled to preserve. They might bring in a rule cutting off that motion, but the Committee on Rules are expressly prohibited from depriving us of the motion to recommit.

Mr. GARRETT. That is on the passage of a bill. This proposition is one to discharge the committee from consideration of a bill in order to get it to conference.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Now let me ask the gentleman, where would he move to recommit this bill at this particular moment, if there were nothing else in the way?

Mr. LENROOT. I can not make the motion at this moment, because it is in the committee.

Mr. GARRETT. Precisely.

Mr. LENROOT. But I want to call the attention of the Chair to this fact, that while the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] says this bill is now in committee, and that is correct, when we vote upon this rule as it now stands we not only take the bill out of committee, but consider it upon the floor of the House and send it to conference, by one vote and one motion to discharge the committee, so that the House has the bill before it when it votes on this rule, but is deprived of the motion to recommit.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, suppose that instead of any rule, an ordinary motion was made to send the bill to conference, and the minority did what it is now really fighting for, that is make a motion to instruct the conferrees, and that motion was not agreed to and the bill went conference, would you be in any different position touching the motion to recommit after it got back from conference, through that method, than you will be under this method?

Mr. LENROOT. After it got to conference?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. No; there would be no motion to recommit then, but——

Mr. SHERLEY. That is just it.

Mr. LENROOT. But the gentleman will see that the House has the right preserved to it at sometime in the stage of the consideration of this Senate amendment to express its views upon the features of that bill, which this special rule deprives us of, and which right the rules of the House compel you to preserve.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, what the gentleman really wants is to have the privilege, under a motion to instruct, to bring about what is ordinarily accomplished by a motion to recommit; but while that may be desirable from the standpoint of the gentleman, that has nothing to do with the parliamentary situation. The only limitation on the Committee on Rules is that it shall not deny the motion to recommit. Now, if this bill went to conference by any process, and the Senate had agreed to the conference report, the motion to recommit would not be possible, because part of the conferees would not exist, and you could not recommit to them; so that it would not be the action of the rule sending it to conference that would prevent a motion to recommit, but it would be the action after it had gotten into conference. Now, it may be that by this method we do prevent you from having now the privilege of moving to instruct, but the rules do not say that the Committee on Rules have not the right to do that.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, he is correct in saying that this rule cuts off the right of the motion to instruct. That is true, but there were two methods by which the minority under the rules of the House had a right to express its views on this bill. One was by a motion to recommit. The other was by a motion to instruct the conferees. We admit that the Committee on Rules have the right to bring in a special rule and cut off the right to instruct the conferees. We deny that they have the right to bring in a special rule that will deprive the minority of the opportunity to express itself by a motion to recommit.

Mr. SHERLEY. But if the gentleman will permit, the rule does not do that. It is the circumstance attending the conference. The gentleman will acknowledge that if this bill should go to conference now and the Senate should act first on the conference report, his motion to recommit, while technically existing, would not actually exist, because there would be no committee of conference to which it could be recommitted. Now, that is the misfortune of the gentleman's position.

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman will permit me to ask him a question, I will ask him if it was not for the language of this rule and a motion was made to send this bill to conference, would the gentleman say that the minority would not have the right to make a motion to recommit with instructions?

Mr. SHERLEY. But that is not the proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. That is exactly the proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not the proposition at all. The proposition simply is this: By this rule we are denying you the right to instruct the conferees.

Mr. LENROOT. And also the right to move to recommit the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, we are simply preventing you from instructing the House conferees. Now, the final motion to recommit, which is the only motion that the rules undertake to preserve from action by the Rules Committee, is not affected by what we do. It is affected by the circumstance that, the Senate acting first, the Senate conferees have ceased to exist at the time when the motion to recommit might be made.

Mr. LENROOT. I will ask the gentleman, suppose a motion was made to disagree to the amendments. Will the gentleman say that under the rules of the House paragraph 4 of Rule XVI would not give the minority the right to make a motion to recommit the Senate substitute with instructions?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not at all prepared to admit that it would.

Mr. LENROOT. Nothing could be plainer.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think a good many things could be plainer than that.

Mr. POU. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. If this bill had gone to conference by unanimous consent this morning, could the gentleman have made a motion to recommit?

Mr. LENROOT. That would have depended entirely upon whether the conference had been asked for by the House or the Senate.

Mr. POU. Under the same circumstances.

Mr. LENROOT. I say no.

The SPEAKER. Suppose this rule was not in existence, and we had the bill before the House with a motion to recommit to the Committee on Military Affairs, what kind of instruction would the gentleman give it in acting on the Senate amendment?

Mr. LENROOT. It could instruct the committee to report the substitute back with any amendment we chose to incorporate in the instruction.

The SPEAKER. With the recommendation that the House agree to it?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; and then the House could disagree to the substitute as amended or agree to it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia wish to be heard?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes, briefly. The rule under consideration is not intended to interfere, and does not interfere, with the right to make the motion to recommit provided for in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI. This will be clearly perceived by reference to the language of the paragraph, which provides in terms that the motion shall be in order after the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill, or joint resolution. Rule XI, subsection 56, provides that the Committee on Rules, shall report no rule which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made, as provided in paragraph 4. The right secured by this paragraph, is the right to make the motion to recommit, not generally, but after the previous question has been ordered on the passage of a bill, or joint resolution. This situation is not presented under the operation of the rule. The bill to which it relates will not be before the House on its passage. The rule proposes to take the bill from the committee, bring it before the House, and send it to the conference. That is the full cycle of its intended operations, the full effect which it is designed to secure. If the rule brought the bill before the House for passage, it could not provide that the previous question should be considered as ordered—and the bill put on its passage—to the exclusion of the right to make the motion to recommit. Such an attempted exclusion of the right to make this motion, under the situation last presented, would be plainly contrary to the intent, and terms of the rule, which is designed to secure this right, whenever the conditions arise to which it is designed to relate. The concluding sentence of Rule XI, subsection 56, imposes a limitation upon the authority of the Committee on Rules. Whenever the state of facts predicated in paragraph 4, of Rule XVI, is created, or comes to pass, a barrier is thereby erected against the authority of the committee to exclude the exercise of the right to make the motion in question, but apart from this particular state of facts, there is no obstacle in the way of the committee. There are various motions including the motion to recommit, which a Member has the right to make under the rules, but all of these rights may be taken away by a rule from the Committee on Rules, provided of course it is adopted. There is no exception or saving in the case of the motion to recommit, save under one set of circumstances, that is, the case of a bill, or joint resolution on its passage, after the previous question has been ordered. The test is easy of application.

The rule proposed creates its own situation. Under its operation the bill is not brought before the House for passage. It is merely in the House, in transit, on its way to the conference committee. No Member has been deprived of the right to make the motion to recommit, for the simple reason that the state of facts has not arisen affording the indefeasible right to make this motion. When the bill comes back from the committee on conference for some final action the right to make this motion to recommit will be an integral part of the motions that will be in order. The rule proposes to do what might be done by a motion to suspend the rules, take the bill from the committee, and send it to conference. This motion, when made in order, would be efficient, if sustained, to accomplish precisely these results, and no point of order would lie against it. The rule proposes to do the same thing. It is in the interest of public business that the Committee on Rules should have the authority to report a rule, accomplishing the result intended, a rule designed to bring the two legislative bodies into agreement without the destruction of any essential right. The Member insisting upon the right to make the motion to recommit, and complaining that he has been deprived of this right, should be required to point out when the state of facts necessary to afford this right, will arise under the operation of this rule, at what stage of this operation will the bill in question be before the House for passage. As soon as the bill goes to conference, the rule will cease to operate, and the proceedings thereafter will be conformable to the general rules of the House. This question should be decided upon what is before this body, not upon the contingencies suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. There is no reason why the motion to recommit should be preserved to any greater extent than is provided for by the very terms of our rules, and in order to effect this saving, it is not necessary to hold that the Committee on Rules is inhibited from reporting a rule which will accomplish the same result that would be effected by the appropriate motion to suspend the rules, the only difference being that the one would require a two-thirds, and the other a majority vote of the House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment this whole controversy turns on whether the word "shall" in Rule XI of the general rules of the House ought in this instance to be interpreted to mean "may." Rule XI reads in this way:

> Nor shall it report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent a motion to recommit.

Strictly speaking, this language might be held to mean that the committee shall report no special rule which shall necessarily operate to prevent a motion to recommit. Now, it is not claimed that this special rule, if adopted, would necessarily prevent the minority from making a motion to recommit, but only that it may or might prevent it, this possibility depending entirely upon what action the Senate might take on the conference report. If the Senate should adopt the report and discharge its conferees, this House would then be deprived of the right to make a motion to recommit, because there would then be no conference committee. Therefore, in order to preserve the right of the minority to make that very important motion, the Speaker ought to interpret the word "shall" as used in the rule to mean "may," as if the rule read:

> Nor shall it report any rule or order which may operate to prevent a motion to recommit.

Such an interpretation is necessary in this instance, in order to do justice to the minority, because of the unusual circumstances under which the special rule is presented. These circumstances are that the House asks for the conference and the Senate will first take a vote on the conference report. If the Senate shall discharge its conferees, it will then be too late for the House minority to make the motion to recommit. The real intent and spirit of Rule XI will have been ignored and the plain right of the minority to make this motion done away with. Therefore, to preserve this right, the word "shall" ought to be construed as "may" as has often been done when similar language in statutes has been brought before courts for interpretation.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, after all, the entire argument that is presented in the attempt to sustain the point of order goes into the realm of speculation as to what may happen. I respectfully submit once more to the Speaker that the provision of the rule which insures the right to the motion to recommit applies to a bill or a joint resolution when it is upon its passage in the House. That is the sacred right insured by the general rules of the House, and the Committee on Rules can not bring in a special rule which will prevent it—that is, such a special rule would not be privileged. But it does not apply to such a situation as we have before us now. This House has certain business to do. It can vote up this rule of the committee, or it can vote it down. If it votes it down, then other processes will have to be found in order to secure the conference which is desired. But it is technical—a technicality without a basis—undertaking to take a general rule which applies to the passage of a bill or joint resolution and make it apply to a proposition of taking a bill away from a committee in order to get it to conference. If that should be held to be good, I confess, Mr. Speaker, I do not see just where the end of the embarrassment that will arise to confront the House will come. The rules of this House are supposed to be made, supposed to be construed, with the idea of doing business. They are not supposed to be given technical construction. They are not written in such a technical way as to tie the hands of this House except in certain fixed circumstances that are specifically set forth in the rules themselves. The hands of the House are tied in certain instances because the Committee on Rules, which is the initiating force on procedure in the House, has its hands tied in the matter of bringing in a rule that will prevent a motion to recommit on a bill which is on its passage. But that rule is a limitation specifically and clearly defined and is to be strictly construed. That rule never was intended to tie the House, except as therein fixed. There is nothing in it which even by implication can justify a construction that would so paralyze this House as to prevent it sending a bill to conference in this way.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman whether there would be the slightest difficulty in the Committee on Rules bringing in a motion to disagree to this Senate amendment, sending it to conference, and that upon that the previous question should be considered as ordered?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what difficulties might arise on that proposition, but I do know this, that the Committee on Rules in the drafting of this rule has followed the spirit of the rules that have been adopted here again and again for long, long years under all administrations—a plain, simple rule that works quickly and does business. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Oh, that is precisely what rules are for, and they have always been used for that purpose and always will be used for that purpose; and I do know, at least I think I know, that there is absolutely nothing in any of the amendments to the general rules since the time those special rules were brought in that in any way changes the principles that were upheld at that time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] said they were following the practice which had been followed in the House for many years, and that is the trouble with it all. That is what we put this new provision in the rules for, so that the old practice could not be followed any longer. I remember when this question first came before the House on a Senate amendment. It was on the tariff-commission bill. The Senate sent the tariff-commission bill, which had passed the House, back to the House with a Senate amendment about 10 o'clock in the morning of March 4, when the House stood to adjourn at 12 o'clock by operation of law. It might have been a little earlier than 10 o'clock. A filibuster was started on the Democratic side of the House. The Committee on Rules was hastily convened, and brought a rule into the House which disposed of the Senate amendments to the tariff-commission bill, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] made the motion to recommit the Senate amendment to the Committee on Ways and Means. Every one knew that if that motion should prevail that ended it. In fact, if the motion was put to a vote that ended it, unless the clock should be turned back so as to extend the life of the House. Mr. Speaker CANNON was in the Chair at the time. He had been charged by the Democrats in the House and throughout the country with being arbitrary and partisan. They charged that he made partisan rulings. He was in favor of having the House agree to the Senate amendments, but when this rule was cited to him he held that under the rules of the House the motion to recommit the House bill with Senate amendments to a committee of the House was in order, although it was not a vote on the final passage of a bill at all. I never have seen in the House in my term of service a more excited membership than sat and stood here that morning. Half the Members nearly were on their feet. It is the only time in the House since I have been here when I thought there was danger of fights and bloodshed. There never was such intensity in the House as on that morning. Both sides of the House were bitter, partisan, determined; and yet the Speaker, preserving his coolness and his fairness, ruled in favor of the Democratic side of the House, because he thought right was on their side. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The matter in controversy is the following resolution:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution the Committee on Military Affairs be, and hereby is, discharged from the consideration of H. R. 12766, a bill to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, with the Senate amendments thereto; that the said Senate amendments be, and hereby are, disagreed to by the House and a conference asked of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the said bill; and the Speaker shall immediately appoint the managers on the part of the House, without intervening motion.

As the Chair understands it, no one is objecting to any part of this rule except the last three words, "without intervening motion." By reason of those three words the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order against the rule. Subdivision 4 of Rule XVI provides:

When a question is under debate no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motions shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a certain day, to refer, or to amend or postpone indefinitely; * * *.

After the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution one motion to recommit shall be in order, and the Speaker shall give preference in recognition for such purpose to a Member who is opposed to the bill or resolution.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] claims that the proposed rule deprives Members from the right to move to recommit. He bottoms his contention on Rule XI, section 725, of the Manual, which is as follows:

It shall always be in order to call up for consideration a report from the Committee on Rules, and, pending the consideration thereof, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn; but after the result is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion until the said report shall have been fully disposed of. The Committee on Rules shall not report any rule or order which shall provide that business under paragraph 7 of Rule XXIV shall be set aside by a vote of less than two-thirds of the Members present—nor shall it report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

That refers to Calendar Wednesday—

On the 4th of March, 1911, Mr. Speaker CANNON, in ruling on a point of order raised by Mr. Dalzell to a motion of Mr. FITZGERALD to commit the Senate amendments to the bill to create a tariff commission to the Committee on Ways and Means, said:

The Chair has ruled out, and in the opinion of the Chair properly so, all dilatory motions, as was his duty under the rules of the House. There are certain motions, there are certain demands, that can not be held as dilatory. One is a demand for the yeas and nays. The rules of the House govern the House, and the Chair finds a precedent in this case exactly in point, which the Chair believes to be sound in principle. The Chair reads from page 287, volume 5, of Hinds' Precedents:

"The previous question having been ordered on a motion to agree to a Senate amendment to a House bill, a motion to commit is in order. On November 1, 1893, the House was considering the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 1) to repeal a part of the act of July 14, 1890, relating to the purchase of silver bullion.

"Mr. Leonidas F. Livingston, of Georgia, submitted the question of order whether, after the previous question should have been ordered on the motion to concur in a Senate amendment, it would be in order to commit the bill and amendment to a committee with instructions.

"The Speaker expressed the opinion that the motion to commit would in such case be in order."

That is the ruling by Mr. Speaker Crisp, and the Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the motion to commit the Senate amendments to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and others contend that this rule, if adopted, cuts out the right of any gentleman to move to recommit the Senate amendment. That is one branch of this discussion. That seems to have been settled by these two decisions.

Jefferson's Manual provides:

And in all cases of conference asked after a vote of disagreement, etc., the conferees of the House asking it are to leave the papers with the conferees of the other; and in one case where they refused to receive them they were left on the table in the conference chamber.

The present occupant of the chair has passed substantially on both of those questions. When the first Underwood tariff bill was in process of passage the Senate conferees were entitled to the papers, which would enable them to pass on the conference report first, but Mr. UNDERWOOD came in here with the papers in his hand and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] raised the point that we were not required, or had no right as far as that is concerned, to pass on the conference report first, because the Senate conferees were entitled to the papers. The Chair interrogated the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] as to how he got possession of the papers. Of course, the Chair did not suspect he had used violence or had purloined them, but he wanted to know how he got them for the purpose of deciding, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] stated that the Senate conferees threw the papers down on the table and intimated they did not care what was done with them. So under that set of circumstances the Chair ruled that the House would pass on the conference report first. That has been done on other occasions.

This very question came up here once before, October 9, 1913, but on a different presentation. In that case the House was entitled to pass on this question first and the Senate afterwards, and after a long wrangle the Chair overruled the point of order against the special rule, because the situation was different from what it is now and such that a motion to recommit could be made. The situation now, stated briefly, is as follows: If this rule is adopted the minority can not make a motion to recommit this Senate amendment, with or without instructions, and if the conference report is finally made up, then the Senate, under the practice, not the universal practice but the general practice, passes on it first, and usually when one body agrees to a conference report, or whatever it does to it, the conferees of that body are discharged automatically. In this case under the practice the Senate passes on the conference report first; that leaves the House in a position where we can not make a motion to recommit the conference report because the Senate conferees have been discharged.

Usually these special rules provide that the Speaker shall do thus and so "without an intervening motion, except one motion to recommit."

The rule to recommit was one of the most troublesome that ever pestered the House. The gentleman from Illinois did not state it fully. It was used as a sort of legislative trick frequently. The chairman, or whoever had charge of the bill, simply moved to recommit, because only one motion to recommit is permissible—just like the motion to reconsider—and the Chair would recognize the gentleman in control of the bill, and he would make the pro forma motion to recommit and thereby cut the minority out of making a motion to recommit that had some substance in it. So, finally, after much tribulation the rule was changed so that it makes one motion to recommit in order, and makes it imperative on the Speaker to give first recognition to the minority, if the minority member qualifies. That does not necessarily mean a minority politically in the House. It means a minority as to that particular bill, and it may not be improper to refresh the mind of the House of the ruling this Speaker made in an earlier Congress about recommitment, and that was that he would recognize a Member of the minority who said he was opposed to the bill to make the motion to recommit, and he would recognize Members of the minority—minority Members of the committee having the bill in charge—seriatim, if they qualified; and if they did not qualify, any gentleman who would qualify would be recognized.

The provision of the rule requiring the Speaker to give preference to the minority in recognitions for motions to recommit was placed there after profound deliberation, and is of great importance for the purpose intended. The proposed rule deprives the minority of the privilege and right to move to recommit and is therefore, in the judgment of the Chair, obnoxious to subdivision 4, Rule XVI; also to that subdivision of Rule XI which says: "Nor shall it"—that is, the Committee on Rules—"report any rule which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI."

Now, taking all these things into consideration, the Chair sustains the point of order that the proposed rule is not in order.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the resolution, adding the words at the end thereof "except one motion to recommit."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to amend the rule by placing the words at the end "except one motion to recommit."

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, why not make an agreement to consider the bill without the rule?

Mr. HAY. To do what?

Mr. MANN. To consider the bill without the rule.

Mr. HAY. To consider the whole Senate amendment?

Mr. MANN. Of course. There could not be any great delay. I am willing to waive the reading of it, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman I am perfectly willing, as I said before, for the gentleman to move to concur in the Senate amendment or to concur with an amendment to the Senate amendment, which, I take it, are the only two parliamentary motions that can be put. Or, if the gentleman wants to move to instruct the conferees to concur in the Senate amendment he has a right to do that, but I do not think it would be in order to make a motion to instruct the conferees to concur in a part of an amendment, it not being proper to divide it into two parts or three parts or four parts.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman frankly that some one desires to make a motion either to instruct the conferees directly or indirectly through a motion to recommit and agree to the substance of certain sections in the Senate amendment, one relating to the enlargement of the Army, one relating to the Volunteer Army, and also one relating to the so-called nitrate amendment.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman desire to put that all in the same instruction?

Mr. MANN. I suppose it would be all in the same instruction and subject to division.

Mr. HAY. I should be compelled to make a point of order on that, because I do not believe it is competent for the House to instruct the conferees to agree to a part of the Senate amendment and disagree to some other part of it.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to leave that for the Chair to rule on. So far as I am concerned——

Mr. HAY. More than that, I do not believe the House desires its conferees to be so bound up that it will be impossible for them to confer upon any fair terms with the conferees of the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Such a motion can be made either directly or indirectly through a motion to recommit.

Mr. HAY. I am perfectly willing to consent that the gentleman from Illinois or any other gentleman shall make one motion to recommit, and put it in any shape he pleases provided it is one motion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I shall object to the rule unless——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take this matter away from the Committee on Rules, but I understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of this rule striking out the words "without intervening motion" and adding "except one motion to recommit."

Mr. GARRETT. Not striking out "without intervening motion."

Mr. HAY. Add the words, at the end of the rule, "except one motion to recommit." Do I understand the gentleman to object to that?

Mr. MANN. I shall object to that. I want, if I can, to have the right to move to instruct.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman now says he wants to move to instruct.

Mr. MANN. And I have never denied that I wanted to move to instruct.

Mr. HAY. You made the point of order on the motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN. I made the only point of order that I could.

Mr. HAY. I do not think it was good, so far as I am concerned. The Chair, however, having ruled that way, I bow very humbly to the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman reaches the chair, which he sometimes will, as Speaker——

Mr. HAY. I have no such anticipation. However, I am much obliged to the gentleman. I anticipate that the present occupant of the chair will occupy it for a long time to come. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. We hope he will occupy it as long as any Democrat can. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

COST OF LIVING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering House joint resolution No. 91.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker——

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from South Carolina rise?

Mr. LEVER. To offer a preferential motion. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717).

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina is a preferential motion.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. BARKLEY. Pending that motion, I wanted to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution adopted by a mass meeting of the citizens of Paducah, Ky., indorsing the President's course in regard to Germany.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I question the propriety at this time, in the critical condition of our foreign affairs, of incorporating resolutions either pro or con on the President's conduct. We are receiving, all of us, resolutions on one side or the other, and I think it is better not to have this incorporated at the present time. It can be presented in the regular way through the basket.

Mr. CLINE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. And also the gentleman from Wisconsin.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask that my colleague [Mr. PADGETT] be excused from attendance on the sessions of the House on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. PADGETT] be excused from attendance on the sessions of the House on account of illness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARNHART rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. BARNHART. I rise to inquire if the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] would be willing to withhold his motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union until the House might consider three printing bills which have been urged very strongly on the Committee on Printing?

Mr. LEVER. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Speaker. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the Agricultural appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky calls for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 124, noes 27.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last Saturday there was pending a motion to amend by striking out the paragraph, an amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two minutes on the migratory-bird paragraph.

Mr. HAUGEN. My colleague from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] wants some time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina modifies his requests and asks that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto shall close in 40 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I shall want five minutes. I suppose I will be taken care of.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman is accounted for. The Chair will take care of the time. Mr. Chairman, I make that request that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto shall close in 40 minutes, one-half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and one-half by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object unless some provision can be made here for giving me five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I will give the gentleman five minutes of my time. I will not reserve any time for myself.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I am going to favor the motion of the gentleman from Kansas. I am opposed to the paragraph in the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman from South Carolina says he will give the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. CULLOP. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DOOLITTLE. We have requests for a good deal of time on this side, Mr. Chairman, and I suggest that the gentleman from South Carolina put another request for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Chair if I can have some time. I am in favor of the motion.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I shall object to 40 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LEVER. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the debate shall close in 50 minutes, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and the other half to be controlled by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I wish gentlemen to take notice that the filibuster is not on this side of the House, but on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have made this motion to strike out this paragraph for the purpose of cutting off the appropriation of $50,000 for the enforcement of the Federal migratory game and bird law.

This law has been declared by the United States district court of Arkansas and by the United States district court of Kansas and the Supreme Court of the State of Kansas to be unconstitutional, and, so far as my information goes, I think it has been declared unconstitutional by every court of record where that point has been raised. The Arkansas case is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, and I believe there is not a lawyer on the floor of this House who thinks that the Supreme Court will do anything except sustain the United States district court for the eastern district of Arkansas. The case of United States against Shauver—the Arkansas case I have referred to—is a test case, and its final outcome will govern throughout the country.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman is making a pretty broad statement. Now, is it not a fact that the Supreme Court are divided upon that question and that they have asked for a reargument?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not know that they are divided.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Well, it is a fact.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do know that the Supreme Court have asked that the case be reargued.

Mr. Chairman, this law has practically wiped out duck hunting in the interior of the country. It has made it so that in Kansas and other Central States duck hunting is a matter of the past, because wild ducks are migratory birds in our section. We have no fall shooting there to speak of, and in the spring, when under the game laws of the State of Kansas we have the right to shoot up until the 16th of April, this law steps in and makes it a crime to shoot ducks or geese after the 1st day of February, before any ducks or geese have come in.

Mr. Chairman, it is an unjust infringement upon the right of the State to control its peculiarly inherent matters. Wild game within the borders of a State belongs to that State and not to the Nation. This is not disputed. In the short time I have I can not go into details, but the stock raisers and feeders of the State of Kansas, as well as the hunters and sportsmen, are opposed to the Federal law. I am going to read a very short communication from a large and intelligent cattleman. His views are extreme but show his feeling against this law. He fears, as other farmers and stockmen have claimed, that these ducks spread the foot-and-mouth disease, hog cholera, and the like. This letter is written by Mr. John A. Edwards, an extensive rancher and cattle raiser of Greenwood County, Kans., and other places in the State. He says:

DEAR MR. DOOLITTLE: I wish you would secure the right for me to kill all the ducks (that is, shoot at them) which light on my ranches. I do not like to have them feed on my kaffir nor wheat, nor in my feed lots, nor to take the chances of them bringing to my herds foot-and-mouth disease or black leg or hog cholera, and other communicable diseases.

It would be no trouble to get a volume of complaint versus the duck. It would be a great advantage to Kansas if they were exterminated.

Hurriedly,

JNO. A. EDWARDS.

ENGLEWOOD, KANS., March 21, 1915.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman allow me——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I ask that I may proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in control of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN.]

Mr. LEE. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. RAKER. The main objection raised by the gentleman's friend is that the ducks and geese carry the foot and mouth disease, and he wants to shoot them because of that fact, and not for eating purposes?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. He wants to keep them from the possibility of spreading disease.

Mr. RAKER. Then your people are not objecting to this law because they want the game as it comes over.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes; we want the right to shoot under the laws of the State of Kansas, and we want the other States to have the same right, which is their legal right. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the game laws of the different States are very strict; in Kansas they are strict enough for any reasonable purpose. I never have been accused of being too much of a States-rights man. I am a pretty strong nationalist, but there are some things that I think the Government should permit the States to legislate on, and this is one of those things which they have the right to legislate upon; that is, the right to control the hunting and killing of wild game within their borders. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the motion to strike out this provision. While at the present time some of the rules and regulations may be somewhat stringent and may not apply exactly to each locality or each State as they ought to apply, the same complaint has been made in the States in regard to the State game laws, that the opening and closing of the open season did not apply exactly as they ought to apply. This is only a matter of detail. It can be readily remedied. The law should not be struck down this way. It is not fair. In our State we adopted a constitutional amendment dividing the State into districts, to the end that the open and closed seasons for ducks, geese, quail, and other game birds might be properly subdivided. In this way we get proper protection, while at the same time proper use may be made and had of the game.

We have destroyed the greater part of the wild birds of this country. On Saturday we heard here the statement that there are only a few of the buffalo left. We know from personal experience that most of the deer have been destroyed. Twenty-five years ago we rode over the plains in Nevada and southern Oregon and northern California and saw tens of thousands of antelope that produced meat for the people of this country. They have been ruthlessly slaughtered and destroyed.

The same thing is being done with the ducks and other wild life which should be protected. A reasonable and proper administration of the law for the purpose of protecting this game is a great asset to this country. Each state ought to have a reasonable time in which to get some of the fruits of it. We have now 69 bird reserves covering a great territory of country. We are expending money for the purpose of saving these birds that are valuable and supplying many homes with the meat that otherwise they would not be able to get.

While we have the reserves and while we are protecting the birds we ought not to allow them to be killed indiscriminately if we can avoid it, and at the same time adjust the regulations with the State laws so as to give all the people a fair and proper opportunity. I am satisfied that there is practically no member of the committee or the House who desires to destroy completely the remaining ducks and wild life and other birds provided for in the act to which this appropriation relates, namely, the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stats., 847). We ought to provide for the enforcement of this law until it has been disposed of by the Supreme Court. We should provide the necessary funds to enforce this law. It would be a serious mistake to strike out this provision of the bill. I feel satisfied the motives will be defeated.

[Mr. RAKER had leave to extend his remarks.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS].

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois also.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this motion to strike out the paragraph which provides an appropriation of $50,000 for the enforcement of the migratory-bird law. A great deal of complaint comes to me from Illinois, and I understand the same complaint arises in Missouri relative to the operation of the rules adopted by the Agricultural Department fixing a closed season and regulating the killing of migratory birds on certain named waterways.

The law itself, believed by many to be unconstitutional—now near judgment in the Supreme Court—is practically harmless, for all the law does is to authorize the Department of Agriculture to adopt rules and regulations for the preservation of wild game. The whole mischief arises in the department which promulgates the rules. I call attention of gentlemen to that portion which applies to my State and to the upper Mississippi River:

On and after January 1, 1915, a closed season shall continue between January 1 and December 31, both dates inclusive, of each year, on all migratory birds passing over or at rest on any of the waters of the main streams of the following navigable rivers, to wit: The Mississippi River between Minneapolis, Minn., and Memphis, Tenn.; the Missouri River between Bismarck, N. Dak., and Nebraska City, Nebr.; and on the killing or capture of any of such birds on or over the shores of any of said rivers, or at any point within the limits aforesaid, from any boat, raft, or other device, floating or otherwise, in or on any of such waters [as amended Oct. 1, 1914].

That is the rule which affects the section of the country I represent. The State of Illinois is 500 miles in a north and south line and follows the course of the Mississippi River, and constitutes the greater portion of that area between Minneapolis and Memphis where the killing of migratory birds is prohibited. South of Memphis the rule does not operate and north of Minneapolis the rule does not operate. So that north of Minneapolis the killing may be indiscriminate and south of Memphis the same. But the rule does operate the entire course of the Mississippi, a distance of 500 miles on the west border of Illinois. Hunters in my State justly complain of the rule which prohibits them from killing game along the river where the birds are accustomed to fly. There was a time a good many years ago, before the operation of drainage laws, when there were lakes and swamps through Illinois, where birds would light to feed and hunters could find them. Since the operation of the drainage law the lakes and swamps have been drained, and there is no water in the State where these birds can come to feed and rest. These birds in their flight between Minneapolis and Memphis are accustomed to follow the course of the Mississippi River. They do not vary from the river any great distance. They follow the course of the river going north in the spring and south in the fall. As a consequence, we in the State of Illinois are prohibited from killing migratory birds at any season of the year, unless by chance we can get a stray bird out on the prairie which has lost its course. We are virtually prohibited from hunting in season or out, while our friends to the south of Memphis are at liberty at any season of the year to hunt and place birds on the market under the regulation of State laws. That is equally true in the north above Minneapolis and in Canada, where birds migrate for the summer season.

In these sections birds may be hunted at will, but we in the State of Iowa, in the State of Illinois, and in the State of Missouri are prohibited at any season of the year from availing ourselves of these opportunities and privileges. The fault is not in the law. The law does not prohibit it. The law simply authorizes the Department of Agriculture to make rules regulating and fixing seasons, and it is the rule that inflicts a hardship on us of which we complain. We can not in these proceedings here undertake to amend the law itself which delegates this authority to the Department of Agriculture. We can not here by amendment to this bill amend the rule. Our hands are tied. We have no recourse except to repeal the law itself, which no one seems disposed to do.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman has his remedy right here. I agree very heartily with him that this law ought to be repealed. Under the Holman rule he can offer to amend and repeal the law.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. The law may be repealed here, but does the gentleman mean that it may be amended in this appropriation bill?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; in the appropriation bill. That is the only purpose of the Holman rule—to offer an amendment reducing the amount carried in the bill, and the gentleman can introduce an amendment to repeal this, which would reduce the amount carried in the bill.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Yes; but no one cares to repeal the law. It is the rule of which we complain.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. This is a motion to strike out.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Yes; and I doubt the power to either repeal or amend the law on the consideration of a motion to strike out the appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. What attempt is being made now, in view of these adverse decisions of the courts holding that the law is unconstitutional, to enforce the law in any part of the country?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I only know it is being enforced.

Mr. HAUGEN. I can state that, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Notwithsanding the fact that the law has been declared to be unconstitutional, it is still being enforced, and people are being held up to the extent of about a hundred dollars. They are hauled into court, and if they plead guilty, of course they are fined $100. That has been done in a number of instances.

Mr. GOOD. Notwithstanding that the law has been held unconstitutional in every court where the question has been tried?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; I understand that one court has held it to be constitutional.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to have the gentleman cite me to that decision.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, it is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, and so long as it is pending there we have no right to assume that it is unconstitutional. There is no final judgment in the case, and, as I understand it, the court has asked for a reargument of the case for reasons with which I am not familiar.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman mean to say that under the rules of the Agricultural Department hunters in Illinois are restricted from hunting ducks, we will say, any place where ducks may be found?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Virtually, because hunting is prohibited along the Mississippi River, which is the only course ducks pursue in passing Iowa and Illinois. They follow the course of the Mississippi River; there is no water for feeding or lighting purposes elsewhere.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that under the rules and regulations of the department in Illinois they have the open season for plover, snipe, yellow legs, ducks, geese, and brant from September 2 to December 16?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Yes; we have in Illinois; but the gentleman must understand my point—that we are prohibited by rule 5 from killing them along the course of the Mississippi River, and there are few ducks migrating from the North to the South except along that stream.

I have carefully examined the briefs in the Shauver case, filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court, and I find that many sportmen's clubs in all parts of the country concern themselves very much in that case and have filed briefs amicus curiæ in support of the law and its strict enforcement under the rules of the Department of Agriculture. Among these clubs are the American Game Protective Association, New York City; the Rocky Mountain Interstate Sportsman's Association, Denver; Marshepaug Forest Club, Connecticut; Shoshone Rod and Game Club, Idaho; the Grand Island Club, Chicago; the Delta Duck Club, New Orleans; Roland Park Bird Club, Maryland; Adirondack League Club, New York; Oswego Rod and Gun Club, New York; Newport Gun and Game Association, Rhode Island; Rod and Gun Club, Rhode Island; Campfire Club of America, New York; Boone and Crocket Club, New York; and many other concerns whose membership consists of men of means and leisure, who are able to spend a season in the South in the winter and in the North in the summer, where the birds may be found in abundance. It is organizations such as these, who wish to preserve the game for their own convenience and sport, that influence the adoption of rules prohibiting the people along the course of migration, who are engaged in their daily vocations and legitimate pursuits, from the killing of birds that they may be preserved for the pleasure and sport of men who are prepared to spend idle seasons North and South. These organizations have both the time and the means at their disposal, and hover about the bureau and secure the adoption of the rules pertaining to the killing of migratory birds, while those against whom the rules so unjustly operate are engaged in attending to their legitimate affairs. I am not hostile to a migratory-bird law, but I do condemn as unjust the rules which have been adopted at the instigation of sportsmen of means and leisure, whose only object and purpose is to conserve the game for their own convenience and use. If there is no other way to defeat the operation of these rules than by defeating the appropriation for their enforcement, then I favor and shall vote for the motion to strike out of the appropriation bill that provision appropriating $50,000 for the enforcement of the law.

I will avail myself of the privilege of inserting here and incorporating in the RECORD a memorial addressed to the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives on the part of the Interstate Sportsmen's Protective Association, and the officers of the Illinois Sportsmen's League, and others interested in this subject:

To the Members of the honorable United States Senate and House of Representatives, assembled at Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIRS: Your petitioners respectfully ask that we be given consideration regarding an injustice being perpetrated against us by the Bureau of Biological Survey, Department of Agriculture, under certain regulations provided for in the migratory-bird law.

We have appealed in vain to that bureau, but are unable to obtain redress affording "equal and exact justice to all, with special privileges to none," which we therefore request your honorable body to accord to us, through the power of Congress.

When this law was enacted, provision was made therein for the very relief which we are now compelled to ask you to insist upon in the name of justice.

Seasons for hunting migratory birds have been so arranged by the Biological Survey officials that hunters residing in the Middle Western States are authorized to hunt magratory game only during such seasons of the year when the migrants are practically absent, and they prohibit us from hunting them during the seasons when they are present in our locality.

The migratory fowl begin passing over our States going southward from their breeding zone in the North according to variable climatic conditions.

The flight begins about September 1 to October 1 and is spread out until the period of our autumn storms, but the dry fall weather affords no attraction, and they do not tarry with us, but continue on to the South.

In the winter months they are farther south.

They begin their return migration to the North in February, and periodically arrive here, and again depart southward, upon alternate warm or cold weather changes of a few days' duration at a time.

This process continues during February and March.

Our ideal period for hunting waterfowl begins February 1 and ends March 31, but at this opportune time we are legally prohibited from hunting.

The season established by the Biological Survey for us to hunt these waterfowl is during our dry fall months, but when our wet season arrives, and likewise the waterfowl, we are denied the hunting privilege.

In the dry fall season the large watercourses afford the main resort for the fowl, but the biological officials prohibit hunting on the upper Mississippi River, above Memphis, Tenn., but at no period do they prohibit hunting upon the Mississippi River by citizens residing farther south.

We have offered positive physical evidence, contained in the dead bodies of the ducks, to prove that they are not even approximating the breeding or nesting period, in February and March, nor do they at any other season breed in this section of the Nation.

Our facts about climatic conditions, topography of the country, and natural habits of the birds are not disputed, and yet we receive no redress.

The biological officials even admit they have made no scientific collection of evidence such as we have done, nor have they accepted our offer to furnish them dead specimens of the fowls killed each week, for their own investigation and information.

The sole reason given us for not correcting these errors is, that should our just claims be recognized, it would probably cause a protest by other sections of the Nation, whose residents, they claim, would object to our proper seasons, though presumably satisfied with what the Biological Survey had decreed for the alleged objectors.

There has been created a so-called "advisory board" for consultation about this subject by the Agricultural Department, though we are aware of no congressional authority for the same.

However, the members of this board are not representative of the various sections of the Nation; in fact 5 of them out of 12 reside in a single eastern city.

This law has prevailed since 1913, during which time three United States district courts have held it to be unconstitutional, and no other court has sustained it. Its constitutionality is now before the United States Supreme Court for final decision.

Large sums of money have been appropriated by Congress for the enforcement of this law, but in numerous instances the Biological Survey has positively refused to prosecute violators.

The law has been flagrantly disregarded, and we offered proof of this statement to those intrusted with its enforcement.

In every instance the issue has been evaded. We have since been informed by one of the administrative officers in the Biological Survey that, pending the decision of the United States Supreme Court upon its constitutionality, no further cases would be received by the Department of Justice for prosecution.

Notwithstanding this statement, notices have been recently circulated in the daily press by the Department of Agriculture which announced that "the law would be vigorously enforced."

Our best citizens had hoped that the law would be enforced and that the unjust season would be corrected. This has not been done.

The unruly element has regaled itself in hunting liberties which are alone denied to the better element through its conscience about law observance.

Their conscience, and not the vigilance of the law officials, is the only restraint produced by this deplorable state of affairs.

We are being deprived of our rights without any compensation on behalf of wild-life conservation.

If the migratory fowl are the property of all of the people of the Nation, the residents of the Middle West are part owners therein and should be accorded their constitutional rights in its use and enjoyment without any excuse or subterfuge being offered.

Article IV, section 11 of the United States Constitution declares: "The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States."

All other means having been denied us, we earnestly petition that no further public funds be appropriated for the enforcement of this migratory-bird law, and that our Senators and Representatives oppose it in every form and manner, even to its repeal.

Investigations into the transactions of the Bureau of Biological Survey will disclose that in connection with the administration of this law there have been many irregularities.

One official who was in immediate charge of framing the aforesaid regulation has so conducted himself that it was deemed necessary to dismiss him from his high position.

Several officers have either been removed or are now under investigation, and one Federal inspector has been indicted for falsifying his expense accounts.

The latter individual while under annual salary and expenses as Federal game inspector also during the same period occupied a position as deputy State game warden in Missouri and received as salary and expenses large sums of money during two years from the Missouri State Game and Fish Commission.

The letters on file in the Biological Survey, and likewise the replies thereto, will disclose correspondence calling attention to this condition over a year ago, but only very recently has it been deemed of sufficient importance to verify the true state of affairs which caused the Federal indictments.

We respectfully submit our plea for such action as your good judgment and regard for justice deems adequate to meet the conditions named herein.

In support of our position, and to show that the residents of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska are not seeking special privileges, nor are they antagonistic to modern methods of wild-life conservation, we with pride call attention to the fact that our State game laws are the most perfect and restrictive legislation of any of the various States.

The Federal regulations also produce such conditions in conflict with our State laws as to sadly deplete our hunting-license revenue, necessary to protect not only our native wild game but also protection of our public fishing waters, as well as the nongame song and insectivorous birds of great value to our agricultural interests.

The Federal law affords no substitute for this material damage.

Most respectfully submitted.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

[Mr. FERRIS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to state that I am opposed to this migratory-game law and will vote for this amendment. I have never missed an opportunity to vote against it when it has been before this House. I believe that the States ought to control the hunting and the killing of game. It is peculiarly the function of the State governments to control the matter of game protection and not the duty of the Federal Government. The citizens of the States are interested in this subject, and the legislatures of all the States, so far as I am acquainted, have by proper legislation undertaken to protect the game throughout the country, and I have no doubt they will continue to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I regret that I can not; I have only one minute. I have never doubted for a moment that this law is unconstitutional, and that it will be so decided by the Supreme Court of the United States whenever it finally passes upon that question. So far as I am advised, all of the Federal courts of the country that have passed upon it have decided that it is unconstitutional, and I have no doubt that will be the final result in the Supreme Court, but whether it is or not I insist that the States should control this mattter and not the Federal Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, I rise to oppose this amendment and I hope the amendment to strike out the appropriation will not prevail. Several Federal courts have passed on the constitutionality of this law, and the Arkansas case, the Shauber case, held it unconstitutional. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States and was argued before the Supreme Court on February 28, and the Supreme Court ordered a reargument, and the case is now awaiting decision. The Congress of the United States passed this act, and in my judgment, while it is on the statute books, until the court of last resort has passed upon it and held it unconstitutional, the presumption is that it is constitutional.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I can not; I have only three minutes. And I think this House should make the appropriation to carry it into effect. Now, I am from a section of the country that believes in State rights, and I believe in State rights as well as any Member of this House, but this migratory-bird law deals with migratory birds, and it is a well-known fact that the game of this country is rapidly becoming extinct on account of pothunters.

Now, one State in an effort to preserve its game may pass the most stringent, the most perfect law for the preservation and protection of the birds and a State adjoining it, from whence the birds are migrating, can have an open law, and in that State they can kill and destroy them, but the citizens of another State that has a good, wholesome game law can get no benefit or privilege of these birds because they are killed out in another State.

Now, I would not for a moment deprive friends in Indiana, Iowa, and Illinois, and other States from the splendid sport of shooting and killing game birds in season. But, as I understand the law, it allows the Department of Agriculture to regulate and fix the rules and regulations for the enforcement of this law, and if the rules and regulations are such as to deprive citizens of those States from the privilege of shooting game, I think the place to go is to the Department of Agriculture and see if they can get that remedied.

Mr. Chairman, the bird law is a wholesome one and should be retained on the statute books and should be executed. It is well known by the farmers that birds are their good friends, for birds destroy millions of worms, bugs, and insects which destroy crops; so, gentlemen of the House, you who have the interest and welfare of the farmers at heart should vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas. I hope the committee will vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I hope this motion to strike out this paragraph will prevail.

I have listened to a discussion on this subject in this House now several times. I never have heard any lawyer contend that this provision was constitutional. I never have heard any reasons given why it ought not to be held constitutional. The only reasons we have ever heard for maintaining this provision in this bill are the same that have been stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], namely, that until there was some decision on the subject we ought not to legislate it out as being unconstitutional by the method of cutting off the appropriation. That argument prevailed the last time this question was before the House for consideration. Perhaps it ought to have prevailed then, but since that time we have had decisions by two different Federal district courts, holding that this law under which the authorities are now acting is unconstitutional, and there has not been any doubt about it in the minds of the court. I do not think there is any doubt about it in the mind of one lawyer out of a hundred. I do not care to argue the legal question, because it seems to me so plain and so clear that there is no tenable theory under which this Government could get constitutional jurisdiction over wild game. It has no property in them, and there is no principle under which this law could be sustained.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Now, on the statement that the gentleman has made, that the Government has no property in this wild game, how do you answer the question that we have bird preserves owned by the Government, where the birds are protected and reared? Has not the National Government just as much interest in wild game on its lands as the States have in wild game?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am not talking about the jurisdiction of the United States over its game preserves. It has jurisdiction in the same way over the navigable waters and over the banks of the rivers up to the high-water mark, and to that extent, probably, this law is constitutional, but no more.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I want to illustrate the point in answer to the gentleman. There are no public lands in the State of Illinois or in Iowa, and yet on the theory that the birds will fly across the Mississippi River from Illinois to Iowa, the Government has jurisdiction. That is the theory.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am sorry, but I have not the time to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Had you spring shooting in Iowa before this law went into effect?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I could not say, but I think we did before this law went into effect. I want to say further as to why this House ought to cut off this appropriation. It is not merely a matter of killing wild game. The deprivation of that right is not so serious that I would care to stand up here and make any contention about it. But it is a fact that among Federal officials there is a disposition to exercise an authority after it has been held unconstitutional by the court.

Mr. REILLY. Is not the policy of the United States Government as to all laws to assume that they are constitutional until declared unconstitutional by the highest court?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am talking about that very policy.

Mr. REILLY. It would look as if you were referring to the policy of this law entirely. That is the general policy of the United States Government.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was going on further to say how this idea is carried on.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield further for just one word?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have only five minutes, and I have not got into the matter I wanted particularly to discuss. Now, in the case of the oleomargarine law with reference to the adulterated butter, there are certain parts of those laws that have been held unconstitutional by the courts. Notwithstanding that, the Government officials undertake to go on and impose penalties in the hope that people are unable to contend against them in the Federal courts, using this law as an engine of oppression, and this manner of acting on the part of Federal officials ought to be restrained by this House.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] four minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the time has been limited on so important a measure as this. I happen to be one of the Members of the House who belong to that great class known as "sportsmen." I think I know something about this law. The demand for its repeal is simply the old question of human greed and human selfishness that we saw exhibited in regard to the buffalo and which we saw exhibited in regard to the passenger pigeon. Everybody wants to keep on killing until the game is wiped out, without regard to rapid extinction.

My good friend from Illinois [Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS] complains, and complains bitterly, that they do not permit shooting upon certain rivers. Then he tells us his idea of the reason why. He says that the migratory birds must stay on the rivers, because the rivers are their resting grounds. The State of Washington, long before this law was passed, enacted a State law forbidding the shooting of water fowl within 1 mile of either bank of the Columbia River. That is where the birds congregate. We do not want them destroyed. That is why the birds are not permitted to be killed upon the rivers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS] mentions. It is their resting place. The record shows that during the brief time this Federal law has been in existence these migratory birds have been rapidly increasing. As has been said, if you are going to permit one community to shoot out of season during this time of migration, all these birds will be destroyed.

My good friend from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] says he never heard any lawyer say that this law is constitutional. I beg to remind the gentleman of the fact that an able lawyer, once a Member of this House, has written a strong brief on this matter. I refer to Mr. George H. Shiras, 3d. He takes the other side of the case and makes a very strong showing to the effect that the law is constitutional. But there is one thing certain, and that is that whether the law is constitutional or unconstitutional, it has been doing a great deal of good.

You take it in several of the States, they have not attempted to dispute its constitutionality, but have enacted State laws to correspond with it. My good friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] says it is very annoying and a great outrage. It is not annoying and it is not an outrage to those who obey it. It is only annoying to those who do not wish to obey the law. They are the only ones who have trouble with it. The law is always annoying to those who wish to disregard it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Does the State of Washington permit hunting on the Columbia River at any time?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; we do not permit shooting within 1 mile of either bank of the Columbia River. Also in Puget Sound there are some islands where shooting is not allowed. That is to permit these birds to have a resting place. On Lake Washington, one of the largest lakes in the State, shooting is entirely prohibited and also within 1 mile of its shores. These birds must follow the watercourses; there they must rest; and if you are going to permit shooting on these rivers, and especially during the migratory season, these birds will soon be destroyed.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman there?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Tell me the reason of a rule that would prohibit the killing of birds between Minneapolis and Memphis and permit the killing indiscriminately above Minneapolis and below Memphis?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The reason given by the experts is that that is the great migratory path followed by these birds during their flights north and south. That is where they congregate. If you permit the shooting there, they will soon be exterminated.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Why does not this law prohibit the robbing of the nests in the feeding grounds?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman is very much mistaken if he thinks that the rules and regulations of the department do not in every way possible prohibit that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has consumed 17 minutes.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I hope the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE] will prevail.

The law has been held to be unconstitutional by the nisi prius courts, for which this appropriation of $50,000 is proposed for the enforcement. An appeal has been taken from the decision of the lower court and it is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States for final adjudication. Why should we appropriate $50,000 here to enforce a law in which the presumption now under the precedents of this country is that it is unconstitutional? It has been so decided by the lower courts, and that decision is binding until it is reversed by the higher court. Its operation would have been suspended except for the appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, what is the condition? The enactment of the law received much censure and it was charged the sole object of it was in the interest of the rich sportsman and against the poor one. It does afford amusement for the sportsmen who can hire a private car and take a vacation in the South in the winter season and in the North in the summer season, and go to the places where they may hunt and shoot game; but as to the man on the farm in the interior of the country, less fortunate, it has taken from him his pleasure and deprived him of a right, and he must be content with keeping his gun in his house while his richer neighbor may enjoy the sport which the Federal law of this country denies to him because of his unfortunate financial condition.

Here is an attempt by the department, under a law already held unconstitutional, to employ men and undertake to deprive the people of the country of a right to which they ought to be entitled under the decisions of the courts of this country. A department seeking to have an appropriation to enforce a law which the courts have held invalid is exhibiting more zeal than is becoming. Further than that, this is a question that the States themselves can better regulate than the Federal Government, and it is one of the rights which the Federal Government in its centralization of power ought not to be permitted by Congress to usurp from the States. The States can control this matter, and it is entirely within their province. They can control it more cheaply than the Federal Government, and they ought to be permitted to do it in the way their citizens prefer.

Mr. Chairman, here is a practical example of the Federal Government encroaching on the rights of the States, usurping a function of the States in the exercise of the police powers which properly belong to the States in better equipping them in the conduct of their local self-government. When the Federal Government takes from the several States functions of their police regulation, it is entering upon a dangerous procedure and one that, if carried to its last analysis, will strip the States of the need of local self-government and transfer to the Federal Government a very difficult and cumbersome duty to regulate the local affairs of the people of the several States. It will require much work and entail enormous expense. In the very nature of such an administration it would require a large force of officials, and would make the private possessions of the individual a game preserve of the Federal Government to be patrolled by a Federal police force, which would prove most distasteful to the citizen. Again, the wishes of the people of all the States are not uniform on this matter. The people of a crop-producing State may have one desire, while those of a stock-producing State may, and doubtless would, have altogether a different one. It is from this viewpoint that we find logical reasons for the argument that this matter should be left to the several States for regulation, where, in my opinion, it properly belongs.

In the stock-raising sections farmers want the right to shoot and kill certain birds which feed among the stock, because they disseminate contagious diseases; carry the same on their feet from one herd to another, and thereby do incalculable injury. In another section, where grain and other farm products are alone raised by the farmer, they do not want them killed, because they feed upon worms and insects which destroy crops. Hence the diversity of wishes about this matter. If left to the States to regulate, each can regulate to the best advantage of its citizens; but if the Federal Government regulates it, it will then be uniform all over the Union, because a law of Congress operates the same throughout the Republic.

But the law gives the opportunity for one class of citizens to exercise a privilege which another class of citizens less fortunate can not exercise, and is, therefore, for this reason discriminatory. Legislation should not, if possible, thus discriminate among our people if it could be avoided, and in this case it can be. Legislation should not take from the States the exercise of police powers if the States can exercise such powers as advantageously for the public, which they can do in this case, and hence here is the basis for denying the appropriation for the enforcement of the law provided for in this paragraph. The department, it seems, is unduly hasty in asking the appropriation for this purpose, when the law has been held invalid by the courts and the appeal is pending for final adjudication. I hope the amendment will be adopted and the paragraph stricken from the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, so far as the informant of the migratory game birds act is concerned, that is not the question at issue. If that were the question I should vote to support it. I voted for the passage of the bill, and I shall be glad to have it held constitutional; but, as has been admitted here, the law has been declared unconstitutional, and we are now asked to appropriate $50,000 to enforce an act which the courts have held to be unconstitutional; and, so far as I know, no lawyer of any standing will stake his reputation upon an opinion asserting that the law is constitutional. In view of that fact, I believe that the $50,000 can be appropriated to better advantage.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. George Shiras, a former Member of this House, one of the best lawyers in this country, who has given this subject as much study as any man living, has written a brief upholding the constitutionality of this law.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I have so many requests for time that, in order to yield time to others, I shall not take any further time myself, but will insert in the RECORD extracts from the hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions on that item?

We will now take up 28, pertaining to the migratory-bird law. There is an increase there, Doctor, of $50,940.

Mr. NELSON. I would like to explain, Mr. Chairman, that that increase is required from the fact that the present appropriation of $50,000 is totally inadequate to accomplish the purpose. We are supposed to enforce the migratory-bird law over the entire United States, and $50,000 gives us only 17 inspectors. Seventeen inspectors go a very small way in covering the United States and preventing violations of the law. We have been bombarded by the bitterest kind of criticism and complaint because we were not enforcing that law.

Mr. HOWELL. How many adverse decisions have there been against the constitutionality of the law?

Mr. NELSON. The Shauver decision was the first one, and since then there have been several more. Perhaps Dr. Palmer can tell you more definitely about that.

Dr. PALMER. There have been two adverse decisions by the Federal courts—one in the eastern district of Arkansas and one in the district of Kansas. There was an adverse decision by the Supreme Court of Maine last July, when the question of Sunday hunting was injected, with the idea of setting aside the State law; and very recently—within a few weeks—the Supreme Court of Kansas rendered an adverse decision which was an outgrowth of the same case that was taken into the United States district court of Kansas.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Have any decisions been upheld?

Dr. PALMER. One of the decisions was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States and argued on the 18th day of last October, but a decision has not been handed down.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Where from?

Dr. PALMER. From the eastern district of Arkansas.

Mr. RUBEY. What are you doing where the decision was appealed from? Are you still enforcing the law in the districts where the appeals are pending?

Mr. NELSON. The law is being enforced the same as ever, until the status of the law is decided by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. They had one decision upholding the law?

Dr. PALMER. There was one case in South Dakota in which the defendant entered a plea of guilty and the court imposed a fine of $100.

Mr. CANDLER. The court held it was unconstitutional in Arkansas?

Dr. PALMER. Two Federal district courts have held the law unconstitutional.

Mr. CANDLER. What courts?

Dr. PALMER. The Federal courts in the eastern district of Arkansas and the district of Kansas. Several other district courts, however, have imposed fines.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. The question of the constitutionality of the law was not raised in those cases?

Dr. PALMER. The constitutionality of the law was not raised.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it the practice of the department to try and enforce laws declared unconstitutional by the district courts and the circuit courts?

Mr. NELSON. We are now warning the public, through the press and otherwise, that they are liable to prosecution if they break the regulations, and are gathering evidence of violations for future use in case the law is declared constitutional.

Mr. HAUGEN. I was trying to get at the general policy of the Government. I happened to know that a few other decisions of the courts held certain rulings of the department to be unconstitutional, notwithstanding the prosecutions continued and people were held up to the extent of a thousand dollars. I should like to know if that is the policy of the Government in general or only that particular department—if that policy is being generally pursued?

Mr. NELSON. The policy that we are carrying out is to gather the evidence and not to institute prosecutions.

Mr. HAUGEN. Enforcing the law, notwithstanding the declaration by the district courts holding departmental rulings unconstitutional?

Mr. NELSON. We are notifying the people that the declaration by the district court that the law is not constitutional does not kill the law. The law still stands to be settled by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is the very thing. But it has in a decree been declared unconstitutional by the lower court and is now up to the Supreme Court.

The CHAIRMAN. What are you going to do if one court holds it constitutional and another court of equal jurisdiction holds it unconstitutional?

Mr. HAUGEN. That does not happen to apply to these cases, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the district court of South Dakota held it unconstitutional. Did you not say that, Dr. Palmer?

Dr. PALMER. South Dakota has only one district court. Arkansas has two, the eastern district and the western district. Now, we had some cases in the western district of Arkansas and the judge dismissed some cases, and in other cases, where two or three pleas of guilty were entered, the court let them off with nominal fines, then suspended sentence. It practically resulted in the western district following the eastern district.

The CHAIRMAN. What happened in South Dakota?

Dr. PALMER. A fine of $100 was imposed in one case and one or two cases were dismissed.

The CHAIRMAN. In this case in South Dakota the party pleaded guilty?

Dr. PALMER. The party pleaded guilty and the court filed no formal opinion.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then, so far as that court goes, the law has not been held to be unconstitutional.

That question is now for the Supreme Court to determine, of course. Who is prosecuting the case in the Supreme Court?

Mr. NELSON. The Department of Justice. It appears to me that the fact that one of the Federal courts has declared the law unconstitutional does not set aside or nullify the act of Congress until the Supreme Court has passed on the question.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is one way of construing it. Who is prosecuting the case in the Supreme Court?

Mr. NELSON. The case is being prosecuted by the Department of Justice.

* * * * * * *

Mr. NELSON. In that way—that we furnish the information.

Mr. HAUGEN. So it is in the power of the department to suppress or to expedite prosecutions?

Mr. NELSON. By suppressing them, which would not be discharging our duty.

Mr. HAUGEN. If it is found by the Supreme Court that the law is unconstitutional, the fines imposed, referred to as nominal fines, would amount to nothing less than a holdup. You would be fining people or compelling people to pay fines under a law that did not exist?

Mr. NELSON. That law exists so far as the constitutionality——

Mr. HAUGEN (interposing). If it is declared unconstitutional by the higher court?

Dr. PALMER. That happens all the time. A case is tried and determined, but a later decision that the law is unconstitutional does not affect that case. That case is out of the way altogether.

Mr. HAUGEN. In what way? You hold a man for $500 and he pays it?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Yes; and that disposes of the case.

Mr. HAUGEN. And if the courts hold the law to be unconstitutional, do you claim, in justice, that he should have paid the $500?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. He has already paid it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Was it justly collected?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. It is disposed of, and you can not go back and rake over all those other cases to pay back that man his money.

* * * * * * *

Mr. STEELE. I agree with Mr. RUBEY that you are imposing a hardship upon the hunters of the country; that you are collecting this evidence with the purpose, in case the Supreme Court holds it is legal, that you will go on and prosecute these people, when the court now, as far as we know, has decided it is unconstitutional. I think that is a fair construction of the effect of this action upon the hunters of this country.

Mr. NELSON. We are merely carrying out our duty as required by the law. We are not trying to impose extra hardships upon anyone.

Mr. HAUGEN. It was stated a few minutes ago that where nominal fines were imposed they were paid. I have no knowledge of your bureau, but I happen to have knowledge of some other departments of this Government having made certain rules and regulations, the question was brought to the court, and the court held that the department had not the power to make such rules and regulations; and, notwithstanding the decision of the court, it went on and imposed fines in accordance with rules and regulations made. Now, I want to know if that is the practice of this department. I know it to be the practice of another department.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any criticism of the bureau at all, Congress must bear its proportionate share of that criticism. These decisions, to which Dr. Palmer called attention, in Arkansas were declared two or three years ago, and since those decisions appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 were passed by Congress, so that we are particeps criminis to this crime, if it be a crime, and we can not escape our responsibility in it.

Mr. HAUGEN. I want to say that I concur with and agree with the chairman in what he has stated. I was not criticizing the department. I was asking the question as to what was the practice of the department.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, it may be that this act will be held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. That is not, however a settled question, and I have no hesitation in saying that if it shall be held unconstitutional it will be a public misfortune.

I was very much surprised at the speech of my good friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], in which he said this was an idiotic law. I am sure he would not have said that had he had anything but a superficial knowledge of what the law is and what it accomplishes. So far the discussion has gone along the line of the preservation of game; but does the gentleman realize the economic value to every farmer in this country of the migratory birds other than game birds? I used to be very familiar with that subject when that question was before the House. I can not state the figures now, but a single meadow lark upon a farm is worth several dollars to a farmer. Does the gentleman know that at the time this law was passed there were States in this Union that had no laws prohibiting the killing of song birds or birds of any kind? Does the gentleman know that prior to the passage of this law the robin was considered a game bird in some of the States of this Union? Does the gentleman know that since this law was passed a majority of the States, because of the passage of this law, have so amended their laws as to standardize them with the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture, made under this Federal law? It is not alone the preservation of game. It is the preservation of the other birds of this country that are of so much value to the farmers from an economic standpoint.

If the gentlemen upon this floor who are now opposed to this law realized the economic value to this country of the birds, there would not be a vote in favor of the motion to strike out this provision. Gentlemen say it is a State matter. Will you tell me how a farmer in one State who is benefited by the birds, as all farmers are, can receive any protection from his State laws if another State permits the indiscriminate slaughter of those birds on their annual journey? Is there any other way by which this subject can be reached except through Federal regulation?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. In the State of Wisconsin you have many lakes which serve as resting places for the ducks, where they stop in the fall on their way South, so that this law does not operate against hunters in your State. Will you not concede it is an unfair discrimination to a State like Illinois?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, the gentleman's argument is not against the law but against the regulations. His argument should not be made upon this floor but before the Department of Agriculture. [Applause.]

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OVERMYER].

Mr. OVERMYER. Mr. Chairman, I think the State of Ohio will yield to no other State in the Union in its desire to preserve the game birds of this country; but I wish to remind the committee that so far as my district, which borders on Lake Erie, is concerned, the only time in the year when we have any wild ducks is during the time we are prohibited from shooting them by operation of this law. The State Legislature of Ohio some years ago adopted the provisions of this Federal statute, but at the last session of the legislature the act was repealed. I have had a number of letters and personal interviews with citizens of my district who are protesting against the operation of this law, for the reason that it deprives citizens of northern Ohio of any opportunity to shoot wild ducks, because the only season of the year when they are present is when they are prohibited from shooting by this act. I hope that this motion will prevail, as I do not believe that money should be expended seeking to enforce a law that has been declared unconstitutional by a number of Federal courts. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

[Mr. SMITH of Minnesota addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield what time I have remaining to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I presume that all remember how this finally became a law. It was placed on the Agricultural bill in the Senate. It came back here on the 3d of March, 1911, in the closing hours of Congress when there was no time to explain it and no way to defeat the bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Was not that after the House had passed the bill?

Mr. COX. No; it went on over in the Senate. Some one near me says it was after we had defeated the bill. I read the opinion that the bill was unconstitutional, and as a Member of this House and as a lawyer I shall watch with a great deal of interest the decision in that case. If the Supreme Court of the United States upholds this law then so far as I am concerned I will be imbued and endowed with the hope that we can finally get a tariff commission that will go as far as I would like to see it go, and that is to the point of enabling the commission to fix the rate of duties upon goods imported into this country. I do not believe that the law is constitutional, but, of course, we have a right to presume that it is until the court of last resort has spoken on the question. [Applause.] But, Mr. Chairman, to my mind, we are occupying a peculiar position, not only the Committee on Agriculture but the Members of this Congress in appropriating $50,000 a year for a law that every supreme court in the various States, as well as Federal, that have spoken on the subject have declared to be unconstitutional. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the situation is this: Some years ago we passed what was known as the migratory bird law, a law protecting migratory birds from pothunting and indiscriminate killing. The item in this bill carrying $50,000 is intended to enforce the provisions of that law. The department estimated for $99,000 for that purpose. The committee allowed $50,000, which is the amount carried by the current law.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the Supreme Court should hold this unconstitutional the appropriation would be safe in the Treasury?

Mr. LEVER. Without doubt.

Mr. ADAMSON. And if unconstitutional, we will do a little good before that happens.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; several Federal courts have passed on this proposition, one holding it constitutional and two holding it unconstitutional. The case is now before the Supreme Court of the United States for reargument, and it does seem to me that until the case is passed upon by the highest legal authority in the land we ought to provide the machinery and the appropriation with which to enforce the law as it exists. I am not arguing this from a legal standpoint, because I am not a lawyer, and I know nothing about the constitutionality of this proposition, but I stand here to say, as a student of agricultural economics, as a friend of the farmer in this country, that the farmer of the United States has no better friends in the United States than the birds of the country. [Applause.] Nature works in mysterious ways, and nature provides our bird life for us not only the æsthetic pleasure it gives us but for the value of the bird in the economic world. If you destroy the bird life of America to-day, I venture to assert that within six months' time this country will be overrun with worms, bugs, and insects ad infinitum and galore. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 25, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Ruler of the Universe, our highest and first allegiance is to Thee. We would have no part in life apart from Thee. Thou art the giver of every good and perfect gift. We come praying that Thou wilt, through all the manifold ministries of Thy grace, incline our hearts to keep Thy law. Put high and noble thoughts into our minds. Inspire our hearts with all that is purest, highest, and best. We would not have friendship except that which can be sweetened and refined by the divine companionship. We would not have patriotism that is not sanctified by divine grace. Enable us to be true first to our obligations to God and to ourselves. If we are true to Thee and to ourselves, we feel that we can never be untrue to our fellow men. Guide us in the discharge of the duties of this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

GLOBE CENTRAL LABOR COUNCIL,
Globe, Ariz., April 16, 1916.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.:

Whereas there is a bill (H. R. 456) before Congress for the creation of a Federal commission to preexamine and censor all motion pictures;
Whereas we believe no group of five men are great enough or divine enough to determine what pictures 100,000,000 people should see or should not see, and would naturally be influenced in their decisions by their own petty views on public morals and questions;
Whereas we believe that it is contrary to the fundamental principles of our Government, guaranteeing the freedom of expression; and
Whereas institutions of the same class as the motion pictures, such as the public press, the drama, literature, and art are immune from such censorship: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the Globe Central Labor Council, are unalterably opposed to motion-picture censorship and H. R. 456; and be it further
Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to Congressman CARL HAYDEN and Senators ASHURST and SMITH, and that we urge these gentlemen to do all in their power to oppose and prevent the passage of any censorship bills.

Mr. THOMAS. I present resolutions adopted at a meeting of women voters of Colorado in mass meeting assembled in Denver, April 15, 1916, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas President Wilson declared yesterday in his speech in New York that the Democratic Party controls the Government; that he personally is interested in lifting the load depressing humanity: Be it

Resolved, That we, the women voters of Colorado, in mass meeting assembled in Denver, April 15, 1916, in the Broadway Theater, agree with the President, and now demand that the Democratic Party fulfill this responsibility that has been laid upon it by its leader and give at once the necessary aid and facilities for the passage during this session of Congress of the Susan B. Anthony amendment, proposing to enfranchise the women of the Nation; be it further

Resolved, That we protest against the undemocratic methods now being used against this measure to free humanity and the continued blocking of the submission of it to the various States for ratification; be it finally

Resolved therefore, That we call upon the President and all his colleagues to pass the Federal suffrage amendment on to the States without further delay, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to all the administration leaders and to the members of the House Judiciary Committee and to the entire Colorado congressional delegation, to be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the Senate and in the House.

[Telegram.]

APRIL 21, 1916.

Mr. FRED PABST AND OTHERS,
Oconomowoc, Wis.:

Answering your telegram, will say that no one is more desirous of keeping this country out of war than I am; but war can best be avoided by wrong yielding to right and not by right yielding to wrong. Would therefore respectfully suggest that you also wire the German ambassador of the fervent desire of all Americans that their country remain at peace, and that peace can best be preserved by the strict observance on the part of the Imperial Government of the provisions of international law governing naval warfare. Would further suggest that you wire the ambassador that all Americans, regardless of their ancestry or sympathies, stand solidly back of their Government in this crisis.

PAUL O. HUSTING,
United States Senator.

SOUTH CAROLINA NAVAL MILITIA.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. From the Committee on Immigration I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 79) authorizing the Secretary of Labor to permit the South Carolina Naval Militia to use the Charleston immigration station and dock connected therewith, and I ask for its immediate consideration. The joint resolution has been recommended by the Bureau of Immigration and also was unanimously passed in the House. I ask that it be read with a view to its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Labor is authorized to permit the South Carolina Naval Militia to occupy the Charleston immigration station and the dock therewith connected and use them as an armory and place of landing under such conditions as may be prescribed by him: Provided, That the State of South Carolina shall make, at its own expense, such repairs as may be necessary on said building and dock, ordinary wear and tear excepted, so long as the same is used for the purposes set forth in this resolution: Provided further, That the Secretary of Labor may take possession of and reoccupy said immigration station and dock whenever in his judgment he may deem such possession and reoccupancy desirable

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator for what purpose the buildings are now used?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They are Government buildings, lying there useless. The occupancy for this purpose will tend to preserve them.

Mr. SMOOT. Just one more question. Suppose the buildings were destroyed by fire, who would be responsible for the loss?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I suppose that they are insured as Government buildings.

Mr. SMOOT. They are insured by the Government?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I presume that the Government would not leave that property uninsured there in the fire zone.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose there may be less risk now, the buildings being unoccupied, than there would be by the occupation of them. I was wondering whether the Senator from South Carolina really knew that the Government has insurance upon them.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not think they would be uninsured in view of the fact that they are within the fire zone.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment authorizing the President of the United States to designate such lands which have been or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States in the western part of the State of North Carolina under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911, as should, in his opinion, be set aside for the protection of game, animals, birds, or fish, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

L., 1068), provides that retired officers of the Regular Army who shall stand a satisfactory medical and professional examination for promotion as now provided for by law, shall be restored to the active list of the Army as supernumerary officers: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate as to the number of retired officers of the Regular Army who have applied for restoration to the active list of the Army under the above-mentioned act, as to the number who have passed the necessary examinations, and as to the cause of the delay in acting upon their cases.

REPORT ON INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS IN EUROPE.

Mr. JONES. I have the report of the commissioners of the State of Washington on the work of the American commission that went to Europe to study industrial conditions, rural credits, and so forth. Quite a large edition of this report was printed by the State of Washington, but it is now exhausted, and there is quite a demand for it. It is a very valuable report, in my judgment, and I submit it with the request that it be referred to the Committee on Printing to consider the question of printing it as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12766) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. BROUSSARD, Mr. DU PONT, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 8348. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Juvenile Court in and for the District of Columbia," and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I send to the desk Senate joint resolution No. 1 and ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read Senate joint resolution 1 proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States conferring upon women the right of suffrage, which had been introduced by Mr. SUTHERLAND December 7, 1915, and reported by Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Woman Suffrage, January 8, 1916, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of the said legislatures, shall be valid as part of said Constitution, namely:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

"SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to enforce the provisions of this article."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in the determination of a great question involving the rights and liberties of human beings, the first and most important inquiry is, Is it right? If that question is determined in the affirmative, it should settle all doubts as to the policy of adopting the measure. But, inasmuch as there are those who will not let the righteousness of the cause determine the policy, I wish to discuss this question from the standpoint: First. Is it right? Second. Is it expedient? Third. Is it practicable?

I.

IS EQUAL SUFFRAGE RIGHT?

Mr. President, previous to modern times the prevailing form of government in the world was that of monarchy, which was founded upon the doctrine of the right of one person by force to govern others. The only way such a doctrine maintained its supremacy was through the ignorance of the masses and the appeal to their extreme religious fears in the declaration that the powers of government descended from God to the monarch and that they who did not accept it were heretics. This doctrine was called the "divine right of kings." At times when the rule of the monarch became very oppressive to the lords and barons, the king was required to surrender some of his power, which concessions incidentally gave rights to the people. The government was then called a limited monarchy and was administered chiefly in the interest of the aristocracy.

In the formation of our Republic we put forth to the world new principles of government which seemed so plain to us that we declared them to be self-evident truths. We declared "that all men are created equal," not in intellect, not in color, not in height, not in strength, and not in many other respects, but equal in rights. We declared that man is entitled as an inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—that is, that these rights are so sacred that they not only shall not be invaded by others, but that they can not be bartered away even by ourselves. We further declared as our fundamental principle that in order to secure these inalienable rights "governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers," not from kings, not from presidents, not from parliaments, not from congresses, but "from the consent of the governed."

These principles, according to our ideas of right, constitute the ethics of organized society called government.

While men of our Republic acknowledge these principles of government as applicable to all men, many refuse to recognize them as applicable to women. They cling to their power like the monarchs and the aristocracy clung to theirs. They invoke the divine right of sex as the monarchs asserted the divine right of kings.

An eminent writer has said that all powers of government are either delegated or assumed; that all powers not delegated are assumed, and all assumed powers are usurpations.

Mr. President, the powers of government by which men exercise control over women are not delegated powers, because the women never granted such authority to them. Such powers by men, then, are assumed; and as all assumed powers are usurpations, the exercise of the powers of government by men over women is usurpation. Men condemn usurpation in other men. Why will they not condemn their own usurpation over women?

What right have I to make all the laws which shall govern not only myself but also my wife, sister, and mother, without giving to them any voice in determining the justice or wisdom of those laws, when they are just as intelligent as I? It can only be on the assertion of an assumed or usurped authority—that which we have condemned as being not the source of rightful power.

Lincoln's statement that "no man is good enough to govern another without that other man's consent" even the antisuffragist recognizes as a truth when applied to men. As women are human beings—part of the people—why is it not applicable to them?

All remember Lincoln's declaration that "when the white man governs himself, that is self-government; but when he governs himself and also governs another man, that is more than self-government—that is despotism."

The exercise of any power of government not emanating from the consent of the governed, therefore, is despotism. After men, by the usurpation of power, have attached the elective franchise to themselves, is it an answer to the demand of women for equal suffrage to say that we men have concluded now since we alone have the franchise and no extension of it can be made except with our consent, that suffrage is a privilege which attaches neither to man nor to woman by nature? Is it not as great a usurpation to assume the right to dictate who shall be permitted to vote as it is to seize any other power?

Even if superiority of intellect were a justification for usurpation of human rights, which I deny, man would utterly fail in establishing his superiority. The test of scholarship in all coeducational schools and colleges demonstrates that the girls on an average are equal, if not superior, to the boys. In Colorado more girls attend school than boys, and many more girls graduate from high schools than boys.

Politics is the science of government and men are honored for endeavoring to establish and maintain good government. As the sovereignty of government extends over women, why should not their efforts in the same cause be equally as commendable?

HALF THE PROPERTY OF THE UNITED STATES TAXED WITHOUT REPRESENTATION.

Mr. President, there was a time when all the property of women became their husband's on marriage, and in many countries the law of primogeniture prevailed. Since women now, in the United States, have the right to hold and convey property in their own names, and as women under the laws of inheritance acquire equal estates with men, fully one-half of the real and personal property of the country in each generation becomes vested in women. Their property is annually taxed for the maintenance of government in which they are not permitted to participate.

Have we forgotten the cry of our forefathers, which stirred the blood of every patriotic American, that "taxation without representation is tyranny"? Why is it tyranny to men but not to women? Should women be denied the right to protect, by their votes, their property from excessive tax encumbrances, when the right to encumber it by vote is given to men, some of whom can not read or write our language? Is it sufficient to say that "they are not the only persons taxed as property holders from whom the ballot is withheld," when the only persons from whom it is permanently withheld are lunatics, idiots, illiterates, and criminals? How would men like to be denied the franchise for such reasons?

WOMAN'S SPHERE.

The arrogance with which men assert that women have a sphere to which they should be confined must be irritating to women of thought and action. Who gave man the right to determine woman's sphere without even consulting her? How chivalrous it is in him to determine for her such a momentous question. How easy it is to have it disposed of by the statement that "it is a mistake to suppose that any human reason or argument is needful or adequate to the assignment of the relative positions to be assumed by man and woman in working out the problems of civilization. This was done long ago by a higher intelligence than ours."

A question of importance has rarely ever been presented but some people have sought to foreclose any argument by claiming that it was settled by the Almighty. How can this claim be reconciled with the fact that it has also been settled in Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Washington, Oregon, California, Utah, and Arizona, and in Australia, New Zealand, Norway, Iceland, Finland, Denmark, and in the Canadian Provinces of Alberta, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan? Had God nothing to do with settling it there?

In the days of slavery everyone heard the argument that the negro was not capable of taking care of himself; that it was better for him to have a master, who would care for and protect him; that the patriarchs of old, the chosen men of God, had slaves, and therefore slavery had received the sanction of God and was a divine institution.

Abraham Lincoln said:

Whenever I hear anyone arguing for slavery I feel a strong impulse to see it tried on him personally.

So whenever I hear men advocating the denial of rights to others, I feel an impulse to see how they personally would appreciate the denial of those rights to themselves.

WOMEN WANT EQUAL RIGHTS.

Mr. President, many assume that women do not want equal suffrage. That is no argument against a woman's right to vote, even if it were true. Even prisoners become satisfied with their conditions. Byron's Prisoner of Chillon says:

My very chains and I grew friends,
So much a long communion tends
To make us what we are:—even I
Regain'd my freedom with a sigh.

After the Civil War many of the slaves did not want their freedom. They dreaded a change and were satisfied with their condition. Will anyone contend that they should not have had their freedom, even if a majority of them had been satisfied with slavery? Can we justly wipe out the principle of the inalienable rights of a human being by any such false reasoning?

If a majority of the men of a State or of the United States should not care for the elective franchise, would the other men be willing to be deprived of it and of all the benefits that flow from it? There was a time when the suffrage movement was ridiculed so much that it made many women less insistent upon their rights, and no doubt a considerable number were indifferent as to voting; but now the cause of woman suffrage has made a progress, stimulated by their desire for the franchise, that is marvelous, contrasted with the sentiment of even 10 years ago. If a woman for any reason should prefer not to vote, she will always have that privilege. Equal suffrage does not force the exercise of it upon anyone. On the other hand, the denial of the franchise deprives not only the one who does not want it, but also the one who does want it and who believes it is her right.

Do women want equal suffrage? Ask the women of Colorado. Submit the question to those who have tried it and scarcely a small minority can be found to vote against it. Whenever a law is disapproved by the people, expression of that sentiment is found in appeals for its repeal. Colorado has had equal suffrage for 23 years, yet no petitions for repeal have ever been presented.

The fact that no member of the General Assembly of Colorado has ever even introduced in that body a bill to resubmit the question to the people shows that there is no demand for any change in the elective franchise of that State. The principle of equal rights for women is as irrevocably determined in Colorado as the freedom of the negro is determined in the Nation.

SUFFRAGE NOT DEPENDENT UPON ABILITY TO FIGHT.

Mr. President, it is contended that woman can not bear arms, therefore, she is not entitled to participate in the affairs of the government of her country. I do not believe the right to vote should be dependent upon the ability to kill. No such distinction is made among the men of the Nation. The strong and the weak, the youthful and the aged, the active and the decrepit are upon an equality in the exercise of their franchise.

It is said that Elizabeth Cady Stanton was once urging woman suffrage when Horace Greeley, invoking this same contention, asked her if there were a call by the Government upon the women for troops what she would do. Instantly she replied, "I would do exactly as you did in the Civil War, Mr. Greeley, hire a substitute."

Even if a woman could not bear arms, she does bear loyal sons, who are ever ready to enlist for the defense of her country. She has a high sense of honor and courage, which for a just cause makes her willing to sacrifice all for her country. The European war has demonstrated that the women of this day have a courage equal to that of the Spartan mothers, who bade their sons on departing for battle to return with their shields or upon them. In case of necessity I am confident that thousands would enter the field, as many have done in the present world's conflict. But it is an outrage that woman should have no voice in the determination as to whether her country should go to war, when the sacrifice of her sons may be required by the Nation, and when her property to the limit of its value may be taken by taxation to prosecute the war. She is not swayed by the same motives as are some men. She does not become a jingo from a selfish desire for promotion or for glory. The thought of wearing epaulets and gold lace does not affect her judgment. She suffers for her loved ones more than does the soldier on the field of battle. She realizes better than man how horrible and destructive is war, both in victory and defeat, and how much the progress of the human race is retarded thereby. It is for these reasons she would act as a balance wheel in the machinery of government.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I assume that my colleague has not overlooked the fact that during the great conflict in Europe women have taken the places of men in all the industrial departments of life, and are conducting the industries and the ordinary pursuits which are inseparable from existence with a devotion, a courage, and an efficiency equal to that which prevailed prior to the outbreak of the war, and that also in the hospital work and in some lines of field duty, notably in organizations for reserve service in Great Britain, women have been doing and are doing men's work and doing it well. They have done it so well in Great Britain that Mr. Sidney Brooks, one of the leading English writers of this generation and heretofore a strong opponent of woman suffrage in England, has recently declared that woman has earned her right to the enjoyment of political equality and political privilege—a right which he asserts will be freely conceded to women in the British Empire as soon as peace shall have returned and normal conditions again prevail.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for the statement; and I can go a little further by saying that I have noticed in the newspapers a number of instances in which women have gone into the trenches in the European war by the side of the men where they are fighting in defense of their country.

Mr. President, civilization demands that international disputes shall not continue to be determined by the amount of death and destruction which can be wrought, and woman's influence backed by a vote is greatly needed in the work of creating a tribunal to settle such disputes by arbitration. It is absurd to say that questions of honor can not, as in lawsuits, be settled by international arbitration tribunals. That was the argument that prevented for centuries the passage of laws prohibiting dueling, an institution which sacrificed, under the pretense of maintaining honor, thousands of the most brilliant men of the world; yet no one would now sanction for a minute a return to that destructive practice.

IS IT WRONG TO ADOPT THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT?

Mr. President, vigorous objection is made to adopting an amendment to the Federal Constitution providing for equal suffrage on the ground that the elective franchise is a subject inherently within the province of a State, and the adoption of such a constitutional amendment would force upon some States a franchise which they might believe was detrimental to their people. The same objection can be made to the adoption of any constitutional amendment when opposed by even one State.

Some people believe that the United States Government has no right to place an embargo upon what the people of a State shall drink and they regard a prohibition amendment to the Constitution as an infringement of their personal liberty.

It is true the United States Government is one of enumerated, delegated powers, and those powers not delegated are reserved to the States. When applied to a law of which the power to enact has not been delegated, the argument is invincible, but the adoption of a constitutional amendment is the very delegation of the power to the Federal Government. There is, therefore, as against the adoption of an amendment to the Federal Constitution, no such thing as a "subject inherently within the province of a State."

The Constitution prescribes that—

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution * * * which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States.

All concede that the adoption of such an amendment in the manner prescribed is legally right. Then, wherein is it morally wrong? The States adopted the Constitution knowing full well of this provision. The safeguard protecting the interest of a State is in the provision requiring such a large majority vote of the Members of each House of Congress to adopt an amendment and in the legislatures of the States to ratify the same. The fact that the people of three-fourths of the States want an amendment is the best evidence that it is morally right.

To us of Colorado who believe that woman's influence in government has always been and is sure to continue to be for the enactment of all good and moral legislation and the enforcement of the same, it is inconceivable that her right to vote could do any harm or wrong to any State.

For these reasons I contend that equal suffrage by State or National constitutional amendment is right.

II.

IS WOMAN SUFFRAGE EXPEDIENT?

Mr. President, the statement is made that even if every woman should exercise the suffrage, "the votes of the thoughtful and conscientious would almost certainly be largely outweighed by the votes of the disreputable, the ignorant, the thoughtless, the purchased, and the coerced."

In that declaration the assumption is made either that the disreputable and ignorant women are in the majority or that the good women will not vote, both of which I most emphatically deny.

The contention that the immoral women in large numbers are eager to vote is refuted by experience. Not more than one-half of 1 per cent of the women are immoral—that is 1 out of every 200—and hence their votes could never constitute a large factor in elections. Women of the red-light district are never eager to vote. They know that their business is unlawful and is liable to be closed if they should take an active part against the candidates who win. It is for that reason they shrink from casting any vote whatever and would not ordinarily participate in elections unless urged to do so by the police force of their city. They dislike to register or give any facts concerning themselves or their names and addresses; they are, therefore, usually unwilling voters, and many are disqualified by reason of the frequent change of habitation.

On the other hand, the good and intelligent women are equally interested with men in good government and respond in about the same proportion as men in performing their duty as citizens.

They are even more interested than men in all movements in behalf of moral uplift and of humanity.

There have been a few instances in which a woman has been guilty of fraud in an election in Colorado. The antisuffragists seemed to have gone into spasms over the occurrence and have urged it as a sure indication of the corrupting influence of women in politics. In reading of the exposure they have totally ignored the fact contained in the same news item that there were 10 or more men implicated with the woman in the fraud, and that the men procured her participation in order to divert suspicion from themselves.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. What is the proportion of criminals confined in Colorado of the feminine sex as compared with men?

Mr. SHAFROTH. About one-twentieth. It varies a fraction above or below that; but the average is about one-twentieth.

Mr. OWEN. Then, men would appear to be twenty times as bad as women?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; that seems to be the fact from the criminal court records.

The majority of the press of the country has always been unfair to women in the publication of such incidents. They have always put in headlines the part derogatory of women and have seldom referred to the fact, which usually existed, of more than ten times as many men being implicated in the same fraud. A clipping from a Washington paper contained headlines, in capitals, as follows:

WOMEN'S VOTES AT $1 EACH—THREE FAIR KENTUCKIANS INDICTED FOR FRAUDS AT A SCHOOL ELECTION.

The text of the dispatch, in small type, was as follows:

PIKEVILLE, KY., February 6, 1915.

Three women have been indicted on charges of selling votes in the last school election. They will be tried with the 1,100 men who are accused of having committed fraud at the primary election here last August. It was alleged in the indictment that the women sold their votes for $1 each. The trials of those indicted will be resumed on Monday.

What an injustice it was to refer in the headlines to only the fraud of 3 women when the startling fact existed of the commission of election frauds by 1,100 men!

If it is so potential an argument against woman suffrage that a few women have been implicated in election frauds, why is it not ten times as strong an argument against manhood suffrage when the facts will show that there were at least ten times as many men implicated in the same frauds? Since the conviction and disfranchisement on account of election frauds of nearly all of the men of Adams County, Ohio, it seems to me such an argument against woman suffrage would never be urged.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask my colleague right there whether every argument that is advanced against equal suffrage, if sound and if carried to its logical consequences, would not disfranchise the male citizens of America?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Unquestionably it would. If the argument is valid that because one woman commits a fraud in an election, therefore all the women should not be permitted to vote, it would disfranchise, of course, the men, because ten times as many men as women are guilty of such frauds.

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest whether the arguments of incapacity, of indifference, of ignorance, and the like are not equally conclusive, if conclusive at all, when applied to men?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is true in almost every instance. I have some statistics here, to which I will refer, as to the number of women who vote. Some say they do not vote, but the statistics show the contrary.

Mr. President, who are these women who, many seem to fear, will have a corrupting influence on elections if given the right to vote? They are our mothers, our wives, our sisters, and our daughters. Is there a man good or bad in high life or low who believes his mother, wife, sister, or daughter would be more corrupt than he in exercising the elective franchise?

Woman's influence has always been for good, and in no sphere has this been better demonstrated than in politics. The election polls, since the advent of woman suffrage in Colorado, with the exception of a few in the low parts of the cities, have been transformed into as respectable places of meeting as dry goods stores or public halls. Laws have been enacted for the very purpose of preventing disturbances. No electioneering is permitted within 100 feet of the voting place. The rowdy element, which was once wont to assemble at and remain around the polls all day, is wanting. There is absolutely no danger of an insult to a woman at the polls where neighbors and friends vote.

The precinct primaries and elections are conducted by local authorities and at public expense and are held at residences or other respectable places. The restraining influence of the presence of women has greatly improved the tone of political conventions and meetings.

PRODUCES BETTER NOMINATIONS.

Mr. President, the influence of women has been felt most, perhaps, in the character of nominations made by each political party. Many men, after denouncing a candidate as dishonest and immoral before his nomination, support him at the election because they believe they must have a consistent party record in order to get subsequent recognition from their party.

Women have no political records to keep consistent. Only in rare instances are they candidates for office. In no instance has a woman in Colorado sought the nomination for any State office, except that of superintendent of public instruction, and able and highly educated women have been elected to that position ever since equal suffrage was adopted. A small percentage of women is elected to the house of representatives and the senate of the general assembly, all of whom have made excellent records.

To such an extent is the moral influence of women felt that if a disreputable candidate is mentioned the argument is urged by men that the women will not support him, and he is generally defeated for nomination or his name by reason of failure of support is not placed upon the primary ballot. Thus, woman's presence in politics has introduced an independent element which compels better nominations and better officials.

Some fear has been expressed by those who have not observed the operation of the law that women will spend most of their time in politics and thereby neglect their home duties. Ninety-nine per cent of the women in Colorado devote no more time to politics than to attend one or two political meetings every year and go to the polls near their homes on election day and cast their votes. Not one-hundredth part of the time is spent by women in political affairs as is spent by the average woman in social duties.

WILL WOMAN SUFFRAGE PRODUCE DISCORD IN THE FAMILY?

Mr. President, it was predicted by many that equal suffrage, by the discussion of political questions and the merits of candidates for office, would produce dissension in the home which would often culminate in separation and divorce. There is no instance known in Colorado where it was even claimed in a divorce case that the difficulties between the husband and wife arose over disputes as to politics.

A short time before the vote in the United States Senate was taken upon the adoption of the Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Constitution in March, 1914, I wrote a letter to each of the 19 judges of the district courts in the State of Colorado, those being the courts in which nearly all of the divorce actions are brought, which letter was in the following form:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 17, 1914.

Judge GEORGE W. ALLEN,
Courthouse, Denver, Colo.

DEAR JUDGE: There is pending in the Senate a joint resolution for a constitutional amendment granting equal suffrage to women. There has been some contention among those who are opposed to woman suffrage that the passage of such a constitutional amendment would have a tendency to produce quarrels among husbands and wives.

I would thank you very much if you would let me know whether in any divorce case which you have tried it was claimed upon either side that the cause of any dissension or disagreement among the parties to the suit originated from or was caused by differences as to politics or candidates. If there have been any such, I would thank you very much if you would indicate the proportion where such disagreements and difficulties arose as contrasted with the number of divorce cases which you have tried. By giving me this information you will greatly oblige.

Yours, truly, JOHN F. SHAFROTH.

The answer of each of the judges was substantially that given by Judge Allen in the following reply to my communication:

CHAMBERS, DISTRICT COURT,
Denver, Colo., February 24, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I take pleasure in answering your inquiry of the 17th instant.

During my experience on the bench, which has covered a period of approximately 20 years, I have never known of a divorce case among the many as such wherein it was claimed or suggested that political differences in any manner had been the cause of troubles between husband and wife. I know of no divorce case brought in the court wherein it was claimed or alleged upon either side that political differences had caused any dissensions to disturb the marital relations between husband and wife.

Universal suffrage has existed by law in our State since 1893.

Sincerely, yours,

GEO. W. ALLEN,
Judge District Court.

The answers of the other district judges of Colorado to the same effect can be found in a speech I delivered in the Senate on March 2, 1914, printed on page 4141 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date.

In view of this unanimous testimony of men who know, what a base slander it is to say that equal suffrage in Colorado causes political quarrels between husbands and wives, resulting in cruelty, which often produces grounds for divorce.

The States of Maine and Colorado are about equal in population. Between 1887 and 1906, according to the only census statistics available, there were granted in Maine 14,194 divorces, of which 4,844 were on the charge of cruelty; while in Colorado, during the same period, there were 15,844 divorces granted, of which 2,717 were on the charge of cruelty. Thus it can be seen that in Colorado woman suffrage has not produced political quarrels resulting in cruelty between husbands and wives.

It may be true that some more divorces have been granted in the far Western States than in some other parts of the country, but that is not due to woman suffrage, for the percentage of divorces was just as great during the years before such States adopted equal suffrage as now. That condition is due to the fact that so many people from the other parts of the Union desiring to avoid the publicity at their home cities and communities of the scandals which grow out of such proceedings go to these far Western States to commence and prosecute their divorce actions.

HIGHER WAGES FROM SUFFRAGE.

Mr. President, that equal suffrage opens to women more positions and occupations, which fact, according to the principle of supply and demand, must produce better wages, it seems to me no one can deny.

There was a time when it was considered unseemly for women to accept employment other than in the factory or in the household. To be a clerk in a store or an office was considered almost scandalous. With such a public sentiment closing the door of opportunity for positions, what chance had women of obtaining employment at remunerative wages? The very agitation for equal suffrage has forced public sentiment to recognize, at least, the right of women to work in any vocation that is honorable.

If it were not that many honorable women in past years persistently advocated equal rights the sphere of labor for women would likely still be principally in the household and factory. The right to exercise the franchise in determining the important questions of city, State, and National Governments, as well as in the selecting of the officers of the same, gives woman that important consideration and respect which everyone possessing power receives.

Deprive any class or nationality of men of the elective franchise, and its detrimental effect would be felt almost immediately. Their petitions for legislation would no longer receive prompt and careful consideration; and if the proposed legislation conflicted with laws favorable to a class of voters, it would be almost impossible to get a legislator or Congressman to introduce and urge such a measure.

Mr. President, while a Member of Congress I appeared with Miss Susan B. Anthony, Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, and others before a committee of the National House of Representatives every session for nine years, begging for a favorable report on the Susan B. Anthony amendment which I had introduced. The most favorable expression we were ever able to obtain from the committee was that the members would give the matter their careful consideration. No report was ever made.

If persons representing one-tenth as many voters had made an appeal for some important legislation affecting their rights, do not we know that those same Congressmen would almost have fought with each other for the privilege of writing a favorable report?

Nor would such effect be produced upon legislators only. A prejudice against a class or nationality deprived of the franchise exists among the masses, and when conflict of interest arises it manifests itself often in violence, which even the officers of the law are powerless to prevent.

Does anyone suppose the Chinese would have received the treatment accorded them had they been voters? Would not their allegiance to a political party have procured the friendship and protection of the members of that party? Would not more positions of employment have been opened to them under that protection, and would not that demand for their labor have produced better wages for them?

If this franchise is so important to men, why is it not equally important to women? If it is so instrumental in getting legislation for men, why would it not be equally effective for women? If it lessens the number of positions available to a class of men to be deprived of their franchise, and consequently affects their wages, why does it not produce the same effect on the positions open to women and their wages?

RESPECT FOR WOMEN.

Mr. President, the contention that women will lose the respect of men has been urged against every advance made by women. From the modifications of the old unjust laws against them to the admission of women to the best colleges and universities of our land the same contention has been made. But is not there as much respect for women now as when under the law the husband had the right to chastise his wife, and when they were debarred from entering colleges and universities?

The respect for woman is based upon her intelligence and morality. Is there anything calculated to degrade her in the act of going to the polls on election day, where she will find in line her neighbors and friends, and casting her vote to determine State and National questions and who shall administer the affairs of the Government? Does any man believe that he has been degraded by casting an honest vote? Why should we assume that it will degrade women and not men?

In Colorado I find no tendency in men to omit the acts of courtesy and respect which women have always commanded.

During the last 20 years I have lived about half the time at Washington City and the other half at Denver, Colo. I have observed the women of those two cities to ascertain, if possible, whether the elective franchise of Colorado has either lowered woman's ideals or changed her refined, womanly qualities. In education, in culture, and in her home influence the Colorado woman is surpassed by none, and her ideals are as lofty and as pure as our own glorious mountains, by which she is surrounded.

These facts, it seems to me, conclusively show that equal suffrage is expedient.

III.

IS EQUAL SUFFRAGE PRACTICABLE?

Mr. President, the contention that equal suffrage is impracticable because women will not vote is flatly contradicted by the election returns in the equal-suffrage States of the Union.

The women in those States, in proportion to their number, cast about as many votes as do the men. This is demonstrated by contrasting the vote in the equal-suffrage States with that of other States of equal population. The assumption that there are as many qualified voters in a State as the census report shows there are inhabitants over 21 years of age is erroneous. The census enumerators do not see each inhabitant, and are encouraged by the people of each city and community to make the enumeration as large as possible, and usually, by duplications and incorrect reports, the number is considerably increased. The enumeration contains all the unnaturalized population as well as those who by statute are permanently disqualified from voting. It contains those who have not resided in the State, county, or precinct long enough to be entitled to vote. Even the registered voters can never all vote. The changes in the addresses of those not having homes is always considerable. The absence from the polls on registration days or election days of voters on account of business, visits, sickness, and so forth, is always large in all States.

The population of Colorado in 1910 was 799,024, and of Maine was 742,371, yet the vote cast in 1912 for presidential electors was 266,871 in Colorado and only 129,636 in Maine.

The population of Kansas in 1910, where woman suffrage now prevails, was 1,690,949, and the population of Oklahoma in 1910, where woman suffrage does not prevail, was 1,657,155, yet the total vote cast in 1914 for governor in Kansas was 530,206, while in Oklahoma it was only 253,682.

The population of the State of Washington in 1910 was 1,141,990 and of Connecticut 1,114,756. The total vote cast in the State of Washington in 1914, where equal suffrage prevails, was 345,279, while in Connecticut, where equal suffrage does not prevail, the vote cast in 1914 was 181,108.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to direct the Senator's attention to the fact that there was no election in the State of Washington for governor in 1914; there was in 1912. But in 1914, of course, we had a congressional election, and prohibition resolutions were voted upon. My recollection is that about 350,000 votes were cast on that issue.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Three hundred and forty-five thousand two hundred and seventy-nine is the exact figure given by the World Almanac. I supposed the governor was elected.

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If he was not elected, of course, it would not have been so important an election as it would if the governor had been elected, and, consequently, it is more favorable to the position I take.

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is true.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Perhaps the clearest demonstration that women do vote when given the franchise is shown in the election returns of such States immediately preceding and immediately after equal suffrage has been adopted. It must be borne in mind also that in all the equal-suffrage States there are many more men of voting age than women. In Colorado there are 85,940 more men.

The vote cast in Arizona in 1912 for President was 23,722. At that election the people of that State adopted an equal-suffrage constitutional amendment. At the next election, in 1914, the total vote cast was 51,007.

In the State of Kansas the total vote cast in 1912 for presidential electors was 365,444. At that same election a constitutional amendment was adopted granting suffrage to women. In the election of 1914 there were cast for governor in that State 530,206 votes.

In the State of Oregon the total vote cast in 1912 for presidential electors was 137,040. At that same election a constitutional amendment was adopted granting suffrage to women. In the election of 1914 there were cast for governor in that State 248,052 votes.

In the State of Washington the total vote cast in 1908 for presidential electors was 183,630. In 1910 woman suffrage was adopted in that State, and in the election of 1912 there were 322,799 votes cast.

Compare the total vote of 1912 with that of 1914 in any State having male suffrage only and you will find that the increase is very inconsiderable if any.

Presidential elections nearly always bring out a larger vote than State elections.

The officers of very few counties in Colorado tabulate the vote at elections by sex, there being no law requiring it, but those of the city of Denver make such tabulation in presidential years.

In the city of Denver there were registered, in 1908, 41,530 men, of whom 36,891 voted, and 35,620 women, of whom 29,085 voted.

In the city of Denver there were registered, in 1912, 46,010 men, of whom 34,632 voted, and 34,170 women, of whom 25,315 voted.

The registrations are very complete, and represent practically all the voters in the city.

It seems to me that these statistics should determine conclusively that women will and do vote at elections in about the same proportion as men.

DO WOMEN VOTE AS THEIR HUSBANDS?

Mr. President, it is said that if women vote they will support the same candidates for office as their husbands, and thereby the vote will be doubled at considerable expense without any gain in result. The sons of a household usually belong to the same political party as their father, but no one would think for that reason the sons should be disfranchised. Perhaps in a majority of instances women do vote the same as their husbands, but when they do not, it is generally because of some reprehensible or immoral conduct upon the part of the candidate which the husband, for party expediency or to keep his own political record straight, may overlook. In such instances her vote is the better for good government.

Women have had equal suffrage in school elections in 28 States of the Union for many years. Has anyone ever contended that the exercise of that right has contaminated school elections or the women who participated therein, or made less efficient the teaching or moral instruction in such States?

It is universally recognized in Colorado that the women who have filled official positions in that State have made excellent records. While only one State elective office has been filled by a woman, namely, superintendent of public instruction, yet women have been appointed on many State boards, and such boards have been better managed than they ever were by men alone.

LAWS IN COLORADO URGED BY WOMEN.

Mr. President, women have materially assisted in having enacted many excellent laws, among which are the following:

Establishing a juvenile court and a code for the treatment of juvenile delinquents and for the punishment of those who contribute to their delinquency, and for the redemption of offenders; a State industrial school for girls; a State home for dependent children; a State home for mental defectives; compulsory education for all children from 8 to 16 years of age; a law preventing child labor during terms of school; establishing parents as joint heirs of deceased children; making it a misdemeanor for adult children to fail to support aged or infirm parents; increasing the age of consent of girls and protecting them by criminal statutes (the age of consent of girls in some States is as low as 12 years); creating a State traveling library commission of women; establishing a pure-food bureau and providing for the enforcement of laws as to pure food; preventing husbands from mortgaging household goods without signature of the wife; providing for examination of teeth, eyes, and ears of school children; creating a bureau for prevention of cruelty to dumb animals; abolishing the sweat box in getting confessions from prisoners; authorizing commutation of sentence for prisoners so that by good conduct and work they can earn their liberty in much shorter time; establishing a board of charities for the supervision of all public prisons and eleemosynary institutions; prohibiting men from taking the earnings of immoral women; providing for protection of children by forbidding publicity in cases in which they are involved; providing for minimum wages for women and minors; providing minimum salary for teachers; providing eight-hour law for miners; creating a public-utilities commission; prohibiting employment of children in certain unhealthy and dangerous occupations; and adopting a State-wide prohibition constitutional amendment.

Every moral law or movement has had the support of a large majority of the women. It was the Interparliamentary Union at London which declared that Colorado has "the sanest, most humane, most progressive, most scientific laws relating to the child to be found on any statute books in the world."

The money raised by taxation for school purposes in Colorado is greater in amount, considering the population, than that raised in any other State of the Union.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE SURE TO WIN.

Mr. President, it is one of the truths verified by history that nearly all the movements in behalf of freedom and liberty have originated in the mountains or high altitudes. It was in the Alps that freedom was first established in Continental Europe and it was in the Highlands of Scotland that Bruce and Wallace laid the foundation of English liberty—

When Freedom from her mountain height
Unfurled her standard to the air,
She tore the azure robe of night
And set the stars of glory there.

So it was in the Mountain States, the birthplace of freedom, that equal suffrage was first given to women in this Republic. It is as certain to extend to every State in the Union as is the certainty of the ultimate triumph of every principle of right.

Women have in their hearts as much love of liberty and freedom as men. They now have full suffrage in 10 of the States of the Union and have full school suffrage in 18 other States. Giving them limited suffrage will not and should not satisfy them. It is one of the peculiar traits of human nature that palliative measures tending toward liberty simply whet the appetite for absolute freedom.

Mr. President, the advance in the establishment of equal suffrage is simply the progress of evolution in our form of government. It can no more be arrested than can the world's progress in democratic government. Our Declaration of Independence has produced a republic in nearly every country in the Western Hemisphere and has had a modifying influence in behalf of human rights upon every monarchy of Europe and Asia. Education and love of liberty, the solid foundation of all republics, are preparing the world for governments "of the people, for the people, and by the people."

For these reasons, I maintain that equal suffrage is right, expedient, and practicable, and that the highest considerations of the public welfare demand its adoption.

Both of the great political parties are soon to assemble in national convention. May they by strong declarations approve this Senate joint resolution No. 1 and thereby take an advance step in the progress of human rights and good government.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to take only a moment. The argument made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] on woman's suffrage looks to the sovereignty of the people, for when he speaks of the people he speaks of all the people, women as well as men. I regard this recognition of women as most important to the welfare of the American people. Woman's suffrage is a final culmination of the triumph of the people in self-government, and for that reason I take a deep interest in it.

I wish to put in the RECORD the secret treaty of Verona of November 22, 1822, showing what this ancient conflict is between the rule of the few and the rule of the many. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this treaty because it is the threat of this treaty which was the basis of the Monroe doctrine. It throws a powerful white light upon the conflict between monarchical government and government by the people. The Holy Alliance under the influence of Metternich, the Premier of Austria, in 1822, issued this remarkable secret document:

[American Diplomatic Code, 1778–1884, vol. 2; Elliott, p. 179.]

SECRET TREATY OF VERONA.

The undersigned, specially authorized to make some additions to the treaty of the Holy Alliance, after having exchanged their respective credentials, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1. The high contracting powers being convinced that the system of representative government is equally as incompatible with the monarchial principles as the maxim of the sovereignty of the people with the divine right, engage mutually, in the most solemn manner, to use all their efforts to put an end to the system of representative governments, in whatever country it may exist in Europe, and to prevent its being introduced in those countries where it is not yet known.

ART. 2. As it can not be doubted that the liberty of the press is the most powerful means used by the pretended supporters of the rights of nations to the detriment of those of princes, the high contracting parties promise reciprocally to adopt all proper measures to suppress it, not only in their own States but also in the rest of Europe.

ART. 3. Convinced that the principles of religion contribute most powerfully to keep nations in the state of passive obedience which they owe to their princes, the high contracting parties declare it to be their intention to sustain in their respective States those measures which the clergy may adopt, with the aim of ameliorating their own interests, so intimately connected with the preservation of the authority of the princes; and the contracting powers join in offering their thanks to the Pope for what he has already done for them, and solicit his constant cooperation in their views of submitting the nations.

ART. 4. The situation of Spain and Portugal unite unhappily all the circumstances to which this treaty has particular reference. The high contracting parties, in confiding to France the care of putting an end to them, engaged to assist her in the manner which may the least compromit them with their own people and the people of France by means of a subsidy on the part of the two empires of 20,000,000 of francs every year from the date of the signature of this treaty to the end of the war.

ART. 5. In order to establish in the Peninsula the order of things which existed before the revolution of Cadiz, and to insure the entire execution of the articles of the present treaty, the high contracting parties give to each other the reciprocal assurance that as long as their views are not fulfilled, rejecting all other ideas of utility or other measure to be taken, they will address themselves with the shortest possible delay to all the authorities existing in their States and to all their agents in foreign countries, with the view to establish connections tending toward the accomplishment of the objects proposed by this treaty.

ART. 6. This treaty shall be renewed with such changes as new circumstances may give occasion for, either at a new congress or at the court of one of the contracting parties, as soon as the war with Spain shall be terminated.

ART. 7. The present treaty shall be ratified and the ratifications exchanged at Paris within the space of six months.

Made at Verona the 22d November, 1822.

For Austria: METTERNICH.

For France: CHATEAUBRIAND.

For Prussia: BERNSTET.

For Russia: NESSELRODE.

I ask to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this secret treaty, because I think it ought to be called now to the attention of the people of the United States and of the world. This evidence of the conflict between the rule of the few versus popular government should be emphasized on the minds of the people of the United States, that the conflict now waging throughout the world may be more clearly understood, for after all said the great pending war springs from the weakness and frailty of government by the few, where human error is far more probable than the error of the many where aggressive war is only permitted upon the authorizing vote of those whose lives are jeopardized in the trenches of modern war.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator state whether in that treaty there was not a coalition formed between the powerful countries of Europe to reestablish the sovereignty of Spain in the Republics of South and Central America?

Mr. OWEN. I was just going to comment upon that, and I am going to take but a few moments to do so because I realize the pressure of other matters. This Holy Alliance, having put a Bourbon prince upon the throne of France by force, then used France to suppress the constitution of Spain immediately afterwards, and by this very treaty gave her a subsidy of 20,000,000 francs annually to enable her to wage war upon the people of Spain and prevent their exercise of any measure of the right of self-government. The Holy Alliance immediately did the same thing in Italy, by sending Austrian troops to Italy, where the people there attempted to exercise a like measure of liberal constitutional self-government; and it was not until the printing press, which the Holy Alliance so stoutly opposed, taught the people of Europe the value of liberty that finally one country after another seized a greater and greater right of self-government, until now it may be fairly said that nearly all the nations of Europe have a very large measure of self-government.

However, I wished to call the attention of the Senate and the country to this important history in the growth of constitutional popular self-government. The Holy Alliance made its powers felt by the wholesale drastic suppression of the press in Europe, by universal censorship, by killing free speech and all ideas of popular rights, and by the complete suppression of popular government. The Holy Alliance having destroyed popular government in Spain and in Italy, had well-laid plans also to destroy popular government in the American colonies which had revolted from Spain and Portugal in Central and South America under the influence of the successful example of the United States. It was because of this conspiracy against the American Republics by the European monarchies that the great English statesman, Canning, called the attention of our Government to it, and our statesmen then, including Thomas Jefferson, took an active part to bring about the declaration by President Monroe in his next annual message to the Congress of the United States that the United States would regard it as an act of hostility to the Government of the United States and an unfriendly act if this coalition or if any power of Europe ever undertook to establish upon the American Continent any control of any American Republic or to acquire any territorial rights.

This is the so-called Monroe doctrine. The threat under the secret treaty of Verona to suppress popular government in the American Republics is the basis of the Monroe doctrine. This secret treaty sets forth clearly the conflict between monarchial government and popular government and the government of the few as against the government of the many. It is a part, in reality, of developing popular sovereignty when we demand for women equal rights to life, to liberty, to the possession of property, to an equal voice in the making of the laws and the administration of the laws. This demand on the part of the women is made by men, and it ought to be made by men as well as by thinking, progressive women, as it will promote human liberty and human happiness. I sympathize with it, and I hope that all parties will in the national conventions give their approval to this larger measure of liberty to the better half of the human race.

PRICE OF PRINT PAPER.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7617.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that I merely ask unanimous consent to offer a Senate resolution, and I ask that it may lie on the table.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to know what the resolution is.

Mr. GORE. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 179), as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and is hereby, directed to investigate the recent rapid and unprecedented advance in the price of print paper, and to ascertain and report to the Senate the causes and forces which have brought about such advance of prices.

Mr. GORE. Let the resolution go to the table.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over one day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I addressed the Presiding Officer on yesterday for the purpose of offering this resolution, but at the instance of the Senator from West Virginia I deferred its introduction to facilitate the consideration of other business. The adoption of a similar resolution, however, dispenses with the necessity of the passage of the resolution which I have offered.

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I believe when the Senate adjourned last Friday the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the bill been presented to the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7617.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	McCumber	Saulsbury
Bankhead	Gore	Martin, Va.	Shafroth
Beckham	Hardwick	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard
Borah	Hollis	Myers	Sherman
Brady	Hughes	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Burleigh	Husting	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Oliver	Smoot
Chilton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Sutherland
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Owen	Swanson
Culberson	Kenyon	Page	Vardaman
Cummins	Lane	Phelan	Wadsworth
Curtis	Lippitt	Poindexter	Walsh
Dillingham	Lodge	Ransdell	Williams

Mr. CHILTON. My colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day. I wish also to announce the absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] for unavoidable reasons.

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7617.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] offers the following amendment, which is pending:

On page 12, line 25, after the word "thereof," strike out the comma and the words down to and including the word "thereof," on line 3, page 13, and insert: "but upon satisfactory evidence that such failure of maintenance no longer exists, he may resume the contributions to which the State would be entitled under the provisions of this act."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish the Secretary would read the text of the bill as it will stand if the amendment is agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. Section 7, if amended as proposed, will read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to withhold apportionment of funds to any State in which roads constructed under the provisions of this act have not, in his judgment, been properly maintained by the State, or any subdivision thereof; but upon satisfactory evidence that such failure of maintenance no longer exists he may resume the contributions to which the State would be entitled under the provisions of this act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I understand from hearing the reading of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that it strikes out the provision of the bill which requires that the Secretary of Agriculture shall give notice that the roads have not been properly maintained. Is that correct?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not adopt an amendment like that. I do not think the Secretary of Agriculture ought to be permitted to pounce on the government of a State without the permission of the State, and cut off the State's appropriation because, in his opinion, obtained perhaps from second-hand or some other source, the roads have not been properly maintained. I think it is but fair and just and right that the States should have notice that they have not maintained their roads properly under the provisions of the bill, and that unless they do so within a given time their appropriations will be discontinued.

I hope the amendment will not be adopted. Indeed, I hope my friend from Nebraska will not insist upon it, because it is so unjust and so unfair to the State that I can not conceive any reason why it should be adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not care to again discuss this amendment at any length, because I went over it with some particularity the other day when we had the bill before us. I simply want to call the attention of the Senate to what I believe all students of the subject will give their adherence—that is, that any road bill, whether it be Federal or State, that does not provide for the maintenance of roads after they are built is simply throwing public funds into a rat hole.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the Senator from Nebraska realize that the provisions of the bill for maintenance are just as emphatic and mandatory as they could possibly be written?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and I am going to discuss that briefly, since the Senator from Alabama has asked that question. The bill does provide for the maintenance of roads, and that is one reason why I feel inclined to support it. I would not vote for any road bill which I did not believe provided for the maintenance of roads after they were constructed; but while this bill in another place does provide for road maintenance, if we leave in the bill the language which I propose to strike out, it, in my judgment, nullifies the provision of the bill for road maintenance. It would be a legislative crime to use public money to build roads unless we did provide for their maintenance. Everyone knows that, although you may build a perfect highway, if there is no provision for its maintenance it will only be a short time until that highway may become impassable. When you undertake to spend public funds you have no excuse for using them for the purpose if the public highway, or whatever other thing you construct with those funds, is not going to be maintained after it is built. If we, representing the Federal Government, in providing for the building of roads want to see that those roads are maintained it is necessary for us to put something into the bill in the way of a penalty which the Federal Government can inflict if those roads are not maintained. The penalty hurts nobody if the law is complied with; the State loses nothing if the State maintains the road; but if the State does not maintain the road the only thing the Federal Government can do is to suspend future payments. We can not go into court and ask for the issuance of a mandamus against a State to compel it to comply with an agreement to maintain a highway. That would be an impossibility.

While I am not presuming that a State will violate its agreement, I know that there are public roads which have been built, into the construction of which thousands of dollars have been put, as to which no provision was made for their maintenance; and in a few years they had become worse than nothing. As to any bill for the construction of a road which does not contain any provision or any machinery for the maintenance of the road, that condition will naturally follow, because it will be nobody's business to look after the road after it shall have been constructed. We all know that if we have a road constructed in any locality, very often $1 expended in its maintenance will save $100 of expense a few weeks later. In other words, if the roads which are proposed to be constructed are not maintained, in a short time they will be worse than no roads, whereas by the expenditure of a comparatively small amount of money we can keep them in good condition all the time.

A State that shall not have the machinery for road maintenance and a State that does not keep such machinery actively in operation to maintain the roads ought not to have Federal assistance in building other roads. It is true that when the roads are all built, if the State does not maintain them they would go to ruin, and the Federal Government could not help itself. About the only thing we can do is to say to the State, "If you do not maintain this road, which we in part construct out of the Federal Treasury, then we will give you no more money to help construct other roads." No such notice is necessary. The State knows whether or not it is maintaining the road. If we leave the bill as it is and provide that we must give the State six months' notice, then let us look at it as a practical proposition and see what might happen. Suppose we constructed a road and made it a perfect highway, but nothing was done about its maintenance; that it began to wear out and became worse than no road at all; then, the next year, when the Secretary was going to make another distribution of public funds, he should give notice to the State authorities, that notice must run for six months, and suppose before the expiration of that six months the time comes to make another distribution of Federal money, the Secretary will have no right under this bill to withhold it from that State, although the State may be doing absolutely nothing to maintain the highway which had been constructed with public funds? Do we want that? Is that fair? Will that result in good roads? Will that upbuild the country? Is that the kind of a law that Congress wants to enact?

Why, Mr. President, if the State has not maintained the road, the Secretary of Agriculture ought to be allowed to say—and my amendment would make it his duty to say—"You have not maintained this road and we will give you no further money"; but, in order to save the State, even if that should occur, the amendment provides that afterwards if the State goes to work and maintains that road, then the Secretary of Agriculture, when he comes to distribute more funds, may give the State its proportionate part.

Mr. President, it is argued by the Senator from Alabama, as it was argued by other Senators the other day, that there might be an honest dispute between the Secretary of Agriculture and his engineers and the State engineers. That is true; I admit that. There might be an honest dispute; but if we leave the bill as it is there is just the same probability of that honest dispute existing at the end of the six months. Then, let us see what might happen if that honest dispute is going to take place. We have constructed a road out of Federal funds, the State has not maintained it, and the matter runs along, we will say, until within three months of the next occasion when there must be more money distributed; the State is about to get more money, and the Secretary of Agriculture then gives that State notice, and says, "Unless you maintain this road I will not pay you any more money." That notice must run six months before it is legally effective, and before that time passes the State gets another contribution, but it has not yet commenced to maintain the road, and the matter runs on for another year. As the period for the distribution approaches the State puts its engineers to work and commences to maintain the road, and when the time comes for the distribution it says to the Secretary, "We are now maintaining this road according to law"; but the Secretary says, "No; you are not; my engineers say not." I can conceive of a case where both sides may be honest; but I do not know any way to avoid that difficulty. That difficulty exists in the bill as it stands now, and I do not change it by my amendment; I make it no worse and no better by my amendment. There may be an honest dispute, and, unless you provide some other machinery or make some one supreme above the Secretary of Agriculture, it will remain in that way, whether or not my amendment is adopted.

Mr. President, I have offered this amendment in the best of faith. I am in favor of this bill; I am just as earnestly in favor of it as is any other Senator; but I want the bill to be put in such shape that it can not justly be charged against us that this is a "pork-barrel" proposition. If, however, we throw the money into roads and do not have any way to stop the continued payment of Federal money for roads, whether they are maintained or not, it could then be rightly said that this is a "pork-barrel" measure.

Suppose the amendment is adopted, what will happen? Assuming now, as it is fair to assume, that the Secretary of Agriculture and his engineers are honest; that they are trying to do the best they can; and that the State engineers and the State highways board are equally honest and are trying to do the best they can—if we assume that, and I believe we ought to so assume, for I imagine that would be the general rule, whether this amendment is adopted or not; each side perhaps in most cases will want to do what is right—here we have constructed a piece of road as to the condition of which the engineers of the State and the engineers of the Government know. They know whether it is being maintained or not. The words "properly maintained" are defined in the bill, so that it would not be necessary for an engineer to go out and see whether or not a road is properly maintained. If one went out and found holes as big as that desk, or smaller or bigger, it would not be necessary to send an engineer to decide whether that road was properly maintained. If it were found that an embankment was washed away in one place and not replaced, it would readily be known that that road was not properly maintained. So it seems to me that it is not going to be a very difficult matter to decide whether a State is properly maintaining a road, for everybody on both sides of the proposition would know whether or not the State was maintaining the road. If the State had the machinery to maintain its roads it would maintain them; there is not any doubt about that; and the real place where this amendment would be applicable, Senators, would be in case some State had no such machinery and made no attempt to maintain its roads, and when that is evident, then we ought to stop paying out the public money for the construction of roads in that State. It seems to me that it would be only fair that we should do that, and that as a practical defense of the Treasury of the United States we ought to do that.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. The bill provides that the word "maintenance" shall be construed as requiring the road to be kept in as good condition as when it was originally constructed. Does the Senator think that is a possible thing to do?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think so. I have not examined into that question, and of course I do not claim to be a road expert, so that I may be mistaken about it; but however that may be, my amendment does not change that definition. If it is an impossibility to do that, then this bill, if it is strictly enforced, means that there will be only one payment, unless the distribution of the next payment comes before the six months' notice expires, as I have described a few moments ago.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from California?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. And it means that upon the slightest excuse the Secretary of Agriculture can prevent any State from getting an additional appropriation, because the slightest deviation from that requirement of keeping the road in absolutely perfect condition would furnish a reason for refusing the State a share in any more money paid for this purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, the Senator assumes by that question that the road is perfect when it is built. I do not suppose there will ever be one built that is perfect. I presume, however, that these men will be reasonable about it; and, so far as my amendment is concerned, the question of the Senator from California has nothing to do with it. It would be just the same one way as the other, except that, if it is impossible to comply with that definition, then, with the provision for the six months' notice left in the bill, we will only throw away so much more money than we would if we exclude a State that is not properly maintaining its roads, as I undertake to provide by the amendment I have offered.

I do not believe there is going to be any difficulty between the Federal authority and the State authorities. I know that there is a possibility of such difficulty, and I do not see how we can frame a law that will entirely avoid that possibility. I do not believe we pass any laws that do not contain such possibilities. As to every law that we pass, and every one that we will pass in the future, if some one in carrying out its provisions fails to do his duty, if a dishonest official has charge of the construction, or a dishonest official has charge of the maintenance of a public building or a public work, of course things will go wrong, and we may expect imperfections. We can not reach perfection; but I take it that these men, imbued with an honest and patriotic desire to carry out the provisions of the bill according to their spirit and intent, will have no difficulty whatever in doing so. I can not conceive how the State engineers and the Government engineers are going to disagree as to whether or not a road is being maintained.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he has even a suspicion that the Secretary of Agriculture, under the provisions of this bill, would at any time make a second or a third or any other allotment or appropriation to any road where there was a contention or dispute going on between the Secretary of Agriculture and the road authorities as to its proper maintenance?

Mr. NORRIS. Probably not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then that is the whole question.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and if that be true, then the bill as originally drawn will compel him to do that very thing if the six months' notice has not expired. It may be admitted by the State—you can put it that strongly—that it is not complying with the law, and still the Secretary is compelled to give that State its proportionate share of the distribution, unless the six months' notice has expired.

Mr. President, I do not care to take the time of the Senate further in the debate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am greatly interested in the proposed legislation. I think it is going to be far-reaching in its good effects. I think the enactment of a law of this character at this time is going to give an impetus and encouragement to road building, which we all concede to be a matter of very vital importance to that class of our population who live in the rural sections of this country. It not only means saving in the wear and tear of the vehicles and economizing of time, lessening cost of transporting the products of the farm to the market, but there is an ethical side to the question which has heretofore been overlooked. Good roads mean good schools; better schools mean widening the range of the mental vision, developing to higher and nobler manhood and womanhood the boys and girls of the country. It facilitates social intercourse; social intercourse always begets more generous and sympathetic interests in each other, and as a natural consequence promotes the spirit of cooperation and mutual help. That country is strong and great whose rural population is prosperous and contented.

Daniel Webster once said:

> When the tillage begins, other arts follow. The farmers, therefore, are the founders of human civilization.

And he voiced the distilled wisdom of all the generations of observant statesmen.

Lord Chatham observed that—

> Trade increases wealth and glory of a country, but its real strength and stamina are to be looked for among the cultivators of the land.

I know of no greater service this Government could render itself than to offer encouragement and help in building good post roads throughout the rural districts of America.

Of course the amount appropriated by the General Government is comparatively small, and it should be comparatively small. The States should bear the larger part of the expense. In Mississippi the good-roads movement has progressed very rapidly. Within the last few years the counties of the State have invested more than $10,000,000 in this direction, and the good work is hardly begun. I stated on the floor of the Senate a day or two ago that the county in which I live, to 1904, in the great Yazoo-Mississippi Delta, had recently issued bonds to the amount of half a million dollars. I was inaccurate in that statement. I should have said $600,000. This, together with what has already been expended, aggregates more than $1,000,000 invested in that county alone in the last half decade in road building.

I do not share the apprehension of Senators that the States are going to be careless and negligent in the maintenance of the public highways. It is an unreasonable, unnatural, unjustifiable apprehension to entertain, it seems to me. The amount the General Government will have invested will be only a tithe of the total investment, and I think the Congress can safely rely upon the people of the States to protect their own interests and not permit their property to go to wreck by neglect just simply because the General Government has contributed a few dollars toward building the roads. But really I have no objection to an amendment similar to the one proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. I do not object to any reasonable requirement on the part of the General Government of the State to maintain the roads. I want them maintained, and if this stipulation by the General Government in the law shall encourage the States in maintaining their roads, no harm at all will come of it. I do feel, however, and that which I most desire to impress upon my colleagues is that the Democratic Party has promised such legislation as is embodied in this bill; the American people are expecting such legislation, and this Congress will fall far short of its duty if it adjourns without enacting this bill or some similar measure.

Senators if they will may vote to spend millions of dollars for preparation for wars which, in my judgment, will never come, but that fact will not excuse them for a failure to pass this bill. The truth is the larger the appropriation for so-called "preparedness" the greater the necessity for legislation of this character, for the reason that the farmer must be helped. He needs assistance to enable him to bear the increased burden of taxation which preparation for war will impose upon him, for after all the entire burden at last rests upon the aching stoop of the man who cultivates the soil. A great deal has been said on the floor of the Senate since this bill was up for discussion about certain States of the Republic being compelled against their interests to contribute an undue proportion of the amount that is going to be invested in public roads should this bill become law.

The able and eloquent junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] a few afternoons ago had a good deal to say about the large amount—the disproportionate amount—that New York would be called upon to contribute to this fund. With all due respect to the able Senator, New York will not contribute any more proportionately to her wealth than any other State of this Republic. If New York is rich, if her people are fortunate, if they have amassed great wealth, which they have, somebody outside of New York has contributed to that wealth. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, there is not a rood of land in the United States that does not pay tribute to New York. The money barons of New York have forced the business of the Republic to pay heavy tribute to their princely fortunes. A veritable Pactolian stream has been running at full tide in that direction for three-quarters of a century and emptying into that great commercial reservoir the gold coined of the sweat and toil of the millions of American laborers, and the stream continues to run. It seems to me that it is hardly the graceful thing for the representative in this Chamber of that great State, so extraordinarily favored, to object to returning in the way which this bill provides a small part of its enormous profits. No; New York is not called upon by this bill to contribute any more, I repeat, than any other State in this Union in proportion to its wealth; and the total amount which New York will contribute, while large, is no reason why this bill should not be passed. If the building of good roads will benefit the American people, it will be good for New York. If it is good for the American people, it is good for Mississippi. If it contributes to the well-being of the agricultural sections of America, the entire country and the men and women of every other vocation will be benefited by the disbursements under this bill, because we all realize that as the agriculturists prosper all the other business interests of the country prosper. Agriculture is the source of all wealth in this Republic, and whatever adds to the happiness, to the comfort, to the productive capacity of the land of the farmer will benefit the entire population of America.

I hope the bill may not be amended so as to impair its usefulness; but, as I said a moment ago, I have no objection to any reasonable condition upon the appropriation or any requirement by the General Government that the States shall carry out the terms and purposes of the bill.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I can not clearly understand why the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] objects so strenuously to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. It seems to me that it is of the most extreme importance. If we are going to adopt this kind of legislation, the utmost safeguards should be set up in order to compel the maintenance of the roads that are constructed under this proposed legislation. It seems to me that the provision in this bill whereby a State is allowed to let its roads run down before further contributions of the Government can be stopped is lamentably weak; and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska is intended to make it certain that the State will provide from the very outset for the maintenance in good order and repair of all the roads, under the fear that the moment it ceases to do so further contributions on the part of the Government will be withheld.

Suppose the provision is left in the bill allowing this six months' notice—six months' notice, remember, after the roads have run down, and after the Secretary of Agriculture ascertains that they have run down and are not being properly maintained—in all probability the community will suffer for a year or two years from bad roads before such notice is given.

Mr. President, I am opposed to this legislation altogether, and I propose before the discussion is finished to state my reasons at somewhat greater length than I can do now; but if the legislation is to be had, and if you are determined to pass this revolutionary measure, by all means let us set up the safeguards that are necessary to prevent the waste of the money which the Government is going to place in the hands of the several States.

I hope the Senator from Alabama, who is in charge of the bill, upon full consideration will see his way clear to accept this amendment; and if he does, it will at least make the bill more palatable to us representatives of States that will, as we think, be penalized by the legislation.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Beginning on line 25, page 12, it is proposed to strike out "if within six months after he has given notice in writing to the State highway department such roads be not properly maintained by the State, or any subdivision thereof" and to insert:

But upon satisfactory evidence that such failure of maintenance no longer exists, he may resume the contributions to which the State would be entitled under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HUGHES. I take it, then, that the objection that is being made is to that part of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska which seeks to strike out; not the language that he seeks to insert.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so; yes. That is my understanding of the objection.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I feel myself constrained to agree with the Senator from Nebraska in this matter. It is an attempt on his part to take the precautions that a reasonable man would take if this were a personal project of his own, and he were dealing with his own money. I doubt if the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] would object to a clause of this kind in a construction contract which he was making.

It is quite possible that without this amendment the alleged purpose of the legislation will be defeated. It is assumed in this bill that we are attempting to encourage the States in road building. It seems to me that the prime object of the bill, however, is to allow politically corpulent gentlemen to waddle back to Washington; that it is for building good roads to the Capital rather than for building good roads into the interior of the country.

I have no political ideas that would prevent me from voting for a good-roads bill if the Treasury of the United States were in a position to permit us to indulge in a pastime of this kind; but it seems to me that when we are, or ought to be, at our wits' end looking for new sources of revenue, and when we have shown to the country that we will not tax anything that can vote, it is a poor time to be looking for new ways of spending money.

I sincerely hope that this attempt on the part of the Senator from Nebraska to safeguard this measure in some degree will prevail.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Jersey a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HUGHES. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is the Senator in favor of the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. No; I am not in favor of this bill. I tried to make it plain. I expect to vote against this bill because I do not think we have the money to spend; and I do not think the Senator from Mississippi, any more than the Senator from New Jersey, has a right to vote to spend money that we can not afford.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I want to say that I think the money to be expended under the provisions of this bill will be very much more beneficial to the American people than the money that is going to be spent to build battleships that are not needed, and organize and equip armies which will be a charge upon the taxpayers for all the years to come, as well as a malign influence upon republican institutions. I do not think this is the time to economize when you are going to benefit the class of people that this bill is intended to benefit. Taking them as a class, the American farmers enjoy fewer privileges, gets less help from the General Government than any other class of our population. And to their credit let it be said they have never demanded any special privileges and are not doing it to-day. Heretofore the men of America who till the soil have been willing to contribute to the material wealth of the country, to feed and clothe the world by their labor, maintain the Nation's commerce in time of peace, and in time of war defend the Nation's flag. The labor upon the farm is not only the source of the greater part of the material wealth, but the men who live close to the soil by reason of their peculiar environments furnish the patriotism which shall save this Republic, if indeed it shall be saved, from the corroding and debauching influence of sordid materialism which is eating out the hearts of some of our people in the congested centers. I protest with all the fervor of my soul against any proposition that will limit the building of public highways because of the enormous outlay which this Congress is to make to buy unnecessary implements of war.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not know whether it is the intention of the Senator from New Hampshire to go on with the rural-credits bill at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HOLLIS. At 2 o'clock I shall ask the Senate to proceed with that bill.

Mr. LODGE. I have something I want to say about this amendment, but I would have only a minute in which to say it. I think there is a great misconception as to the nature of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Massachusetts will indulge the Chair, the Chair will state that it is so near the hour of 2 o'clock, unless objection is urged, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. LODGE. I am much obliged to the Chair. I would prefer to go on later.

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not think we need to do that. I ask that the rural-credits bill be now laid before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator does not have to make the request. It comes up automatically.

Mr. HOLLIS. If anyone cares to renew the discussion on the good-roads bill, of course that is his right.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to go on now.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then I ask that the rural-credits bill be laid before the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to make a short statement in explanation to the Senator from New Hampshire. It is true the calendar shows that the good-roads bill is the unfinished business, but an agreement was reached that the bill was to be taken up in the beginning and we were to have three days, and if we failed to dispose of the bill at the end of that time I would yield to the rural-credits bill. As far as I am concerned I will keep that agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asks the Senator from Alabama whether there was a unanimous-consent agreement to that effect.

Mr. LODGE. No; there was no unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There was no unanimous-consent agreement that the good-roads bill should be taken up. I asked that it be taken up, with an agreement with the Senator from New Hampshire and others interested in the rural-credits bill, and I might add, with the steering committee, that if within three days we were unable to pass the bill we would let it be laid aside temporarily and take up the rural-credits bill, and I am standing by that agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2986.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I beg to call the attention of the Chair to the fact——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me? It being 2 o'clock I ask now that the good-roads bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled that Senate bill 2986 automatically comes before the Senate at 2 o'clock. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The calendar shows that the good-roads bill is the unfinished business of the Senate. We have never displaced it as the unfinished business with anything else. We have temporarily laid aside the unfinished business to take up the rural-credits bill. I beg that the Chair consult the RECORD of the Senate on that subject before the Chair commits himself to the proposition that the rural-credits bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state it.

Mr. LODGE. I was under the same impression as the Chair. I supposed that the unfinished business was the rural-credits bill. It was my supposition that it came up automatically at 2 o'clock. I find by looking at the calendar that the unfinished business is the good-roads bill. Therefore we can only take up the rural-credits bill by unanimous consent or on motion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is what I was urging.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to say that I think we should not have these shifting, interlacing, kaleidoscopic bills that are running in and out one behind the other, first as unfinished business and then as something else. If we are going to take up the rural-credits bill it must be taken up on motion and be made the unfinished business.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is misinformed. It is true the calendar states that the good-roads bill is the unfinished business but the calendar does not settle it. It is the RECORD that settles it. Yesterday——

Mr. LODGE. If I am mistaken about it, it is because I supposed, of course, that the calendar is accurate.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yesterday when the unfinished business, the good-roads bill, was laid before the Senate I moved that it be laid aside, not temporarily but that it be laid aside.

Mr. LODGE. Then the rural-credits bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. HOLLIS. I then moved that the rural-credits bill be laid before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will state his point of order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] asked unanimous consent to lay aside the good-roads bill. That is the question that ought to be before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the question before the Senate is the point of order the Senator from Georgia raised, as to whether Senate bill 2986 is properly laid before the Senate. The Chair was listening to the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire upon the point of order now suggested by the Senator from Mississippi. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. HOLLIS. The good-roads bill having been displaced by the action of the Senate in favor of the rural-credits bill, yesterday afternoon at the end of the consideration of the rural-credits bill, I moved that the rural-credits bill be temporarily laid aside. Thereupon it became the unfinished business no matter what the calendar says. I do not think there is any need to discuss it. I think the majority of the Senate will vote to proceed with the rural-credits bill if necessary.

Mr. LODGE. Of course the Senator from New Hampshire can move to take it up, but if it is the unfinished business the calendar is wrong.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think the situation is as I stated it.

Mr. LODGE. The rural-credits bill comes up at 2 o'clock automatically, as I said. There can be no question of that.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator from Alabama and I have an understanding.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question of the Senator from New Hampshire. Was it before or after 2 o'clock yesterday when the Senator from New Hampshire moved to proceed to the consideration of the rural-credits bill?

Mr. HOLLIS. It was at 2 o'clock. The unfinished business was then laid aside and the rural-credits bill was taken up.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I rise at this time because I want to say something that I think will be of interest to the Senator from New Hampshire. The other day we took up the good-roads bill, and we had up this very amendment that is pending now, and we debated it. The Senator from Alabama said about what he said to-day, and I said then about what I said, and some others said about the same thing, and we were about ready to vote on it when we adjourned. We have again had the amendment up, and we have debated it; and if we lay it aside, perhaps to-morrow we shall take it up and have the same debate over again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels that he is not being advised as to the point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. If that is not giving the Chair the information he wants on the point of order, I will subside.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will state it.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask first if the Chair has laid the rural-credits bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has done so, but the point of order was raised that the Chair erroneously laid the rural-credits bill before the Senate. The Chair is now prepared to rule upon the point of order. The Chair finds that he was in error in the conclusion he arrived at that the rural-credits bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, anxious as I am to proceed with the good-roads bill, we have to keep our word and our agreement about it. I hope the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the rural-credits bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair finds, however, upon an examination of the RECORD that he was in error about the matter. It appears quite clearly from the RECORD that when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived on yesterday the Senate, having theretofore taken up for consideration the rural-credits bill, the Senate temporarily laid aside the then unfinished business, being the good-roads bill, and the further consideration of the rural-credits bill was proceeded with in that situation. Accordingly the good-roads bill has preserved its character as the unfinished business before the Senate, and the Chair has erroneously laid before the Senate Senate bill 2986, and the order laying it before the Senate is now revoked.

Mr. HOLLIS. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that it is desirable to vote on his amendment. I therefore state that I now intend to move that the rural-credits bill be taken up by the Senate for consideration and I will then ask that it be temporarily laid aside until 3 o'clock, hoping that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska may be voted upon before that time. If not voted upon by 3 o'clock I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the rural-credits bill. With that explanation, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2986.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask unanimous consent that the rural-credits bill be temporarily laid aside until 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. Yes, Mr. President. I desire to speak on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, and I much prefer not to go on now. I did not intend to proceed at this time. I supposed the rural-credits bill was coming up and I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask that Senate bill 2986 be read for action on the committee amendments, unless some one is prepared to speak upon the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to finish what I desired to say awhile ago when I found I had enlightened the Chair sufficiently on the point of order that was bothering his mind and desisted at his suggestion. I rise now to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that we are wasting time in jumping from one bill to the other. I am a friend of both bills; I should like to join with either one of the Senators for any reasonable expedition; but it must be apparent that we shall never make progress if we are going to consider one of the bills until 2 o'clock and then the other one the balance of the day. What has happened illustrates it. We will run on until 2 o'clock, and the next day when we get up the bill at the same hour we will consider the same ground and have practically the same debate until 2 o'clock, and we will make no progress.

I have nothing to say about the legislative program. It seems that the caucus or some other power has appointed a steering committee on the other side, and it decided to go on in this way. I only want to call attention to the fact that you would only be killing time by doing it. Why not take up one of these bills and finish it? We would have had this amendment voted on in less than 10 minutes the other day if we had not stopped its consideration, and now we will have this thing repeated every day and perhaps this evening. We will get to some amendment in the rural credits bill, and it will be thoroughly debated and we will be about ready to vote on it. Then we will stop and adjourn, and the next day, instead of going back to that, we will take up the good-roads bill and debate over some amendment that we had the day before and forget all about the rural-credits amendment that was debated at one time, and when we get back to that bill again debate that amendment over again.

I do not see why it is not perfectly apparent that we are losing time in this kind of an arrangement. I understand it is the intention of the majority to have both these bills voted on finally. If that is going to be the program, it is very immaterial which one we vote on first, but we will always lose time if we consider one for an hour or two and then consider the other for an hour or two and then go back again to the first one. You will find that this amendment which we debated the second time to-day on the good-roads bill will be debated the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of Senate bill 2986 for amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, on page 2, line 8, under the heading "Federal farm-loan board," to strike out section 3, in the following words:

SEC. 3. That there shall be established at the seat of government a Federal farm-loan board, which shall be charged with the execution of this act and of all acts amendatory thereof.

The Federal farm-loan board shall consist of five members, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than three of said members shall be appointed from one political party. They shall be citizens of the United States and shall devote their entire time to the business of the Federal farm-loan board and shall each receive an annual salary of $12,000, payable monthly, together with actual necessary traveling expenses.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 3. That there shall be established at the seat of government in the Department of the Treasury a bureau charged with the execution of this act and of all acts amendatory thereof, to be known as the Federal farm-loan bureau, under the general supervision of a Federal farm-loan board.

Said Federal farm-loan board shall consist of five members, including the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be a member ex officio, and four members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the four members to be appointed by the President, not more than two shall be appointed from one political party, and all four of said members shall be citizens of the United States and shall devote their entire time to the business of the Federal farm-loan board; they shall receive an annual salary of $10,000, payable monthly, together with actual necessary traveling expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Are the amendments to be passed upon now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands. The bill is being read for amendment.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the amendment be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had already announced that the amendment was adopted in the absence of objection.

Mr. JONES. I was listening, and I did not hear the Chair state to the Senate that it would be agreed to without objection. I did not know just how the bill was being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Since there is objection, the Chair will regard the vote as reconsidered.

Mr. JONES. I desire to ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, this is a very important bill, and the reading of the bill for action on the committee amendments is an important proceeding. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Lippitt	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. JONES. I asked that the amendment known as section 3 might be passed over. I am now going to withdraw that request. I simply want, however, to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the amendment provides for the establishment of a bureau and for the purpose of supervising that bureau a Federal farm-loan board consisting of five persons, who are to be paid a salary of $10,000 apiece. I have looked through the bill hurriedly and I do not find anything in it that requires the exercise of any particular judicial discretion on the part of this board. I can see no reason myself why one man as chief of this bureau can not do whatever is desired to be done under the bill. It seems to me that to have a board of five individuals at a salary of $10,000 a year is useless. It is a very great expense and it will have to be borne by somebody—by the Government or by the people who take advantage of this act. It appears to me that it is wholly unnecessary. I should like to see the amendment rejected and provide for a chief of bureau, and pay him whatever salary seems wise. Let us have a chief of a bureau and then whatever bureau force is necessary, and let that bureau carry out the provisions of the act without forming such an expensive board.

I will therefore move to amend the amendment of the committee in order to get the matter clearly before the Senate. It is rather hard to do it the way the section is framed, but I move to strike out the word "five" in line 3 and insert "one," and if that should be adopted we can change it so as to make that officer the chief of the bureau.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the question raised by the Senator from Washington is an eminently fair one. If he will look on page 50 of the bill, section 20, where the powers of the Federal farm-loan board are defined, he will see that there is a great deal of supervisory work to be done, many judgments to be made that will affect all parts of the country, judgments that ought not to rest in the discretion of any one man.

This farm-loan system is for the benefit of the farmers, and it should be considered as somewhat commensurate with the dignity and standing and power of the Federal Reserve Board. There are seven members of that board, and there are none too many. This board will have to deal with interest rates, with the question of issuing charters to land banks, and permitting land banks to open branches. It has to establish a land-bank system and to review and alter interest rates, to give authority to issue farm-loan bonds that will undoubtedly be issued in billions, to make rules and regulations respecting loans and borrowing, and about land titles and recording, to supervise the examination of the various banks, to prescribe the forms for application and report on titles and the forms of the bonds, to look after the surety bonds by the various people who are employed in the system, to look after the payment of coupons and when one bank has to pay for another.

Although the board has been considered by four committees, in which I have taken part, this is the first suggestion that has been made that one man ought to be given the power to perform these judicial functions. On the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] the board was cut down from five members at $12,000 each to four members at $10,000 each, with the Secretary of the Treasury added to make the fifth. The Senate committee thus saved the Government $20,000 in that way.

I am afraid it would cripple the system and be considered by the farmers as a slight on them if it were cut down as the Senator from Washington suggests, and I shall be obliged to resist his motion to amend.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I notice on page 50 the bill provides the powers of the board, and much of it is in regard to the organization of banks. Why could not the 12 reserve banks that now exist do this work, instead of having it done by new farm-loan banks?

Mr. HOLLIS. Because the Government does not own the Federal reserve banks. The Federal reserve banks are owned by the national banks. They are the only stockholders in them. The national banks have their own system and have their own assets, and they have contributed the stock to the Federal reserve banks. They are for an entirely different purpose, and it would mix matters to impose upon them duties of this sort.

Mr. CURTIS. Why would it be necessary to mix the funds? Could they not be separately kept? These officers are paid by the General Government.

Mr. HOLLIS. If it appears to the Senate that we should load the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve system with the farm-loan business of the country, I, of course, will have to yield, but this also is the first time I have heard a suggestion of that kind.

Mr. CURTIS. Again the other duties to be performed by this board, it seems to me, could be performed or provided for by rules and regulations of the head of the department or the bureau, as suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. HOLLIS. It might be done in 50 other ways. The committee preferred this method, and all committees that have dealt with the bill have subscribed to it.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he has made any estimate as to what the putting in operation of this plan will cost and then what the annual cost will likely be thereafter?

Mr. HOLLIS. The bill provides for an organization expense of $100,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator have any idea that $100,000 will come anywhere near paying the expenses of the organization?

Mr. HOLLIS. I have no doubt it will.

Mr. CURTIS. Does not the Senator know that the organization of 12 reserve banks cost over $450,000?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; I do not know that, but that would not be the slightest indication as to how much this would cost.

Mr. CURTIS. Are you not in this bill providing for many more agents, examiners, and lawyers than were provided for in the reserve bank system?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly; because all the branches, the real banking element of the Federal reserve system, were in existence and all we did was to superimpose the structure of the Federal Reserve Board and 12 banks on it. This is of a vastly different nature. No one can tell how much it will take. It will depend on how many banks are organized, on how many farmers want loans. No one can estimate that. I believe that $100,000 will fully cover the organization expenses.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, of course I would not want to put any slight upon the farmers, but I do not believe that the farmers of the country would feel that they were slighted if we should find it unnecessary to create three or four positions here in Washington City paying a salary of $10,000 each. I do not believe any of the taxpayers of the country would rise in rebellion against any such act as that. Of course, there is not very much indication of attempting to prevent the establishment of any offices of that sort in the city of Washington; but I recognize that the committee has given this matter very long and careful consideration, and I have a great deal of confidence in their judgment as to what is proper to do, if we are to establish any system of this kind. I had myself thought that we ought to be able to work this out in connection with the Federal Reserve Board, as was suggested by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. It seems to me that the machinery there ought to be of such a character, and that it is of such a charater, that it could take whatever supervisory charge as may be necessary to be exercised over this by the Federal Government; but the committee has not deemed it wise to do that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Does not the Senator from Washington think that, if we should put this under the control of the Federal Reserve Board, it would ultimately be dominated by the spirit of—well, that which has more concern with the commercial interests of the country, the banking interests of the country, rather than the farming interests of the country?

Mr. JONES. That is possible.

Mr. BORAH. I think that ultimately the farm credits would be drawn to and controlled by the same forces and influences which would tend to control the commercial credits of the country; and that it would be utterly useless to have a farm-credit system at all if it were dominated and controlled by the same interests. I think the salaries too high and the officers too many, but I would not want to see the system linked up with commerce and credits.

Mr. JONES. Certainly, Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. JONES. I shall yield to the Senator in just a moment. Certainly we would not want anything of that sort. What I had more in mind was this: There is certain administrative machinery that we are going to have here in Washington City to supervise this system, which is going to be worked out partly in the country districts through these organizations formed by the farmers. It occurred to me that, so far as the supervisory system here in Washington City is concerned, we ought to be able to use some of the machinery which we now have here to do that. I may be mistaken about it, but I would not want, of course, the system referred to by the Senator from Idaho to get control. I doubt if that would occur if we confined the supervision here in Washington City, or provided for it through the Federal Reserve Board, without connecting it with the various bank organizations throughout the country. I did not have that in mind at all.

I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I merely rose to confirm the suggestion which was made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that in reality the Federal Reserve Board is dealing with a line of credits which were intended to be kept constantly available, and where the funds were only employed for a very short time, not exceeding 90 days, except in extraordinary cases—usually such securities being handled only for 30 days—from 10 to 20 and 30 days. This volume of commercial bills coming in, their whole mind is set upon the idea of keeping their resources constantly liquid, constantly available, and they have just the contrary point of view from the character of loans which are to be made by the farm-loan board, which contemplates a long period of time and an amortization plan, and is exactly the reverse of the quick liquid assets of the Federal Reserve Board. So their point of view is quite different, and I think it would be very difficult to charge one set of men with the work of keeping a large volume of resources constantly liquid and at the same time pursuing a policy with regard to another set of resources where exactly the contrary policy is to be pursued. I think it is better to have the human brain that is dealing with a long-term loan separate entirely from the personnel which deals with liquid assets.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, of course if the men at the head of the Federal Reserve Board have to keep their minds in one particular channel, all the time going in one direction, I suppose that will have to be done; that we will have to provide for another system and for a lot of ten or twelve thousand dollar offices. It looks as though when we establish one thing, that is made a sort of precedent or excuse for providing something else, especially if there are any offices connected with it. So here we have provided a Federal board system for a certain purpose and provided a good many officers who must keep their minds going along in the same general direction, and we do not dare to interfere and call them off on something else. Here is another proposition that needs solution. So we must provide for another board here in Washington City, consisting of four or five different persons, and pay them each a salary of $10,000 a year. Possibly we shall find some other line of credits after we enact this law that we have not taken care of, and then we shall have to provide for another board of four or five officers at a salary of $10,000, $12,000, or $15,000 each, and get them to take up that line and keep their minds working along in that direction.

But as to this bureau, I do not know just what it is to do. This bureau is to be supervised by the farm-loan board. As a matter of fact this bureau will do most of the work. If we had one good, level-headed business man at the head of it as chief, and provided him the necessary help, in my judgment, he would work this matter out far better than would four or five different persons working on it, and especially with a Cabinet officer connected with it, appointed for political reasons and for political purposes, who is liable to change from time to time. That is another objection to this board.

I do not believe that any Cabinet officer ought to have any position upon the board of any kind or character. If we are going to provide for a board of five men, let us provide for a board of five men who will keep their positions as provided in this bill, without the changes that come in a Cabinet officer's life, and make the board just as nearly free from political influences as we possibly can. I do not care what administration is in power, the Secretary of the Treasury ought not to be a member of the board. While I feel very much as though I would be compelled to defer largely to the judgment of the chairman of the committee, who has given this matter much more thought and consideration than have I, I do regret that it seems to be necessary to establish a board like this with these high-salaried positions, and especially with a Cabinet officer made a member of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the Senate is not going to agree to the provision to pay the members of the Federal farm-loan board $10,000 per annum. I have been thinking, since the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has been made, of the amounts that have been paid to some of the officials in other departments of the Government. As I remember, the Comptroller of the Treasury is paid $6,000 per annum; the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, $5,000 each; the Director of the Mint, $5,000; the Assistant Secretary of War, $5,000; the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, $5,000; the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $5,000; the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $5,000; the Commissioner of Education, $5,000; the Assistant Postmasters General, $5,000 each; the Director of the Census, $6,000; United States circuit judges, $7,000 each; and here we are providing in this bill to pay members of this board $10,000 per annum.

I will say to the Senate now that if the bill is passed in this form, providing salaries for members of this board at $10,000 each, it will be pointed to as a precedent by nearly every man holding any of the important positions in the Government to which I have referred as being unjust to him; and I do not see, if we are going to give these men, whoever they may be, a salary of $10,000 a year, that it would be an injustice to the men who are serving in the positions which I have indicated.

Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has not offered an amendment reducing the salaries of the members of the board, but, from what he said, I judge that after the question of the number of members of the board has been determined he intends to offer an amendment to decrease the salaries to be paid them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise the Senator from Utah that the Senator from Washington has offered an amendment to strike out the word "five" at the end of line 3, on page 3.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the Senator has offered such an amendment, but I simply stated, from what the Senator from Washington had said, that he would no doubt follow that amendment by offering another amendment reducing the amount of compensation to be paid annually to each member of the board.

Mr. President, I am going to ask the Senator in charge of the bill to allow the amendment to go over, for the reason that I have a meeting which I must attend at 3 o'clock, at which I promised to be present, and I desire to say a little more upon the amendment. I ask the Senator, therefore, to let the amendment go over to-day without being acted upon.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator just this one question? As I recall, after considerable discussion we made the salaries of the members of the Federal Reserve Board $12,000 per annum. I think I am correcct as to that. The amount was cut to $10,000 in the committee. I realize that $10,000 is a pretty good salary, but I also realize that this is a position of very great responsibility, and that we are all interested in having the system made a success, if it is possible to make it a success. I further recognize the fact that success does not depend upon the amount of salary offered; but at the same time there is some reason why there should be substantially the same salary paid to the members of this board that is paid to the members of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think there is a great difference between the two positions. One reason why, it seems to me, that we should not be so extravagant at this particular juncture is that it will take some time after this bill becomes a law before it can accomplish much—I mean in the volume of business. I am satisfied that we can get just as good men as members of the board at $7,500 per annum as we can at $10,000. Take the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Hon. Cato Sells. There is no Senator here who does not know that he can make more than $5,000 a year in the practice of his profession. He did not accept the honorable position he holds for the amount of money there is in it, but from a sense of public duty; nor will the men who are appointed to the farm-loan board accept the position because of the amount of compensation provided, even though it be $10,000. I say this, of course, believing that the President of the United States, no matter who he may be, whether the present President or a future President, in appointing members of the board will appoint men in whom he has absolute confidence, men whose past experience has been such that he can trust them to fill such a responsible position.

Mr. President, I repeat my request that the Senator having the bill in charge allow the amendment to go over for the present.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I am entirely willing that this amendment be passed over. We will at some future time take up those that are passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be temporarily passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, on page 3, line 15, after the word "one," to strike out "member of said board" and insert "of the members to be appointed by the President"; in line 17, before the words "to serve," to strike out "the President" and insert "him"; in line 18, before the word "one," to insert "and"; in the same line, after the word "years," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "and one for 10 years"; in line 20, before the word "years," to strike out "10" and insert "8"; and in line 22, after the words "as the," to strike out "Farm Loan Commissioner" and insert "farm-loan commissioner"; so as to make the clause read:

One of the members to be appointed by the President shall be designated by him to serve for two years, one for four years, one for six years, and one for eight years, and thereafter each member so appointed shall serve for a term of eight years, unless sooner removed for cause by the President. One of the members shall be designated by the President as the farm-loan commissioner, who shall be the chairman and the active executive officer of said board. Each member of the Federal farm-loan board shall within 15 days after notice of his appointment take and subscribe to the oath of office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 5, after the words "fixed by the," to strike out "chairman of said board" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury," so as to make the clause read:

The first meeting of the Federal farm-loan board shall be held in Washington as soon as may be after the passage of this act, at a date and place to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 11, to insert:

The Federal farm-loan board shall annually make a full report of its operations to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall cause the same to be printed for the information of the Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 23, after the word "supervision," to insert: "It shall by suitable rules and regulations require all offenses and delinquencies under this act to be forthwith reported to it and to the United States district attorney for the district in which any such offense or delinquency shall occur, and shall institute immediate proceedings in the proper court for the prosecution of any person committing an offense under any provision of this act," so as to make the clause read:

The Federal farm-loan board shall from time to time require examinations and reports of condition of all associations and banks established under the provisions of this act, and shall publish consolidated statements of the results thereof. It shall cause to be made appraisals of farm lands as provided by this act, and shall prepare and publish amortization tables which shall be used by associations and banks under its supervision. It shall by suitable rules and regulations require all offenses and delinquencies under this act to be forthwith reported to it and to the United States district attorney for the district in which any such offense or delinquency shall occurr, and shall institute immediate proceedings in the proper court for the prosecution of any person committing an offense under any provision of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 8, to insert:

It shall be the duty of the Federal farm-loan board to prepare from time to time bulletins setting forth the principal features of this act and to distribute the same, particularly to the press, to agricultural journals, and to farmers' organizations; to prepare and distribute in the same manner circulars setting forth the principles and advantages of amortized farm loans and the protection afforded debtors under this act, instructing farmers how to organize and conduct farm-loan associations, and advising investors of the merits and advantages of farm-loan bonds; and to disseminate, in its discretion, information for the further instruction of farmers regarding the methods and principles of cooperative credit and organization. Said farm-loan board is hereby authorized to use a reasonable portion of the organization fund provided in section 36 of this act for the objects specified in this paragraph, and is instructed to lay before the Congress at each session its recommendations for further appropriations to carry out said objects.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Federal land banks," in section 4, page 8, line 24, before the word "directors," to strike out "nine" and insert "five," so as to make the clause read:

Each Federal land bank shall be temporarily managed by five directors appointed by the Federal farm-loan board. Said directors shall be citizens of the United States and residents of the district. They shall each give a surety bond, the premium on which shall be paid from the funds of the bank. They shall receive such compensation as the Federal farm-loan board shall fix. They shall choose from their number, by a majority vote, a president, a vice president, a secretary, and a treasurer. They are further authorized and empowered to employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as they may deem necessary, and to fix their compensation, subject to the approval of the Federal farm-loan board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 15, after the word "hereinafter," to strike out "created" and insert "authorized," and in line 18, before the word "provided," to strike out "herein" and insert "hereinafter," so as to make the clause read:

After the subscriptions to stock in any Federal land bank by national farm loan associations, hereinafter authorized, shall have reached the sum of $100,000, the officers of said land bank shall be elected and appointed as hereinafter provided and shall, upon becoming duly qualified, take over the management of said land bank from the temporary officers appointed and chosen under this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 23, before the word "members," to strike out "nine" and insert "five"; so line 24, before the words "of said," to strike out "Six" and insert "Three"; and, on page 12, line 1, before the word "directors," to strike out "three" and insert "two," so as to make the clause read:

The board of directors of every Federal land bank shall be selected as hereinafter specified and shall consist of five members, each holding office for three years. Three of said directors shall be known as local directors, and shall be chosen by and be representative of national farm loan associations; and the remaining two directors shall be known as district directors, and shall be appointed by the Federal farm-loan board and represent the public interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 12, before the word "local," to strike out "six" and insert "three," so as to make the clause read:

Farm-loan associations limited and farm-loan associations unlimited shall, respectively, have representation on the board of directors in proportion to the amount of unpaid principal on loans made to their members by the land bank and actually outstanding three months before each election. If the amount unpaid on the principal of loans outstanding in either division shall amount to less than $1,000,000, all associations in the district shall vote together for all three local directors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 16, before the word "local," to strike out "six" and insert "three," and in line 25, before the word "persons," to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten," so as to make the clause read:

Two months before each election the farm-loan commissioner shall determine the proportional representation of each division as herein prescribed, and shall allot to each division its respective proportion of the three local directors. He shall forthwith notify each farm-loan association in writing that such election is to be held, giving the number of directors to be elected by each division, and requesting each association to nominate one candidate for each director to be voted for in its division. Within 10 days of the receipt of such notice each association shall forward its nomination to said farm-loan commissioner. Said commissioner shall prepare a list of candidates for local directors, the 10 persons receiving the highest number of votes in each division from farm-loan associations making such nominations to be placed on the list for such division. One month before said election said farm-loan commissioner shall mail to each association the list for its division. The directors of each association shall cast the vote of said association for as many candidates on said list as there are vacancies to be filled, and shall forward said vote to the farm-loan commissioner within 10 days after said list of candidates is received by them. The candidates receiving the highest number of votes from associations making choice in each division shall be elected respectively as local directors. In case of a tie the farm-loan commissioner shall determine the choice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 15, before the word "years," to strike out "three" and insert "two"; in line 18, before the word "serve," to strike out "It shall designate one of said directors to serve for a term of two years and one to" and insert "The other district director shall"; and in line 20, before the word "years," to strike out "three" and insert "two," so as to make the clause read:

The Federal farm-loan board shall designate one of the district directors to serve for two years and to act as chairman of the board of directors. The other district director shall serve for a term of one year. After the first appointments each director shall be appointed for a term of two years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 23, after the word "designate," to strike out "two" and insert "one"; in line 25, after the word "meeting," to strike out "two" and insert "one"; and on page 14, line 1, before the word "whose," to strike out "two" and insert "one," so as to make the clause read:

At the first regular meeting of the board of directors of each Federal land bank it shall be the duty of the local directors to designate one of the local directors whose term of office shall expire in one year from the date of such meeting, one whose term of office shall expire in two years from said date, and one whose term of office shall expire in three years from said date. In making such designations an equitable allotment shall be made between directors chosen in the two divisions in accordance with the proportional representation determined by the farm loan commissioner. Thereafter every director of a Federal land bank chosen as hereinbefore provided shall hold office for a term of three years. Vacancies that may occur in the board of directors shall be filled in the manner provided for the original selection of such directors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Capital stock of Federal land banks," in section 5, page 15, line 10, before the word "each," to strike out "$10" and insert "$5," so as to make the clause read:

The capital stock of each Federal land bank shall be divided into shares of $5 each, and may be subscribed for and held by any individual, firm, or corporation, or by the Government of any State or of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 11, after the word "notice," to strike out "subject to" and insert "with," so as to read:

If within 90 days after the opening of said books any part of the minimum capitalization of $500,000 herein prescribed for Federal land banks shall remain unsubscribed, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe the balance thereof on behalf of the United States, said subscription to be subject to call in whole or in part by the board of directors of said land bank upon 30 days' notice, with the approval of the Federal farm-loan board; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to take out shares corresponding to the unsubscribed balance as called, and to pay for the same out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 22, after the word "held," to insert "therein," so as to read:

After the subscriptions to capital stock, exclusive of Government subscriptions, shall amount to $500,000 in any Federal land bank, said bank shall apply semiannually to the payment and retirement of stock held by the United States, one-quarter of all sums thereafter subscribed to capital stock, until all stock held therein by the United States is retired at par.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read to the bottom of page 18.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if they discussed or considered the advisability of making loans to farmers without requiring them to organize?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; that was very carefully considered.

Mr. CURTIS. Did not the committee think it would be better to let owners of farms borrow money directly, rather than to require them to go into the associations?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; that would be entirely outside of the plan that the committee adopted. In the first place, if the farmer borrows directly from the Federal land bank, we lose the indorsement of the loan association, which strengthens the loan very much, and therefore strengthens the security of the bonds; we lose the individual liability of the other members of the association, and have not as good a security. We do not secure the interest of the borrower in the system, in the first place, to see that none but good loans are made, and to help carry on the local business. We lose the entire cooperative feature of the plan, which we think it is very essential to secure. But we have provided for private joint-stock banks which can do exactly what the Senator suggests—loan directly to the farmer without forming any association. If the farmer does not want to go in on the cooperative side and do part of the work and furnish part of the additional security, then he may have recourse to the private joint-stock bank, where he does not have to do any of that work, and does not have to pay for any of it.

Mr. CURTIS. But he must join or become a stockholder in a bank?

Mr. HOLLIS. Not at all. If he does not care to join the association, then he borrows directly from one of the private banks, and does not become a stockholder or a shareholder in any sense. He is provided for either way he wants to be.

Mr. CURTIS. Does he pay any more interest?

Mr. HOLLIS. That depends. He ought to pay more, because he does not undertake the liability that the others do. My judgment is that he will have to pay more interest. He will have to pay such rates as the joint-stock banks find it necessary to require in order to do business.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Take the case of John Smith, who owns a quarter section of land, and wants to borrow, say, $5,000. Can he pursue one of two plans under this bill?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; he may pursue one of three plans.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator briefly explain what John Smith, who wants to borrow $5,000 on 160 acres of land, can do under this bill?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; very gladly. If he prefers to get his money in the cheapest possible way, and is willing to undertake unlimited individual liability, he will join an association that has that feature. If he does not care to trust his neighbors and go into an unlimited liability association, he may join one where the liability is double, as in the case of a national bank. If he does that—if he joins either association of that sort—he will do it expecting to get a lower rate of interest than he would if he went directly to a private joint-stock bank. In order to get his lower rate of interest he would have to subscribe to stock in the loan association to the extent of 5 per cent of the face of his loan. He will have to assume individual liability, either double or unlimited. Now, if he is not willing to do that, but prefers to borrow from a bank straight and not contribute to the capital and not assume individual liability, he then will go to a private joint-stock land bank and probably will have to pay somewhat more for interest. So the three methods are open to him.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on page 19, line 1, and the Secretary read to line 22, page 22, the last paragraph read being as follows:

Upon receipt of such articles of association, with the accompanying affidavit and cash, the directors of said Federal land bank shall determine whether in their judgment a charter should be granted to such association, and they shall send a representative to investigate the solvency and character of the applicants and the value of their lands. They shall forward such articles of association and the accompanying affidavit to the Federal Farm Loan Board with their recommendation. If said recommendation is unfavorable, the charter shall be refused.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, in case the charter is refused, what becomes of the 5 per cent which is required to be deposited in lines 5, 6, and 7 of the bill on page 22?

Mr. HOLLIS. It would undoubtedly be returned, exactly as if I should send a $10 bill down to the store to buy something and they did not have it; they would send back the $10.

Mr. CURTIS. But, Mr. President, I notice in other parts of the bill that there is a provision requiring the return of the money deposited under similar conditions. I also notice in one part of the bill that there is authority for the board to return it, or to retain certain expenses and then return the balance; and I wondered whether it was an oversight that the committee had not put in a provision there that all the money should be returned in case the charter was refused.

Mr. HOLLIS. No. It might be called an oversight. It might be stated, as a great many other things might be stated in the bill. It did not occur to any of the committee that it was necessary to state that. It will do no harm to state it. It could be very easily done by providing that the charter shall be refused and the cash returned without deduction. I think it should be inserted, probably.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 28 it is provided:

If membership is refused to any applicant under this section, or if the loan applied for is for any reason rejected, the sum deposited by him shall be returned, less such deductions as may be authorized by regulations of the Federal farm-loan board.

Then there is another provision later on in the bill—I can not turn to it just this second—which simply provides for the return of the money, without any authority to withhold any part of it.

Mr. HOLLIS. That was all debated carefully in the committee. In some cases it seemed fair to make charges, and in others it did not, and we governed ourselves accordingly. If the Senator desires to amend, in line 22, by adding "together with the cash forwarded, without deduction," I shall have no objection. I should expect that to follow, whether it is here or not.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the amendment, Mr. President—that after the word "refused," on line 22, page 22, there be inserted "and the 5 per cent deposited as required herein shall be returned without deduction."

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Senator will allow that to be passed for the present, I shall prepare an amendment which will correspond to the other provisions, and offer it later.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on line 23, page 22; and the Secretary read to line 3, on page 24, the last paragraph read being as follows:

National farm loan associations may be organized with limited or with unlimited liability, and each shall be designated as a national farm loan association limited, or a national farm loan association unlimited, as the case may be. Associations with limited liability may be also designated as division A associations; associations with unlimited liability as division B associations.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the farm loan associations have any source of profit except the dividends which they receive from the land banks?

Mr. HOLLIS. They have no source of profit except the dividends they receive from the land banks; but they are required to accumulate reserves, and they will have returns from the investment of the reserves.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the source of profit open to the farm loan associations?

Mr. HOLLIS. I have just stated that the only source of profit is the dividends on the stock which it owns in the land banks; but it is required to accumulate reserves out of those dividends, and the reserves would be invested, so that it would get income out of the invested reserves.

Mr. CURTIS. But, Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. And if there is no profit arising to a given association, then the stockholder in the association has simply deposited his money there without any return?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. CUMMINS. And his deposit amounts to $5 upon each $100 that he borrows?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; and if he is not charged enough for interest on his loans so that there are profits in the system, then he has gotten his loan at cost and must not expect any profits; but if the 1 per cent is too much, so that the expenses are all paid and there is a dividend, then he will get whatever that surplus is, exactly like a member owning a participating life-insurance policy.

Mr. CUMMINS. But this is the point I do not fully understand and about which I should like to have an explanation: The borrower wants to get $10,000. He deposits with the farm-loan association $500 for stock in that association. He gets his $10,000, and finally pays the mortgage. How does he get back his $500?

Mr. HOLLIS. The bill provides that when he pays his loan the amount that he has subscribed for stock shall be paid to him in full.

Mr. CUMMINS. Suppose the association has no money with which to pay it to him?

Mr. HOLLIS. The land bank pays it back to him. It retires it and pays the money to the loan association and the loan association pays it to him.

Mr. CUMMINS. But it is the farm association that has the stock in the land bank?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not the borrower?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator say that under those circumstances the land bank must take up his stock in the farm association?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; the land bank must pay out to the loan association the stock that was issued at the time his loan was made, and the loan association must pay it out to the borrower.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is, the land bank must pay it to the association?

Mr. HOLLIS. The land bank pays it to the association, and the association turns it over to the borrower.

Mr. CUMMINS. But there is nothing in the bill that gives to the borrower the right to the money which is in that instance paid by the land bank to the association.

Mr. HOLLIS. Why, yes. There is just as much in the bill as entitled him to get his money when he has been awarded a loan and has forwarded his papers. In that case he forwards his papers to the loan association and the land bank forwards the money through the association to him. The bill provides that when his loan is paid off the cash for the stock taken in the land bank by the loan association shall be forwarded to the loan association and the loan association shall pay him off.

Mr. CUMMINS. But it does not say that that money must be paid by the land association to the borrower. It is true that it goes into the hands of the association and there may be an obligation upon the part of the association to reimburse the borrower.

Mr. HOLLIS. The bill so provides as specifically as anything can be. It belongs to him.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not found that particular provision.

Mr. HOLLIS. We have not gotten to it yet, but we shall come to it later on.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, lines 21 and 22 provide:

Which shall be paid off at par and retired upon full payment of said loan.

But that does not give him any profit. It simply gives him back his money at par.

Mr. HOLLIS. He has been getting his dividends, if there are any earnings, every six months.

Mr. CUMMINS. But what I am trying to discover is whether there is anything in the bill which makes it obligatory upon the land bank, when it takes the pay of the borrower for the mortgage, to give the borrower credit for the money which he has deposited with the farm association?

Mr. HOLLIS. There is.

Mr. CUMMINS. There may be. I do not say there is nothing of the kind, but I do not see it.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on line 4, page 24.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 6, after the words "value of," to strike out "$10" and insert "$5," so as to read:

SEC. 8. That the shares in national farm loan associations shall be of the par value of $5 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 16, after the word "thereof," to insert "for the purchase of stock at par," so as to read:

Any person desiring to borrow on farm-land mortgage through a farm-loan association shall deposit with the secretary-treasurer thereof for the purchase of stock at par an amount equal to 5 per cent of the face of the desired loan.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, that amendment should be perfected. The word "its" was omitted after "purchase of"; and I will ask unanimous consent to insert the word "its" at that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "purchase of," in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to insert the word "its," so as to read, "for the purchase of its stock at par."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 20, after the word "each," to strike out "$200" and insert "$100," and on line 21, after the word "loan," to strike out "or any fractional part thereof" and insert "which shall be paid off at par and retired upon full payment of said loan," so as to read:

If the loan is granted, the applicant therefor shall thereupon become the owner of one share of capital stock in said loan association for each $100 of the face of his loan, which shall be paid off at par and retired upon full payment of said loan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, is the provision just read by the Secretary the provision which the Senator from New Hampshire had in mind when he answered my question?

Mr. HOLLIS. It is half of it. We will come to the other part a little later. This requires the loan association to pay it off at par when the loan is paid up; and the other provision is that when the loan is paid off the land bank shall pay it out to the loan association. They go together.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 1, after the word "may," to insert "at any time," so as to read:

Said capital stock shall be held by said association as collateral security for the payment of said loan, but said borrower shall be paid any dividends accruing and payable on said capital stock while it is outstanding. Such stock may at any time, in the discretion of the directors and with the permission of the directors of the land bank, be paid off at par and retired.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 9, after the word "each," to strike out "$200" and insert "$100," and in line 10, after the word "loan," to strike out "or any fractional part thereof," so as to read:

After a charter has been granted to a division A association, any natural person who is the owner, or about to become the owner, of farm land qualified under section 12 of this act as the basis of a mortgage loan, and who desires to borrow on a mortgage of such farm land, may become a member of a division A association by a two-thirds vote of the directors upon subscribing for, and paying for in cash, one share of the capital stock of such association for each $100 of the face of his proposed loan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 16, after the word "returned," to strike out "without deduction" and insert "less such deductions as may be authorized by regulations of the Federal farm-loan board," so as to read:

If membership is refused to any applicant under this section, or if the loan applied for is for any reason rejected, the sum deposited by him shall be returned, less such deductions as may be authorized by regulations of the Federal farm-loan board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in division B, subhead "National farm-loan associations unlimited," in section 10, on page 27, line 12, before the word "member," to insert "provisional"; in line 15, after the word "loan," to strike out "or any fractional part thereof"; on page 28, line 2, before the word "member," to insert "regular"; in line 6, after the word "section," to insert "or if the loan applied for is for any reason rejected"; and in line 8, after the word "returned," to strike out "without deduction" and insert "less such deductions as may be authorized by regulations of the Federal farm-loan board," so as to make the clause read:

After a charter has been granted to a division B association, any natural person who is the owner, or about to become the owner, of farm land qualified under section 12 of this act as the basis of a mortgage loan, and who desires to borrow on a mortgage of such farm land, may become a provisional member of a division B association by unanimous vote of the directors upon subscribing for, and paying for in cash, one share of the capital stock of such association for each $100 of the face of his proposed loan. He shall at the same time file with the secretary-treasurer his application for a mortgage loan, giving the particulars required by section 12 of this act. The secretary-treasurer shall thereupon notify each member of such association of the application for membership, giving the name and post-office address of the applicant, and the amount he desires to borrow, describing briefly the land proposed to be mortgaged. Unless at least one-fifth of the members of such association shall file with said secretary-treasurer within 10 days of the mailing of such notice written objection to the application, it shall be granted, and the applicant shall thereupon become a regular member; but his admission to membership shall not entitle him to borrow any sum in excess of the amount to which the appraisal of his property shall entitle him. If membership is refused to any applicant under this section, or if the loan applied for is for any reason rejected, the sum deposited by him shall be returned, less such deductions as may be authorized by regulations of the Federal farm-loan board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Powers of national farm-loan associations," in section 11, page 29, line 3, after the words "multiple of," to strike out "$100" and insert "$25"; in line 9, after the words "provided for in," to strike out "section 23" and insert "section 22"; in line 10, before the words "of this act," to strike out "section 25" and insert "section 24"; and in line 15, after the word "under," to strike out "$100" and insert "$25," so as to make the clause read:

Fourth. Against deposits of current funds, to issue certificates in any amount, bearing interest at not to exceed 4 per cent per annum after six days from date, convertible into farm-loan bonds when presented at the Federal land bank of the district in any multiple of $25. Such deposits, when received, shall be forthwith transmitted to said land bank and be invested by it in the purchase of farm-loan bonds or in first mortgages, as defined by this act. The mortgages thus taken may be hypothecated with the farm-loan registrar of the district against an issuance of farm-loan bonds, as provided for in section 22 and section 24 of this act; but such bonds when received, either by purchase or for issuance, shall not be delivered or issued except in exchange for and upon the presentation for redemption and cancellation of an equal amount of convertible certificates issued by a farm-loan association, any difference under $25 in such exchange being adjusted in cash. When thus redeemed and canceled such certificates shall be returned to the farm-loan association which issued them.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question with regard to the fourth paragraph. Is it the intention that the farm-loan associations shall become savings banks or depositaries for funds other than those that are to be invested in the bonds of the land banks?

Mr. HOLLIS. That was my personal hope. The bill as prepared by the joint congressional committees provided that there should be a savings department which should take savings and invest them in short-term mortgage loans; but the Senate Banking and Currency Committee cut out that section, which is section 18, found on page 42. That cut out the savings department. But this paragraph to which the Senator directs my attention acts as a savings feature of the bill. It permits individuals to make deposits and to take convertible certificates which may be turned into farm-loan bonds when any person owns as much as $25 worth. The Senate committee believed that this was as far as this banking system ought to go in that direction. That is the purpose of it. It is a savings-bank feature, and it is quite limited in scope.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me that it is quite unlimited——

Mr. HOLLIS. It is quite limited.

Mr. CUMMINS. Although I may not grasp the full meaning of it. It says that "such deposits, when received, shall be forthwith transmitted to said land bank, and be invested by it in the purchase of farm-loan bonds or first mortgages as defined by this act." There would seem to be no limit to the amount of deposits that might be taken by association nor any other limit upon the investment save that the land bank must invest the money either in its own bonds or in first mortgages. But that is all that any savings bank does, if it confines itself to real estate securities.

Mr. HOLLIS. I wish to call attention first to the fact that the farm-loan association merely acts as agent for the land bank in taking the deposits and forwarding them. It is the land bank that becomes the savings bank in this connection. The land bank, according to the experience in Europe, will find it necessary at various times to buy in farm-loan bonds, and in order to stabilize their value they may use this money for one of two purposes, either in buying farm-loan bonds issued by that bank or by some other Federal land bank or in buying first-mortgage loans; that is, to loan the money on first mortgages.

There is no limit in the bill. The committee did not think it was desirable. They hope there will be a very large amount of money procured in this way. I am doubtful about it myself; but I hope so, and I see no harm in taking a very large amount of money.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me there ought to be a limit to the amount of interest the farm-loan association is to pay.

Mr. HOLLIS. There is. It is limited to 4 per cent. It is so limited at the bottom of page 28, where it reads "Bearing interest at not to exceed 4 per cent per annum."

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the interest on the certificates.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. But what about the interest on the mortgages in which the money would be invested? They could bear any rate of interest, could they not?

Mr. HOLLIS. The rate of interest is never permitted to exceed 1 per cent more than the amount the last issue of farm-loan bonds carries.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is the Senator sure that that applies to this proceeding or transaction?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; I am very sure of that. I can direct the Senator's attention to the place where it is provided.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me the bill simply authorizes national savings banks in every community to be operated in competition with the ordinary savings banks that are created under the laws of the States.

Mr. HOLLIS. Not at all, because no one can withdraw his money. All he can do is to get a bond with it, and then if he wants to get his money he has to sell that bond. He can not go to any farm-land association and withdraw his money; all he can do is to get scrip convertible into bonds.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would see no great objection to it if the bill limited the investment of the deposits to the farm-loan bonds of that district, but when it gives the land bank the authority to invest the deposits in any mortgages that may be presented to it for negotiation or purchase I fear the Senator is extending the institutions that he is creating much beyond the scope that most of us have had in mind.

Mr. HOLLIS. I would be very much pleased, indeed, if a large amount of money is gathered in this way and invested in farm-loan bonds because we are calling on the public to subscribe to our farm-loan bonds. The success of our system depends on the readiness with which the public will take our farm-loan bonds and the question whether they will take them at a low rate of interest. If we can gather in in this way all over the country or in any part of it a large sum of money that we can loan to farmers on first mortgages or invest in farm-loan bonds which are based upon first mortgages, then a very large part of the problem will be solved. My fear is that we shall not get very much.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire. The bill provides for two classes of national farm-loan associations: First, those where the liability of the member is a limited liability; and, second, those where the liability of the members of the association is unlimited. I should like to ask what is the difference between the rights of these members in the matter of securing loans through the association of the farm-land banks if the Senator will explain it.

Mr. HOLLIS. The mortgages taken by any Federal land bank from associations carrying an unlimited liability are kept altogether. When an issue of farm-loan bonds is to be made the mortgages of one class—that is, limited or unlimited liability—must be kept together. A group of mortgages, $50,000 in value, which carry unlimited liability of the farmer, ought to float bonds bearing a lower rate of interest than a group of mortgages carrying merely double liability. Therefore we hope and expect that the unlimited liability mortgages will be able to float bonds at a lower rate of interest, and that the farmer will get the benefit of the lower rate. It is perfectly clear in my mind if I have succeeded in conveying the thought.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator thinks that would be an inducement to form associations with unlimited liability?

Mr. HOLLIS. I think so, and I hope so very much, because I believe that eventually the way the farmers will get the lowest rate of interest is by assuming unlimited liability. This bill is intended to give that plan a fair trial.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, one more question. The interest on farm-loan mortgages is by the bill limited to the rate that may be charged by a national bank, as I understand it.

Mr. HOLLIS. It is limited to 6 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. The deposits of which I have been speaking may be invested in any mortgages, and, of course, those mortgages need not be represented finally by land-bank bonds; they may be held simply as mortgages. Does the Senator from New Hampshire think it is fair to put such savings banks as are here contemplated in competition with the savings banks established under the laws of the several States and relieve the property or transactions of the national savings bank from taxation? What will become of the savings banks of the States which must pay taxes?

Mr. HOLLIS. If I did not believe that the bill would give the farmer a lower rate than he is now getting I should not think it would be worth while to pass the bill. It is because we feel the farmer is not now getting loans at as low a rate as he is entitled to that we are passing the bill. If it has that result I shall feel that we have achieved our object.

Mr. SMOOT. Even if it drives out the national banks?

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it not the rule that somebody must pay taxes? Somebody must support the Government. The institutions that are now in business are helping to pay the taxes of the country and support both the State government and the Federal Government. I have not thought much about it, but it impresses me at first as very unjust to establish in a community a national savings bank and relieve it of the burden of taxation under the guise of affording special privileges to the farmer.

I am sure that I have as much concern for those who till the soil as has the Senator from New Hampshire, for the agricultural interest in my State is quite as important as that of any State in the Union; but if I understand the temper of the people of Iowa they would rather resent being made the objects of special privilege. They have always insisted that the Government should be administered without favor to any class and without privilege to any class that is not accorded to every other.

I would like very much to hear at some convenient time the views of the Senator from New Hampshire upon that point, for I have no doubt he considered the subject carefully before reaching a conclusion.

Mr. HOLLIS. It is a subject that is susceptible of being treated very simply and very clearly. The same objection that the Senator raises was raised to the postal-savings deposits. It was said then that the deposits by the Government would come in competition with banks and would drive them out of business, just as was suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. That, of course, is beside the mark, because national banks do not loan on farm mortgages to any substantial extent. They ought not to do so; it is not good banking.

Mr. SMOOT. But the State banks do.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; the State banks do.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course——

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Senator will pardon me, I will answer the Senator from Iowa. My remark was addressed merely to national banks, which was the remark made by the Senator from Utah. Unless we can give under this bill lower rates than the farmers are now getting it is useless to try to give aid to them.

There are several schools of thought. Many Senators believe that the Government should borrow the money on obligations of the Government at 2 or 2½ per cent and loan directly to the farmer at 3 per cent. That would certainly drive all the savings banks out of their business, and that is one answer to that proposition.

Another school of thought is that the Federal Government ought not to engage at all in rural-credit business. All three political parties are committed to rural-credit legislation, and this is the recommendation of a joint congressional committee based on the promise that was made by the parties.

This is the first suggestion. The bill lies midway between the two. I have no idea that it will drive any substantial amount of banks out of business. It will not drive any out if they are charging a fair rate, in my judgment, because I firmly believe that private enterprise will always be able to compete to advantage with public institutions. But when there is a great need we must embark, so far as we constitutionally and properly may, on that plan. I believe the present bill is a medium bill lying between the two extremes. I believe it will come in competition with the local savings bank, and where they are charging too much it will either force them to lower their rates or to go out of business. I hope it will have that result.

The reasons why I am asking to have these bonds and mortgages exempt from taxation are, first, that if we do not do that it will be in the power of the States to drive these banks out of business by imposing an excessive tax. In the second place, if we permit it the land will be taxed, the mortgage will be taxed, the bond will be taxed. The result of those three successive taxes would be that the farmer would have to pay them all; he would have a triple taxation, and then the system would not work to the farmer's advantage.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, another question. I was very much impressed the other day when the Senator from New Hampshire was stating the case on opening the argument for the bill by the illustration which he used, that the people who have the money to loan were on one side of the river and the people who wanted to borrow the money were on the other side of the river, and the purpose of this bill—I am not hostile to the bill, to the general object to be accomplished, at all—but that the purpose of the bill was to bridge the river so that those who wanted money would be face to face with those who had money. Now, does the Senator from New Hampshire think that it is necessary to bestow this privilege upon this particular business in order to build a bridge that will enable loaners and borrowers to meet each other?

I agree that the question of taxation ought not to be left entirely with the State, but the Senator is familiar with the provision made with regard to national banks. It can easily be provided that no greater rate of taxation shall be laid than is laid upon other property of a similar character. That will produce absolute equality without establishing what might be unfair competition.

I fear if the savings banks were driven out of business the farmer instead of being benefited by the bill we have now under consideration would be very seriously injured, for the savings banks of the country are integral parts of our commercial and industrial life, and especially so in the part of the country from which I come, where the farmers own the savings banks, except those in the large cities, where they own not only the stock of the savings banks in large measure but own the deposits in the savings banks as well. In Iowa I think that 90 per cent of the deposits in her banks—and she has more than any other State in the Union—outside of three or four large cities, are the deposits of farmers, and to set up a rival system that would conduct business upon an entirely different basis might injure the very persons whom the Senator from New Hampshire is trying faithfully, I know, to assist.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may ask the Senator from Iowa a question, to what extent are the farmers of his State borrowers?

Mr. CUMMINS. They are very large borrowers. There are many farms in Iowa mortgaged, not because the people there are impoverished——

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. But for the reason stated the other day by the Senator from New Hampshire; they desire to do business, and they very often secure their capital in that way.

Mr. POMERENE. I asked the question because of this thought in my mind: Assuming for the sake of the argument that to some inappreciable extent this might interfere with the building and loan associations that we have as deposits for the farmers' money, are they not going to be correspondingly benefited by a system which is going to give them long-time loans at what we believe is going to be a more reasonable rate of interest?

I conceive that the chief benefit of this system is the creation of an institution which is going to provide a long-time loan for the farmers. Under present conditions they are not able to make long-time loans. There may be a period of one or two years when crops have been only a partial success, if not a failure, and just at that particular time the banker who has made the loan becomes disturbed and insists upon calling the loan, or at least he refuses to renew it if it should have matured. Now, we are meeting that condition by providing a loan that can be extended over a period of 36 years, and at any time after 5 years the borrower can pay it all off if he desires.

It seems to me that the benefits which are provided for in this system are very much greater than any incidental injury the farmer may sustain, if he would sustain any, by trespassing upon the functions of the savings banks.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Ohio I want to say that I have no doubt a great many people would be benefited by a provision of the character we have just been discussing. I take it, however, that the test of a wise law is the general good, the general welfare, rather than the advantage arising to comparatively few people in any community.

I am not even suggesting hostility to the proposal that in some proper way the loaner of money shall be assured of the validity and the safety of the security that is offered to him and be relieved of the burden of collecting the interest upon a mortgage or the principal when it matures. That is the great benefit of a bill of this sort, and I think it is practically its sole benefit. It is well worth accomplishing, however.

I hope that before the bill passes it will be rid of some objectionable provisions and be strengthened in some of its very beneficial provisions. It is not expected, however, that the land banks will become the sole loaners of money in this country upon farm mortgages. I think the general welfare requires that the business of the land banks shall be done under such conditions as that other business of similar character honestly conducted may survive, for it is impossible to believe that we would be benefited if all the business of this character and kind were concentrated in this system.

Mr. President, this is nothing new in my State. We have had this system for years. Our State organized loan and trust companies which have accumulated mortgages, consolidated them in a trust or deposit, and upon the basis of the deposit issued bonds bearing a lower rate of interest than the mortgages bore.

The farmers and all other borrowers, in so far as loans on farms in Iowa were concerned, were greatly benefited by the system. This bill is simply an adaptation of a plan which has long been recognized.

The loan and trust companies in my State have largely gone out of business. Why? Because the insurance companies of the country a few years ago came to the conclusion that they would deal directly with the farmers and with other borrowers, and they gave to the farmer and to other borrowers a lower rate of interest than the loan and trust companies could give and maintain themselves.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask at what rate do those companies loan?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no uniformity in the rate.

Mr. POMERENE. What is the average rate?

Mr. CUMMINS. The rate in Iowa has been, taking a few years into consideration, all the way from 4½ to 6 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. What commissions do the farmers have to pay for the loans that they get?

Mr. CUMMINS. That also is not uniform. Some of them pay no commission whatever. Some insurance companies have established places of business in our State for making loans, and loans are so made directly to the borrower in many intances, and there is no commission. There are other instances in which capitalists—insurance companies among them—have offices conducted by agents—brokers—and they charge a commission. It is not at all uniform.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will permit me, in answer to the question of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], I have before me a table, which has been very carefully prepared, showing that as to 126 American life insurance companies, whose total mortgage loans amounted to 97 per cent of all the mortgage loans held by American companies, the average rate of interest was 5.55 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. On what size loans?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. On all sized loans. They held 97 per cent of all the mortgages held by all the insurance companies of America, and the average rate was 5.55 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. My experience has been that a good many of these loans by the insurance companies are made through agents, who charge a very substantial commission for their services.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The great majority of such loans owned by insurance companies are purchased by dealers in the State, who are dealing directly with the borrowers. These loans are all taken subject to inspection by the companies' agents. I think the table which has been presented by the committee shows that in the State of Iowa, on an estimate made by Dr. Thompson, specialist in charge of rural organization in the Department of Agriculture, the average rate in Iowa was 5.6 per cent, and that the annual commission to the agents was only three-tenths of 1 per cent. I think that is too high. My experience with Iowa farm loans is such that I do not think the rate of interest upon the average issuance of farm loans in Iowa can be as high as he states it—5.6 per cent—because, according to this report, the average of all the loans owned by the insurance companies of America is only 5.5 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have not consulted the statistics with regard to the loans in Iowa. I speak only from a personal observation of many transactions of which I have known in the last few years. The fact is that in our State the two insurance companies which loan more money than any others—possibly as much as all others—are represented in the State by agents of the insurance companies, and the loans are made directly from the companies to the borrower, without the intervention of any third party, and, in the main, without any commission.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, is it not——

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me, I have been instancing these things simply to show that there are other interests to be conserved and to be recognized. I want the farmers to secure a lower rate of interest; and if I believed it to be fair to the people of the country generally I would favor the Government entering the business directly and purchasing the mortgages at an interest not to exceed 4 per cent; but while in that way I should be able to secure a low rate of interest to the farmers, I feel that I would be inflicting a great injury upon a business which, if destroyed, would in the end result in disaster to the farmers.

For these reasons I have been disposed to favor, and to favor very heartily, the general plan proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]; but in carrying out that plan we must not forget that the business of this country is a complicated one, and in the effort to assist the farmers we must not impair the rights and destroy the business of other people.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I was very much struck by what the Senator from Iowa said about the effect of this legislation on the savings banks. I have here the figures which show that there are deposits in private savings banks of $4,997,000,000, practically $5,000,000,000; in building and loan associations, $1,257,000,000; and there are 14,915,000 depositors and members. As suggested by the Senator from Iowa, we should touch cautiously such a great system as that, involving, as it does, 14,915,000 depositors. I believe that such a proposition ought to have very careful consideration.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will allow me, I will ask that the report, which I hold in my hand, of the committee on rural credits of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States be printed as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report refered to is as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

The committee on rural credits held meetings at Washington on February 14 and 15, a majority being present, and Mr. Myron T. Herrick in the chair. The only one of the measures pending in Congress discussed was bill 2986, which Senator HOLLIS introduced in the Senate on February 15, 1916.

OUTLINE OF THE HOLLIS BILL.

This bill proposes to create through a bureau at Washington a farm-mortgaging system composed of Federal land banks, national farm loan associations, national joint-stock land banks, and such other institutions as the bureau may admit to the system.

The bureau shall consist of the Secretary of the Treasury and four appointees of the President and Senate of the United States. The bureau shall divide continental United States, exclusive of Alaska, into 12 districts and establish a Federal land bank in each district. The bureau may establish as many more Federal land banks and charter any number of national farm-loan associations and national joint-stock land banks, as it pleases and grant licenses to mortgage companies and moneyed corporations organized under any National or State law to act as agents of the Federal land banks.

The bureau may appoint the receiver and administer the affairs of a dissolved land bank or association without the intervention of the courts, and no dissolution shall take place except upon its written consent. It shall appoint a registrar and one or more appraisers for each district, and any necessary examiners and employees for the system, and all such appointees shall be public functionaries. It shall supervise the system and render periodical reports to Congress.

Each Federal land bank shall have a capital stock of at least $500,000, which may be increased indefinitely. The shares shall be $5 apiece, and may be held by any individual, firm, association, corporation, or by the Government of the United States or of any State. But only the United States and national farm-loan associations may vote. The United States shall select two and affiliated national farm-loan associations the three other directors composing the board. One of the directors shall be a person experienced in practical farming.

Ten per cent of the capital stock shall be invested in bonds of the United States. Twenty-five per cent of the net profits shall be set aside each year for a reserve until that fund equals 20 per cent of the capital stock. The Federal land banks may maintain branches. They may serve as depositaries and financial agents of the United States. They may receive savings and deposits from shareholders, and circulate bonds up to twenty times capital stock and surplus. They may contract debts in other ways without any limit as to amount.

The bonds shall be prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury and Comptroller of the Currency after the manner of national-bank notes, and issued only when approved by the bureau, countersigned by its executive officer, and secured by mortgages valuated by the appraisers and trusteed with the district registrars. The smallest series shall be $50,000, the lowest denomination $25, and the highest interest rate 5 per cent per annum. The bonds shall have a maturity of at least 10 years, and be lawful investment for public and fiduciary funds. Postal banks may invest 30 per cent of their deposits in them. Any member bank of the Federal reserve system may buy or sell them or use them as security for acceptances or 60-day direct obligations; and such paper shall be eligible for discount by Federal reserve banks. The Federal land banks shall guarantee the bonds of one another.

The bonds and the mortgages shall be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and, together with the capital stock, reserve, surplus, and income, shall be exempt from all taxes, Federal, State, municipal, and local, except taxes on real estate. The United States shall, if ordered by the bureau, advance the Federal land bank $6,000,000 a year, and also subscribe for all the minimum capital stock remaining unsubscribed for by other parties 90 days after books have been opened. The United States shall receive only 2 per cent per annum for its advances, and no dividends at all upon its shares.

As many national farm-loan associations may be formed in a district as its Federal land bank and the bureau deem advisable. The incorporators of each shall be 10 or more natural persons applying for loans, and they must tender mortgages aggregating at least $20,000 executed and recorded in favor of such bank. Only borrowers may become shareholders. Each borrower must subscribe for shares up to 5 per cent of the amount of his loan and may hold as many more shares as he pleases.

The shares shall be $5 apiece and withdrawable under rules prescribed by the district Federal land bank. The liability of members shall be unlimited or double the face value of their shares, according to the plan selected. No member may cast more than 10 votes. Each association shall have a board of five directors selected by members, and a president, vice president, and secretary-treasurer selected by the board from members. But neither directors nor officers need be members.

A national farm-loan association can not issue bonds. Its powers shall be to receive money by the sale of shares and 4 per cent certificates of deposit, and to invest its funds in loans to members or in bonds of the United States or of Federal land banks. It may also receive money from its Federal land bank for making loans; but in this case it must buy shares in such bank up to 5 per cent of the amount so received, pledge the shares, and further secure the advances by an equal amount of mortgages indorsed and guaranteed to such bank. The total of the advances must never exceed twenty times the face value of the shares held in the bank. An association may also borrow sums from its bank at 6 per cent per annum to meet current expenses and losses. Twenty-five per cent of net annual profits must be set aside for a reserve until such fund equals 20 per cent of outstanding share capital. The reserve shall become the property of the district Federal land bank in the event of a dissolution. The associations, like the Federal land banks, shall be exempt from taxation.

As many national joint-stock land banks may be formed as the bureau deems advisable. The incorporators of each shall be 10 or more natural persons. Its territory shall be confined to a State or to contiguous States. The minimum for capital stock shall be $500,000 when headquarters are in a State with a population of 2,000,000 or more; in other States the minimum shall be $250,000. The shares shall involve double liability. The board shall consist of five or more directors. The bonds may bear any legal rate. They shall have a distinctive form and color and the amount in circulation must never exceed fifteen times capital stock and surplus. Tax exemptions are accorded only on the mortgages. In other respects national joint-stock land banks would have an organization similar to that of the Federal land banks, except the United States could not be a stockholder nor participate in the management.

These three kinds of institutions composing the proposed system shall make loans only on farm land. No restrictions as to amount, period, or purpose are imposed on national joint-stock land banks. But the loans in which Federal land banks and national farm-loan associations may invest their funds shall run for not less than 5 nor more than 36 years and be paid off by half-yearly annuities. Only sums divisible by $100 may be accepted in prepayment. The interest rate shall not exceed that fixed for national banks, nor shall it ever go higher than 1 per cent over that current on the bonds of the district Federal land bank. This ratio between interest on bonds and loans must also be observed by national joint-stock land banks. The only objects for lending shall be to purchase, improve, or equip a farm for a home. The minimum for amount shall be $200. The maximum shall be $10,000, but in no case ever exceed one-half the value of the mortgaged farm. The value shall be determined by the loan committee and a public appraiser.

The borrower must be or become the resident and actual cultivator of the farm. He must give a first mortgage and undertake not to sell or otherwise dispose of the farm until his loan has been paid in full. He must also buy shares in the Federal land bank or national farm-loan association up to 5 per cent of the sum borrowed and pledge the shares as additional security. If he should die, default, or violate the terms of his mortgage, the loan may be recalled, with 6 per cent interest.

Such mortgage loans are the only loans against which the Federal land banks may issue bonds. The mortgages, trusteed with the registrar as security for the issue, must always equal in amount the bonds outstanding. The Federal land banks may not make loans directly. They may acquire them only by indorsement from national joint-stock land banks or from national farm-loan associations, preferably from the latter. If a sufficient supply can not be obtained in this way, then a Federal land bank may buy such mortgages from any bank, trust company, or mortgage institution organized under National or State laws and approved by the bureau. Mortgages so acquired shall be guaranteed by the seller. The aggregate of the guaranties shall not exceed its capital stock and surplus.

OBJECTIONS TO THE HOLLIS BILL.

1. Powers of the bureau too extensive: The bill contravenes the spirit of American Government by proposing to enact special as distinguished from general laws and to create a bureau clothed with both executive and judicial powers through which, while Congress is not in session, money for the use of a special class of private individuals may be abstracted from the Public Treasury at 2 per cent, or for no interest, and the good faith and honor of the United States be involved in the issue of unlimited millions of bonds bearing interest at a rate as high as 5 per cent per annum and running for indefinite periods, even to future generations. The bureau may establish any number of Federal land banks in addition to the first 12, and, since no maximum is prescribed for capital stock, it may authorize continual issue of bonds that may be endless so long as qualified mortgages are supplied.

The bureau may withhold the benefits of the proposed system from any State or from any group of farmers. It may shift the public funds and, through its registrars, certain other funds of the land banks, and direct such funds to any section of the country, as it pleases. It may entirely forbid bond issues and fix different rates of interest for bonds and loans, according to district, and even fix the rate after the bonds have been issued, and thus it can favor one land bank to the detriment of any other land bank, and force the latter to suspend business. It has absolute authority to grant or disallow charters, to dissolve any land bank or association, to appoint the receiver, compound debts and claims, cancel even obligations to the United States, and dispose of assets in any way it sees fit. The courts can not intervene if it acts first, and no dissolution shall occur without its written consent. No appeal can be taken from any of its decisions. The bureau is a supreme autocratic body, with its great powers absolutely unrestrained except by its own discretion and prejudices. This burcaucracy is not American.

2. Government institutions: The Federal land banks, being established by Government, managed in part and entirely dominated by Government functionaries, and empowered to use the cash, good faith, and credit of Government are Government institutions to the extent that investors in their shares and bonds would have a moral, if not a legal right, to look to the United States for the return of their money. The establishment of such Government institutions for the private purposes for which they are intended presents a grave constitutional question. The Hollis bill avoids this by authorizing them to act as Government depositaries and financial agents, and by declaring their bonds and mortgages to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States.

But this is subterfuge. If Congress can render doubtful legislation constitutional by such evasive devices, then the Constitution has be come a mere scrap of paper, the principals of fair play and equal rights upon which the Republic is based have disappeared, and Congress may legislate for any religion, race, or class without regard to the rest of the people. The Constitution vests in Congress the power to borrow money on the credit of the United States and requires all bills for raising revenues to originate in the House. Such powers can not be delegated. Nevertheless, the Hollis bill plans to empower the Secretary of the Treasury and four appointees of the President and the Senate to utilize the credit of the United States and to borrow money without any limit as to amount or time and at a rate as high as 5 per cent per annum.

It is claimed that the Government's connection as a stockholder would be only temporary, since the bill provides for the retirement of the shares held by the United States in a Federal land bank. But this retirement can not begin until the holdings of other parties amount to $500,000, while even after that event only one-fourth of such subscriptions may be used for the retirement. These other shares would probably be those for which borrowers are obliged to subscribe up to 5 per cent of their loans. So, assuming that the United States supplies the initial capital stock, as is intended, the Federal land banks in the aggregate must have $12,000,000 of capital stock, and there would probably be $240,000,000 of loans and a corresponding amount of bonds outstanding before the United States could withdraw as a shareholder. This does not include any other than the first 12 Federal land banks which the bureau may establish.

3. Unqualified and unlimited State aid: Financial assistance follows the establishment of Government institutions, as a matter of course. The exemption from all taxes, the use of about one-third of postal savings, and the right to obtain Government funds as deposits at 2 per cent interest and as subscriptions to shares without dividends, and to issue bonds prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury and Comptroller of the Currency and certified and approved by Federal officials are State aid of any unqualified type and absolutely unlimited, for the reasons stated.

The possible extent is appalling, and yet it would not be available for many persons in need of it, i. e., tenant farmers and landless homeseekers in the town as well as in the country. The United States surely could not afford to take the risk of financing poor persons inexperienced in farming. But this is the usual excuse foreign nations have for a resort to the Government aid proposed by the Hollis bill.

In nearly every foreign country where the Government has intervened in land credit the State has suffered heavy losses from the defaults of borrowers and from being compelled to pay the bonds in order to protect its honor and financial standing. The United States also has suffered similar experiences. The reclaiming of the arid regions in the West is a great and necessary undertaking. It ought to have been financed, like the Panama Canal, by bond issues. The assessment on the tracts improved ought to have been paid into a sinking fund to redeem the bonds. But the United States financed its 25 projects through receipts from the sale of public lands. These millions of receipts, which otherwise would perhaps have been devoted to general educational and agricultural purposes, were used for the benefit of a relatively small number of individuals.

The United States has invested over $100,000,000 in the projects, has arranged to borrow $21,000,000, and must have $75,000,000 more to complete the work; and part of the investment represented in the Yuma project is a total loss. The settlers are not charged interest. They enjoy gratis this third largest instance of State aid in the world; and although their principal payments have been divided into 20 annual instalments, many are in default. One of the reasons for this is that the intervention of Government created such high fictitious values that the dues on mortgages given for the purchase price of the land, with the taxes, consume most of the settlers' profits.

The free use of money or the artificial reduction of interest rates is invariably compensated in this way by increase of the purchase price of land. The framers of the Hollis bill have overlooked the bitter experiences of the United States and of the settlers in these irrigation projects. Also they have overlooked the disastrous end of the private enterprises and banks with which many States became identified during the period beginning with the year 1836, and as a result of which nearly every State inserted in its constitution a clause forbidding the use of the cash or credit of government, except for strictly public purposes. The crazes for greenbacks and subtreasury warehouses are now happily dead, but they were more intense than the present demand for Government land banks.

The exemption of mortgages used as security for bonds is not objectionable since it would prevent double taxation. But to exempt bonds and shares without limiting the amount in the hands of one holder, as in the Hollis bill, can not be justified, because it would relieve from taxation the surplus of wealth of persons not farmers or even residents of the United States, and simply shift the inevitable burden of taxes to other kinds of real and personal property.

4. A Government savings bank system: Besides the United States, any individual, firm, association, corporation, or State could place time or demand deposits in a Federal land bank simply by becoming the holder of one share of stock. Since a share has a face value of only $5 and may be withdrawn under rules prescribed by the bureau, this converts the Federal land banks into Government savings banks. A national farm-loan association could issue any number of shares and 4 per cent certificates of deposit to members; it could issue the certificates also to nonmembers. The various associations in a district must transmit the deposits to their Federal land bank, and thus serve as agencies for it. In this network fashion the Hollis bill plans the creation of a great Government savings bank system for gathering up savings for public institutions remote from the localities of the depositors and dominated by a bureau at Washington. This nation-wide system would be completely tax exempted, without limit as to the amount standing to the credit of a depositor.

The demand deposits received from associations could not draw interest, but deposits of any kind from other depositors could draw interest. This would be unfair to members of the associations. Savings and deposits may be invested by the Federal land banks in mortgage loans, but the claims of bondholders shall be prior to that of depositors on the deposits as well as on capital stock and surplus. The investment of deposits in loans which must run for 5 and may run for 36 years is dangerous finance. It would also be equally wrong and dangerous to permit savings institutions to pyramid on their credit and encumber assets with debt through bond issues. Such methods brought the public savings banks of Italy so near to ruin a few decades ago that they would have become bankrupt if the Government had not come to their assistance, repealed the laws, and refunded their obligations on terms which it compelled creditors to accept.

Institutions financed through the cash and credit of Government do not need savings, nor do they need capital stocks. Nevertheless, the Hollis bill provides for both, and, in order to obtain them, would subject farmers to compulsory share subscriptions, but permit investors having no need of loans to enjoy the benefit of the Government's bounties and tax exemptions. In foreign countries, especially where royalty reigns, the highly centralized Governments require abundant funds for their warlike and other purposes, so they have established public savings banks and they discourage private savings banks. The more funds the State brings under its control the greater, of course, becomes its temptation to engage in private enterprises. The United States, following European practices, would probably invest in its own securities the deposits collected through the numerous associations for its 12 or more Federal land banks and thus enlarge its business ventures while diminishing the present volume of ready cash in country districts.

Recent statistics show that in the United States there are deposits and savings of $4,997,706,013 in private savings banks and of $1,357,707,900 in building and loan associations. The 14,915,104 depositors and members, comprising farmers and city dwellers and constituting over one-seventh of the population, have accumulated $6,355,413,913. With these funds and largely under their own management they have built up a system surpassing in assets and profits the combined public and private system in any other country. The postal savings banks have $65,684,708 of deposits. This moderate growth, contrasted with the enormous development of the private savings banks and building and loan associations, indicates that the people of the United States prefer a decentralized private system of cooperative or mutual local units that will keep their money circulating at home. The people have never expressed the least desire for a change. Their splendid system of mutuality and cooperation ought not to be disturbed by Government without their full knowledge and consent. Moreover, the postal savings banks ought to be given a fair chance to prove their worth before a second Government system is placed in competition with it.

5. Not cooperative: The report which Senator HOLLIS signed and the Senate published with the bill asserts that the proposed system is cooperative and that all profits would revert to the borrowers. The bill itself contains a clause authorizing the bureau to propagate the principles and practices of cooperative credit and cooperative organization. This report and provision are glaringly inconsistent with the plan of the bill. The basic principle of cooperation is organized mutual self-help resting upon individual initiative and private enterprise. The essentials of a cooperative association are that the management shall consist of members elected by members and that any distribution of profits shall be confined to members.

Nevertheless, the bill provides for Government initiative, aid, and direction; authorizes national farm-loan associations to be managed by directors and officers not members; prevents them from making any loans except with the consent of outsiders—a Federal land bank and official appraisers; and permits any individual, firm, association, corporation, or State, whether a member or not, to participate in the profits through ownership of dividend-paying stock in the land banks. Similarly, also, the Federal land banks may divert from borrowers and turn over to agents one-half of 1 per cent of the profits on loans made through them. The bill, it is true, requires collective liability, either limited or unlimited, but the effect of this would be to subject the borrowers to all the risk of loss while allowing them only a part of the profit. So the system not only violates cooperative principles, but would operate toward borrowers contrary to promises.

There is no country where cooperative associations and capitalistic companies work side by side under the same act. The reason is that they are entirely different the one from the other, and each requires statutory provisions especially designed for its peculiarities. For a similar reason public and private institutions have never been successfully conducted in the same system. Invariably wherever such a combination has been attempted the joint-stock companies have crowded out the cooperative associations, and the public banks have overmatched all. This would also be the case with the Hollis bill. Its Government intervention and assistance would render individual initiative, private enterprise, and mutual self-help unnecessary; and the final private remnants would be only those willing to take and able to get the Government favors that a bureaucratic body would have the arbitrary power to bestow or withhold, and the system would degenerate into nothing but Government ownership and State aid.

6. Too complicated: The Hollis bill proposes by one and the same act to establish public land banks and public savings banks, to authorize national cooperative savings and loan associations, and national joint-stock land banks; to utilize postal-savings banks and any kind of mortgage concern or moneyed corporation chartered by national or State laws, and to form out of these incongruent public and private elements a grand centralized system subject to the same rules and regulations, subsidized by Government, and controlled by a Federal bureau at Washington, for extending credit to a special class of landowners. Confusion has naturally arisen.

Under the bill, private individuals may participate with Government in the management of the public banks. The so-called cooperative associations may be assisted by Government, managed by outside parties, and divested of mutual self-help and all other cooperative features except collective liability of members. The private land banks may use public funds, must submit to Government intervention, practice cooperative methods, and prefer the interests of their borrowers to those of the holders of their stocks and bonds. Short-term deposits may be used to finance long-term loans, and the profits on the cash and credit of the United States be distributed as dividends among individuals who are neither borrowers nor farmers, while the tax exemptions would be enjoyed by those who are not the intended beneficiaries of the system.

The friends of the bill justify its plan from the Federal Reserve System. But, in adopting the features of centralization, bureaucratic domination, and Government intervention of that act for their special purpose, they ignore the facts that the Federal Reserve System is available for all and was established by the United States Government in accord with its sovereign and constitutional right to create currency, while they utterly fail to realize that the machinery for giving liquidity to personal credits is not the proper machinery for mobilizing land values. The bill can not be said to reflect matured thought on land credit. Rather, it indicates, when the high discretionary powers of its autocratic Federal bureau are considered, that the framers were seeking some safe way to utilize the cash and credit of Government, and that they followed models devised by foreign countries for poor and ignorant peasants.

7. Inconsistencies: The bill forbids bonds from being recalled for 10 years, but allows the underlying loans to be paid off 5 years after date. It allows land banks to retain defaulted loans on their books for 2 years, but requires national farm-loan associations to make good all defaults within 30 days after notice; this, of course, is impractical since no mortgages can be foreclosed within such a short time. The loans must be paid by annuities, but the annuities may be larger than the income of the mortgaged land—a dangerous practice in long-term lending.

The lenders can charge no commissions, but must stand all the cost of making renewals, although borrowers may pay off their loans in bonds and so, in the event of a depreciation, throw the loss upon shareholders; this also permits a borrower who can buy bonds to take profit away from his less fortunate fellow borrowers, and to interfere with the accumulation of a reserve to protect their investments and liabilities. Since the loans must be made in cash, the lenders—at least, the national farm-loan associations—ought to be able to exact payment in cash, as a matter of justice to their members, particularly to small borrowers.

The arrangement by which the Hollis bill obligates all borrowers to assume collective liability for any loan used for securing bonds is unjust. Especially would it be unjust for national farm-loan associations in which the liability is unlimited. In spite of the fact that one-fifth of the members of such an association may prevent it from admitting a loan applicant, nevertheless, every member must stand good for loans made without his knowledge or consent by any other association or Federal land bank anywhere in the United States. This inconsistency practically eliminates the associations from the system, since farmers would avoid them. The bill, it is true, provides that membership shall cease with the payment of the loan, and that the shares (which the association must compel the borrower to take up to 5 per cent of his loan) may then be retired.

But, on the other hand, the bill requires the association to purchase a corresponding amount of the capital stock of its Federal land bank and to pledge the borrower's obligatory shares with such bank. It is in this way that a Federal land bank is expected to obtain capital stock after the shares of the United States have been paid off. The capital stock, however, must always be maintained (with surplus) at twenty times the bonds in circulation, and never fall below the minimum of $500,000, while the bonds can not be redeemed before 10 years from date, and may run for much longer periods. Consequently, the amount of the obligations for which a borrower may become liable is practically unlimited; and, since no time is fixed by the bill, the borrower's liability would continue for 5 or 6 years (or the statutory period set by State laws) after he had paid up his own loan and had exercised his remote right to withdraw.

8. Defects: The scheme for amortizing loans and for issuing and redeeming bonds is not well coordinated. Although providing for periodic payment of the loans, the bill does not provide for periodic retirement of bonds, and so there is no automatic sifting of bad from good securities, so necessary in long-term mortgaging. Moreover, since amortization is obligatory, there should be provisions permitting prepayments to be applied to increase the size of the annuities and shorten the loan period, as well as to reduce their size without changing the period. Such alterations, however, affect both the interest and principal installments in the annuity. In the absence of statutory clauses allowing such alterations, the courts might adjudge the loan to be usurious if a corresponding recalculation of the annuities was not made; or, again, if such recalculation was made, the courts might construe the rearrangement as an entirely new contract having no lien on the mortgaged property against intervening third parties.

The Hollis bill is obscure on these points. It does not permit the land banks or associations to charge any fees for renewals, while it lacks even the clauses which enable American building and loan associations to impose fines for withdrawals and aggregate interest and principal in installments, and thus extend long-term credit without running the risk of usury. The bill provides that only sums divisible by $100 and applicable for reducing principal (as distinguished from interest) may be paid in advance of the due date, while no loan under any pretext shall draw interest at a rate higher than that legal for national banks. The only exception is the national joint-stock banks. Prepayments and defaults would present troublesome problems under these clauses and lack of proper clauses. The right to pay off a loan ought not to be postponed for 5 years. Payment in whole or in part should be allowed at any semester; and this would occasion no trouble if the land banks had the power, as they should, to recall their bonds at will or were compelled to retire them by periodical drawings.

Although the bill prescribes a statutory limit for the output of bonds, nevertheless it permits the land banks to contract debts in other ways without any limit as to amount, while their obligations may draw interest at a higher rate than that of the underlying securities. Thus, interest received from loans and other investments may be used to consume principal on the obligations and impair capital stock and assets. The trusteeing of mortgages with district registrars would be cumbersome, expensive, and totally unnecessary on the assumption that the officers of the land banks would be as capable and honest as anybody else. Moreover, such a requirement could add nothing to safety, because the loss or theft of recorded instruments, like mortgages, can occasion only an inconvenience.

9. Terms too severe for borrowers: The regulation of the borrower's affairs and expenditures naturally follows the State-aid features of the bill. The United States should have the say, of course, as to what may be done with funds it supplies. But this paternalism would put in question the undoubted intelligence and integrity of the average American farmer, while it would be difficult and expensive to carry out, besides making foreclosure possible at practically the will of the lender. There are many good reasons for borrowing, such as to educate one's children or to increase the size of a farm so as to meet the needs of a growing family or to leave an estate to heirs, but the Hollis bill excludes all these.

The mortgaged farm must have a value equal at least to twice the principal of the loan. But since 5 per cent of the money borrowed must be spent in share subscriptions, this cuts the actual credit of the farm down to 45 per cent of its value. If the money comes through a Federal land bank, the borrower must live upon and personally cultivate the mortgaged farm and use the loan only for some specified and sworn-to purpose. He can not dismortgage the farm for five years, nor freely sell it as long as any of the loan remains unpaid, while foreclosure may be brought at once if he dies, defaults, or dissatisfies some secret inspector. Moreover, he must become a member of some national farm-loan association and assume double or unlimited liability for all other loans made through the system. These terms are more harsh and onerous than now exacted from borrowers.

10. Could not operate with uniformity and fairness: This plan to establish a nation-wide system by beginning at the top without due regard to the foundation has naturally evolved a fragile superstructure unnecessarily elaborated in details. The bill proposes to legislate on matters ordinarily taken care of by by-laws or resolutions of boards of directors, while, on the other hand, it lacks indispensable clauses. Its scheme to unite all varieties of land-credit institutions into one harmonious whole is pleasing to the eye, but not logical nor practical. The more it is studied the less it satisfies the advocates of any kind of institution. Indeed, nothing but continual violation of correct principles can be expected of such a centralized, complicated, and subsidized system. The 45 per cent of the value imposed as the lending limit on land would make it useless in thickly settled and improved sections. Its lending restrictions would interfere with its extension to Texas, whose constitution prevents the waiver of homestead rights, and to other States whose laws do not conform to the standards prescribed by the bureau.

There is no possibility that the system would operate with fairness and uniformity throughout the country nor improve land credit to any noticeable degree. Its method of finance, through deposits attracted and bonds sold upon the forced guaranty of 12 or more Government banks and upon the good faith and honor of the United States, eliminates land-credit features. The mortgages lose their character as securities and become simply a gauge for the output of bonds and a means for doling out funds supplied through Government. The unfortunate outcome of this substitution of the credit of Government for the credit of the land by the arrangement proposed would be that reforms now under way would be discouraged, while loans could be made only to special classes in outlying districts, and the profits of the system would be distributed as dividends and tax exemptions accorded to persons who are not farmers or borrowers.

11. Dangerous possibilities: Failing to satisfy the land-credit needs of the average farmer, the system would perhaps inordinately develop its savings-bank and other features. There is no foretelling the use of the enormous funds which might be attracted by the tax exemptions and by the promise of Federal officials to pay 4 or 5 per cent a year. The bureau may prescribe any kind of Government security for investment and define as it pleases the words "improvement" and "equipment" in the bill.

This opens the door for land-reclamation projects and for an endless variety of Government activities. The distinction between private and public enterprise would become obscured, with the ability of the Government, thus indefinitely increased, to embark on business and financial ventures.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

In view of these minor and important defects the Hollis bill does not present a workable plan. Instead of passing a special act for utilizing the cash and credit of the United States and for creating a centralized system composed of such incompatible elements as public banks, capitalistic companies, and cooperative associations, it would be better for Congress to pass a law, general in its nature (like the national banking act), under which plural competitive companies might be formed for granting loans to any class of landowners selected by their charters.

The specific essentials of such a law are few and simple, their purpose being to regulate bond issues, enforce rigid supervision, and safeguard borrowers from oppression and investors from losses, and to require enough capital stock to assure a strong financial standing. Inasmuch as farm loans are more expensive to make than other kinds of loans, it might be advisable to exempt from taxation all farm mortgages when used as security for bonds. But special legislation should not go beyond this favor until a fair trial had proved that properly regulated and officially supervised companies, operating on correct principles, were not able to find the farmers all the money they need at long-term and reasonable interest rates.

The so-called associations of borrowers in their purity have no capital stock nor do they take in money on shares or as deposits or savings. They are known as landschafts, and they are created, officered, and managed very much like drainage, sewer, improvement, or school districts in the United States. The liability of the landowners in both is collective and unlimited, in consequence of assessments which may be levied in order to maintain a sinking fund at a balance with outstanding bonds. The issuance of bonds by a landschaft, however, is resorted to only for raising money for individual loans. This is its chief difference from the American districts. Landschafts are the best institutions for according long-term credit on farm lands, but it would be well to leave the legislation for them to the States where they might be serviceable.

MYRON T. HERRICK, Chairman.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, March 31, 1916.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts what are the average earnings of the various institutions to which he has referred?

Mr. LODGE. I have not the figures here and can simply state those earnings offhand. I think our banks in Massachusetts made 3 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. My thought is that these mortgage-loan bonds will be very largely taken by such institutions as the Senator from Massachusetts has in mind.

Mr. LODGE. I should not think they would be taken if they were well-managed institutions.

Mr. POMERENE. If these securities will be as good as we believe they are going to be—and I see no reason why they may not be just as secure as law and safe administration can make them—I can not understand why we should distinguish between them and any other institutions.

Mr. LODGE. Under the laws of the State—at least, under the laws of my State—the officials are very strict in regard to savings-bank investments. I do not believe they are permitted to invest in securities because the Senate and House of Representatives may think they are going to be good securities.

Mr. POMERENE. I imagine that they will use their sound judgment in the matter.

Mr. LODGE. I fancy so.

Mr. POMERENE. I think we have legislated with a reasonable degree of intelligence with regard to the banks of this country, and I see no reason why we may not use that same intelligence in this matter.

Mr. LODGE. I think we can hardly cite that as an authority.

Mr. POMERENE. I am entirely content with it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not questioning the intelligence of the committee; I think it has performed a very difficult task in a very creditable way; but it must not be assumed that the result of its labors can not be improved in the debate and the consideration which the Senate will give upon these very indirect propositions.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the Senator from Iowa does not think that I was objecting to any amendments. I shall have several to offer myself later on.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not, even in my mind, accuse the Senator from Ohio of any such treason to this very honorable body. I earnestly desire to aid the Senator from New Hampshire in opening the road for the farmer to the sources of capital in this country, and to procure for him the readiest access possible for the money that he needs to supply his wants; but I am still of the opinion that the farmer does not desire, and ought not to have if he does so desire, an advantage over other classes of the country.

I began by suggesting that the exemption from taxation in such a case as is proposed for the deposits made with the farm-loan associations was unequal and unfair, and I still believe so. I have no doubt that the thing in the mind of the Senator from New Hampshire was the exemption of the bonds from taxation, because they were, in a certain sense, governmental instrumentalities. I have no question but that he has been assiduously looking for constitutional pegs upon which to hang this very important measure. I think he will find them without difficulty, and still remove some of the objectionable things that I believe are now in the bill.

I shall offer no amendment at this time, but when the reading of the bill shall have been finished, there are certain suggestions that I desire to make to the Senator from New Hampshire and to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, before this bill is put upon its passage, I hope the Senator who has charge of it will very fully discuss the question which has been suggested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I beg pardon. I did not know that the Senator from Montana had been recognized. I thought I was recognized.

I find in section 29 of the bill this language:

SEC. 29. That every Federal land bank and every national farm-loan association, including the capital stock and reserve or surplus therein and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by said bank or association under the provisions of section 11 and section 13 of this act.

That is a very broad proposition, and when we consider the number of institutions in the country that are dealing in farm mortgages, and are dealing directly with the farmers and between them and large investors, we can see at a glance what such a provision as this means.

If I carry the figures correctly in my mind—and I think I do—the last census shows that the amount of farm loans in this country was substantially $2,000,000,000. If this act is to stimulate farm loans and place them upon a basis that will induce a larger measure of relief to the farmers, there is no reason why the number of farm mortgages in this country may not double. It is not a simple question of poverty; it is a simple question, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] has said, of securing money under conditions that will enable them to do business upon a better basis. If the amount of mortgages, we will say, in the next 10 years is to double and one class of them is to be exempted from taxation, which must run from 1 to 2 per cent, it will be seen at a glance that anybody in competition with this system must suffer extremely.

I do not know how it is in other sections of the country, but in New England I think our taxes average from 1½ to 2 per cent, and if they stand at either of the figures which I have given, this aggregation—that is, the aggregation provided by this bill—it seems to me, will be able to drive all others out of business, and we will find a double cause of trouble in it from the fact that we will be taking money from the people in the form of taxes, the benefit of which they have a right to enjoy. It will take a large amount of property out of taxation, and when that is taken out other classes in the community will have to pay the deficit that has been thus created. In addition to that, it is a direct attack upon established institutions in which there has been invested a vast accumulation of money.

I hope that the Senator will take that matter up very carefully. It is a subject to which I had given very little attention until I heard the reading of the bill; but I should like to see if there is any way of explaining away what seems to me to be a very great injustice both to that portion of the public not covered by the benefits of this bill, and to the other portion of the public that are engaged in legitimate business.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it may be of some service to direct the attention of the Senate at this time to the clause in the bill which has given rise to this discussion, which has departed widely from the matter to which the provision of the bill under consideration relates. It reads as follows:

Such deposits, when received, shall be forthwith transmitted to said land bank, and be invested by it in the purchase of farm-loan bonds or in first mortgages as defined by this act.

The discussion was precipitated by the Senator from Iowa who might be interested in what I have to say.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. From what page of the bill has the Senator read?

Mr. WALSH. Page 29. Of course if the land bank were at liberty to invest such deposits in any mortgages which it might find on the market, coming from any source whatever, those mortgages might bear any rate of interest; but quite obviously the land bank is restricted in the use of its funds to the purchase of mortgages negotiated by the local land association, for the language is not general that it may purchase mortgages, but that it may purchase farm-loan bonds or first mortgages "as defined by this act."

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I might supplement what the Senator is saying by adding that there is a provision in the bill that land banks can not buy in any other way, except through the local associations. They can only invest in regular mortgages, in loans to the farmers who belong to farm-loan associations.

Mr. WALSH. The term "first mortgage" is defined by section 2 of the act, as follows:

That wherever the term "first mortgage" is used in this act it shall be held to include such classes of first liens on farm lands as shall be approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board, and the credit instruments secured thereby.

The Federal loan board does not approve any loans on farm land except those made by the local associations, and the local associations are prohibited by the act from charging any more upon loans made by them than 1 per cent in excess of the rate at which the last issue of farm-land bank bonds was issued, and that, as provided by the act, shall never be in excess of 5 per cent. So the amount of interest which the mortgages in which the deposits may be invested shall bear is limited by the terms of the act.

Reference has been made to the exemption from taxation feature. That, as pointed out by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], is the subject of a distinct subhead in this bill, which will be encountered in due course of time, and when it is, doubtless that subject will be debated with some earnestness, because it is quite obvious that in that provision of the bill is found the feature which has provoked whatever antagonism has yet developed to the measure.

I desire, however, to say in this connection, inasmuch as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has referred to the competition with savings banks, that the ideal savings bank is not subject to taxation. The ideal savings bank has no property; it is simply an agency for the investment of the money deposited with it by its depositors. The local associations are in character much the same, and, so far as they are concerned, there is no discrimination in this bill against the savings banks strictly so called. Of course, many banks go under the name of savings banks which have a capital stock, as the ideal savings bank has not, but those are operated for profit. Savings banks of that character will, of course, compete under such disadvantage as arises from the exemption given to the land banks; but, so far as the savings bank itself is concerned, the institution that is analogous to it is the local land association.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a word in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Montana. It may be that there are provisions in the bill with which I have not become familiar, but I think it can not be safely asserted that the only mortgages which a land bank can acquire are mortgages which are presented to it by farm-loan associations. It is true that in section 14 we find this provision:

That no Federal land bank shall have power * * * to loan on first mortgage except through national farm-loan associations as provided in section 7 of this act, or through agents as provided in section 17.

Turning to section 17, we find this provision:

That whenever, after this act shall have been in effect one year, it shall appear to the Federal farm-loan board that national farm-loan associations have not been formed, and are not likely to be formed, in any locality, because of some peculiar local conditions, said board may, in its discretion, authorize Federal land banks to make loans on farm lands through agents approved by said board.

While I think that is a good provision, yet it opens the door to loans made by the land banks in every locality in which farm-loan associations have not been organized as an original authority; in other words, the land banks under those circumstances simply become general loaners of money to whomsoever desires to secure loans from the bank.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, it is quite evident on a reading of section 17 that the agents are confined to chartered banks, trust companies, or mortgage institutions, and they are only permitted to place loans of that kind up to, I believe, 1 per cent of their capital and surplus, which restricts that amount very much. It is only intended to offer facilities to some remote regions where they can not form loan associations, in order that the farmers there may not be entirely without accommodation. It would be a very restricted form of loan.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I will add that these agencies making the loans in lieu of the local associations, where there is no association, are under exactly the same restrictions as though the loan were made by the local association. Section 17, to which the Senator has referred, reads as follows——

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite aware of the restriction; but it is no restriction at all when compared with the ordinary rules for loaning money. No loaner, I think, of reputation and standing, loans money in excess of 50 per cent of the value; and the only requirement here is that the borrower shall subscribe to the stock of the Federal land bank.

Mr. WALSH. I think not. I think it clearly appears that the loans made by the local agent are restricted in the matter of the interest charge just the same as the local association would be. I can not read the language in any other way. The language is:

Such loans—

That is, loans made by this local agent, instead of the association—shall be subject to the same conditions and restrictions as if the same were made through farm-loan associations.

Now, clearly, that means that they can charge no higher rate than could the local association, if there were a local association.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on line 19, page 29.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Restrictions on loans based on first mortgages," in section 12, page 30, line 1, after the word "agreement," to strike out "for the payment of interest, and." so as to make the clause read:

Second. Every such mortgage shall contain an agreement for the payment of a fixed number of semiannual installments sufficient to provide for an agreed rate of interest during the term and for the payment of the principal during and at the end of the term, on what is known as the amortization plan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 21, after the word "amounts," to strike out "and of the proper series," and in line 23, after the word "amounts," to strike out "and of the proper series," so as to make the clause read:

(b) By advance payments in cash in sums of $100, or any multiple thereof. In such case the Federal land bank receiving such payments shall purchase for its own account and credit at par upon the mortgage farm-loan bonds in suitable amounts; said land bank may call, as may be necessary, farm-loan bonds in suitable amounts, and when such calls shall have become effective shall credit such payments on such mortgage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 31, to insert:

Provided, That farm-loan bonds of any Federal land bank, tendered or purchased under the foregoing two paragraphs to extinguish the whole or any part of a mortgage loan, shall bear the rate of interest current on farm-loan bonds issued by such bank at the time such mortgage loan was made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 3, after the word "section," to strike out "twenty" and insert "nineteen," so as to make the clause read:

Seventh. No such loan shall exceed 50 per cent of the value of the land mortgaged, said value to be ascertained by appraisal, as provided in section 19 of this act. In making said appraisal the actual earning power of said land shall be a principal factor. A reappraisal may be permitted at any time in the discretion of the Federal land bank, and such additional loan may be granted as such reappraisal will warrant under the provisions of this paragraph. Whenever the amount of the loan applied for exceeds the amount that may be loaned under the appraisal as herein limited, such loan may be granted to the amount permitted under the terms of this paragraph without requiring a new application or appraisal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 16, before the word "shortly," to insert "who does not in his application promise," so as to read:

Eighth. No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time or who does not in his application promise shortly to become engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged. In case of the sale of the mortgaged land the farm loan association may, in its discretion, declare the mortgage thereon due and payable or permit said mortgage to be assumed by the purchaser.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator having the bill in charge a question in relation to the amendment which was just agreed to? Suppose the person states that he does intend shortly to become engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged and secures the loan and never does carry out his intention. Is there any penalty attached to it in any way?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; in section 12 the bill provides that if a borrower expends the money for any other purpose than the one specified in the application the land bank may immediately foreclose.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is all; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Simply the foreclosure of the mortgage on the property on which the loan is made?

Mr. HOLLIS. We discussed this matter, and it seemed that it might be a little harsh to hold a man too closely in order to give the land bank power to foreclose if he did not comply with his promises.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if the word "shortly," in line 16, has a distinct meaning in his mind? I suppose the committee are endeavoring to avoid being imposed upon and desire the applicant to be really engaged in the cultivation of the soil. I suppose that word has been used advisedly. Does the Senator think it is sufficiently restrictive?

Mr. HOLLIS. It seems to me that it is, because it would be left very largely to the discretion of the directors of the Federal land bank who had to deal with him. In one part of the country "shortly" might be pretty quick and in other parts of the country "shortly" might be a long time. We felt that it would not be wise to insist upon any particular time, because it might work hardship in some cases.

We went all over this matter two or three years ago in discussing the phrase "unfair competition." Many of us wanted to define it or try to define it, and many of us thought that we could not. Something has to be left to the decision of the bank and of the tribunal before whom it seeks to enforce its rights.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does not the Senator think that the eighth subdivision, if relieved of the condition in lines 15 and 16, would be more effective? Then it would read:

No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged.

It seems to me that that would be far better than "or who does not in his application promise shortly to become." It seems to me that the latter expression opens the door for more or less speculation, and makes very indefinite the actual cultivation of the soil by the applicant.

Mr. HOLLIS. My own idea was exactly that of the Senator. As it was drawn in the bill recommended by the joint committee, it was left that way; but the Senate Banking and Currency Committee thought that those who were not actually cultivating the soil, but were going to buy a farm, and who promised that they would engage in the cultivation of it themselves, ought to be allowed to come in. I think it would obviate the difficulty that seems to be rather widespread if we should fix some time—say, six months. It is more proper to do it, and it makes it definite.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It seems to me the word "promise" is rather elastic.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to suggest to the Senator, why not make the amendment read in this way:

Or who does not in his application promise to become, within six months after his application is made, engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. "Six months after the loan is made."

Mr. SMOOT. "Ninety days after the loan is made," if you are going to make the loan the basis.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. HOLLIS. If it is left "within six months," to date from the time of the promise, which would be the application, I think that would be definite enough.

I ask unanimous consent that the word "shortly" be stricken out and that, after the word "become," there be inserted the words "within six months."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether that language means that the applicant must himself be physically engaged upon the farm, or through employees or tenants?

Mr. SMOOT. It applies in the same way that the eighth paragraph applies, in the beginning of the paragraph:

No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time—

And so forth. So it certainly would apply to the person himself. The person must be engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. He does not have to be engaged with his own hands in actually working it himself.

Mr. SMOOT. It says so. It says—

No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged.

Mr. HOLLIS. I can easily explain what the committee meant. Whether they have adequately expressed it or not is for the Senate to determine.

The reason for the restriction, in the first place, is to avoid land speculation. We wanted to limit it to actual producers. If a man is personally engaged in the cultivation of his farm, either with his own hands or supervising those who are doing the work with their hands, the committee believed that the purpose would be fulfilled; and I think that is what a fair construction of the act would carry.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I happened this morning to take up the bill offered by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], and it strikes me that he has that matter well arranged:

That any owner of agricultural land within the United States who is living upon and farming such land, desiring a loan—

That could easily be accommodated to the situation where a man was about to buy a farm, the contract, of course, depending upon the loan going through. I think it would be more likely to prevent any possible speculation, which the committee was desirous of avoiding, than even the amendment which the Senator has just accepted.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. From what is the Senator from Minnesota reading?

Mr. CLAPP. I am reading from a bill offered by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, I see. I thought that language was in this bill somewhere.

Mr. CLAPP. In looking it over I noticed that this morning, and it occurred to me that the Senator from North Dakota had covered that point about as well as it could be covered:

That any owner of agricultural land within the United States who is living upon and farming such land, desiring a loan—

And so forth.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, as I understand the language which the Senator from Minnesota has read, that would restrict the loans to persons who were actually engaged in farming their own land, would it not?

Mr. CLAPP. It would not. It would not restrict the loan to the man who is actually doing the work, but he must be in fact a farmer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not mean by that that he shall necessarily do the work with his own hands, but that he is really engaged in operating a farm.

Mr. CLAPP. Really engaged in farming.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The provision to which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] directed attention will permit of a loan being made to a person who not only is not engaged in the cultivation of a farm, but who never will engage in it, because it is only necessary that he shall promise to become engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged; and if afterwards he does not carry his promise into effect no penalty is prescribed. The loan continues just the same.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand that the object of the committee was to limit this to men who were actually farmers, and to avoid cases where a man could use the assumed contemplated purchase of land as the basis of securing a loan under this bill. Now, if that is true—I assume, of course, that it is; I did not mean it in the form of a question—it strikes me that the Senator from North Dakota has put it in very good shape.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think I agree with what the Senator says about it. I think I agree that the language which the Senator has read from the other bill is the more appropriate language.

Mr. CLAPP. I was going to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if it did not occur to him that it would be a better form than the language which he has? If so, he can accept it.

Mr. HOLLIS. It seems to me that the language as it is now is as clear and definite as it can be made and still be workable:

No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time, or who does not in his application promise to become within six months, engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged.

We went over this matter at different times. This language was the result of a good deal of colloquy among men who had made farm loans. I remember that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] were discussing it at that time and this was the result. I should rather hesitate to accept on the spur of the moment something that I had not had a chance to study.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question: Suppose some real estate speculator acquires a farm or two farms, or a dozen farms, for that matter, on which he desires to obtain a loan or loans, and in his application he makes the promise that within six months he will himself engage in the cultivation of the farm or farms mortgaged and then fails to redeem his promise. Is there any way of enforcing it? Is there any penalty prescribed?

Mr. HOLLIS. The only penalty is that if he fails to expend the money for the purpose indicated, the loan may be at once foreclosed. We discussed that matter, and at first we thought of annexing a penalty if a man made a false promise, punishing him for making a false promise. Upon reflection, however, it seemed to the committee that that was being a little too harsh with a man who might be used to making promises in his applications for loans and who was a little careless about fulfilling them. It did not seem to the committee that real estate speculators could impose on the lank banks very often, and if they did in a case now and then no great harm would be done, because the security is good, and could be taken and used to collect the money.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But let me make a suggestion to the Senator. As I understand, the officers of the Federal land bank are to pass upon these applications.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Instead of the provision that the Senator has inserted—

Who does not in his application promise within six months to become engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged—

Why not say—

Any person who is not at the time engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged, or whom the officers of the land bank, upon investigation, are not satisfied will engage within the period—

Leaving the discretion with the officers of the land bank instead of having it based upon the mere promise of the individual borrowing the money?

Mr. HOLLIS. I get the idea of the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The officers of the land bank can very readily determine by a little investigation whether the man is making the application in good faith and really intends to farm the land or not.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think they will undoubtedly do that. If he makes a promise, then they will decide whether or not he is going to keep the promise. I will consider that; or, if the Senator cares to present it in the form of an amendment, I shall be glad to examine it carefully.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before this matter is passed I desire to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that there is very considerable doubt as to whether a foreclosure could be had for failure to carry out the promise provided in subdivision the twelfth, to which he has called our attention. There is quite a little difference between using the money which he borrows for some purpose other than that for which he borrows it and his failure to carry out his promise to engage in the farming business. I do not think a foreclosure would be justified under the provisions of subdivision twelfth for a failure to observe the promise contemplated in subdivision A. I do not think any penalty is attached; and, accordingly, I think the language of the bill as it originally stood is to be preferred to that as it would be if the amendment proposed by the committee were adopted. It would improve it, I think, to put in the words "who does not intend," so that it shall read:

No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time, or who does not intend shortly to become.

In the application he will be obliged to state either the one thing or the other; either that he is actually engaged or that he intends to become engaged. Now, foreclosure would not follow, but there is a penal provision later on making him answerable for any false statement that he makes in his application; and while it would be difficult to prove that he did not intend to engage in it, that would be the only recourse that could be had. It is my opinion that it would be unwise to penalize a man who made a loan expecting to go into the business himself, but who in the meantime, we will say, transferred his land, so that after he got the money, and before he went into the business, he sold the land, and thus abandoned his purpose.

It occurs to me that it would be unwise, as well as unjust, to make the mortgage subject to forfeiture; and so I think it is wise that it was not provided in subdivision twelfth that foreclosure should follow as a penalty for failure to observe the promise. I believe, though, that the whole purpose would be subserved by making the language as I have indicated:

Or who does not intend shortly to become.

Making him penally liable if he was fraudulent in making the representation concerning his purpose.

I make that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. Does he think that a person who would state in his application that he intended within six months to become engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged, and failed to redeem his promise, would be liable as for making a false statement?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; certainly not, if there was nothing further. If he made it in perfect good faith, and something afterwards intervened making him change his mind, he could not be made personally liable. That is the point I am making—that he ought not to be made either penally liable nor civilly liable.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I agree with the Senator that he ought not to be made liable, and I do not see upon what theory he could be made liable.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He might be prevented from doing it by sickness or inability from some other cause.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator from Montana makes an excellent suggestion, and I think it might be amplified by saying:

Or who does not establish, to the satisfaction of the land bank, that he will become, within six months, engaged—

And so forth.

Mr. HOLLIS. The suggestion of the Senator from Utah is practically allowing the original language to stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think that is true. I think that would be the proper construction of the original language.

Mr. HOLLIS. That was my own idea, and that was the way the bill was drafted in the first place; but in the committee some one wanted the promise, and so it was inserted. I think if we reverted to the original language we would get it as nearly as we could get it for practical purposes. In that case the land bank would have to make up its mind whether or not the man did intend shortly to become engaged in farming the land mortgaged. That would be a fact. Does he intend? That is a fact which they can decide. Now, they may be wrong in their decision, and he may change his mind; but I think that is as near as they can come to it.

I suggest that this amendment be passed over, and I will bring it up at some later time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I notice in line 20, paragraph 8, that the provision which was intended to give some status of protection to the heirs of the mortgagor is stricken out.

Mr. HOLLIS. But it is replaced by another one that immediately follows.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the Senator mean at the bottom of this page?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes. That was done at the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota, providing for the death of the mortgagor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think that is the same. Then, the Senator thinks, does he, that where the discretionary power is left with the board to terminate the loan that gives all the protection that is needed?

Mr. HOLLIS. It seems to me so. I drew it the other way originally, but this was a committee amendment, and I believe the committee amendment is wise. We float farm-loan bonds based on mortgages as security. We do that on the representation that these bonds are absolutely safe; they are backed by mortgages that are perfectly sound. The land bank, in case of the death of a mortgagor, will be very anxious to keep its money out and allow his family to carry it on as long as they do so properly; but the right to foreclose must rest with the land bank, because if its mortgages are not sound, if those who are in possesion are not carrying on the farm properly, and waste is being committed, then the land bank ought to be allowed to foreclose in order to save its own creditor; and after a great deal of discussion this language was finally agreed upon. I am aware that the two sides of it can be stated with great clearness and cogency, but this is the one that is usually found to prevail in all communities—that in case of death the mortgagee must have the right to decide whether he wishes to foreclose or to allow others to carry on the farm.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not believe that it would be satisfactory to the American farmer. I do not think many farmers would like to make a mortgage upon their farms under the provision that if they should die, although the interest was met and the debt had not matured, somebody would have the privilege of foreclosing it.

Mr. HOLLIS. Under this provision there must be a default before they can foreclose. As long as the interest is paid and the conditions are met they can not foreclose. There must be a default and there must be a necessity to protect the loan.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. "In case of the death of the mortgagor, the mortgagee may, on default and if necessary to protect the loan."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That does not meet the situation. The clause "if necessary to protect the loan" puts into the hands of the mortgagee the power to entirely disregard the right of the heirs of the mortgagor.

Mr. HOLLIS. But there must be both a default and a necessity to protect the loan. If there is a default and if it is necessary to protect the loan, they may foreclose. If there is no default, they can not foreclose.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Do the heirs become ipso facto successors of the mortgagor in the loaning company?

Mr. HOLLIS. They do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not find anything in the language to justify that statement.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is what it says, as I understand it.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 20, after the word "purchaser," to strike out "In case of the death of the mortgagor, his heir or heirs, or his legal representative or representatives, shall have the option, within 60 days of such death, to assume the mortgage obligations of the deceased and carry on the mortgaged farm" and to insert "In case of the death of the mortgagor, the mortgagee may, on default and if necessary to protect the loan, declare the mortgage due and payable and take all steps necessary for its collection."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to have that amendment passed over.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am willing to have it passed over.

Mr. WALSH. Before we pass from this subject I wish to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire what is the purpose of the preceding clause, "in case of the sale of the mortgaged land, the farm-loan association may, in its discretion, declare the mortgage thereon due and payable, or permit said mortgage to be assumed by the purchaser." Why penalize a man for selling his land? Why not invite him to do so, and why should any permit be given to foreclose?

Mr. HOLLIS. He might sell to a drunkard or a man of bad character, and the bank might feel that the farm would run down in the hands of such a man. Therefore there ought to be an option of foreclosure, if they did not care to have this security handled by that sort of a man.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the Senator feel that that will be a very serious restriction upon alienation.

Mr. HOLLIS. I should think not, because as long as the purchaser is all right the land bank will be entirely willing to permit the mortgage to be assumed.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, I appreciate that this scheme is to a large extent cooperative, and each member of the local association in a way assumes some kind of a liability for all of the mortgagors, and inasmuch as they may exercise discretion in admitting strangers to membership, it might be proper to refuse to permit the assignment; but it occurred to me, when my attention was first directed to it, that it would be an unjustifiable restriction on alienation.

Mr. HOLLIS. That was carefully considered by the committee and discussed at some length, and they decided that this was the best way to put it.

Mr. CURTIS. Would not a provision of that kind prevent the sale of property? Would it not affect the price the seller might get for it? It seems to me that it would.

Mr. HOLLIS. I should think not. It would be perfectly easy to write to the land bank and say I want to sell to such a man; have you any objection? And the local association to whom the loan was made would report that the man is all right; there is no objection to it. It seems to me it is a very simple provision.

Mr. CURTIS. Why not provide that the property shall not be sold without consent?

Mr. HOLLIS. Consent of whom? He can pay up his mortgage if he wants to, and then he can sell to anyone he pleases, but as long as his land is mortgaged the land bank ought to have some choice as to whose hands it should go into.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator think it would handicap very much a transaction of this kind? Take the case of very long loans on the amortization plan. A large part of the loan may be paid off. The privilege of selling them and letting the loan continue becomes an asset that is very valuable. Of course no amendment has been offered yet to make a change.

Mr. HOLLIS. If the man is all right, it is such a man as is wanted in the association. If anything is the matter with him, the land bank ought to have the decision.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It ought to be a matter of right with the owner of the land to sell with the continuation of his mortgage, unless there should be some objection to the man.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think that discretion must rest with some one, and under any workable mortgage plan I think it must rest with the mortgagee. I should not put it anywhere else.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is there not a general right on the part of the loan association to foreclose on default?

Mr. HOLLIS. The land bank is always the one that forecloses. The land bank loans the money, and there is a general right in it to foreclose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not see the necessity of putting in a clause that "in case of the death of the mortgagor, the mortgagee may on default and if necessary to protect the loan," can "declare the mortgage due" and foreclose it. They could do it anyhow.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think that is so, but that expresses the idea of the framers of the bill that it should not be done without default. If we did not handle the subject at all people might claim that it might be done without default. When we state that it may be done on default and if necessary to protect the loan, we have declared ourselves on that subject.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If it be true, as I think it is, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia, that the mortgagee would have the power upon default to declare the mortgage due and proceed to enforce it; in other words, that the power would exist if this clause is omitted, then have you not introduced a clause which is apt to lead to some confusion, namely, taking that clause by itself, when you say that in case of the death of the mortgagor the mortgagee may on default declare the mortgage due and payable, and so on, the implication at once arises that in any other state of facts, even upon a default, you could not declare it to have failed? It seems to me that by putting in that amendment you have introduced an element of confusion in the bill and it would be better to omit it. It really adds nothing to the general provision of the bill which is contained in the twelfth subdivision and which gives the mortgagee the option upon a default to declare the mortgage due and payable, whether the mortgagor is living or not.

Mr. HOLLIS. The situation which the bill is in illustrates the difficulty of handling a complicated subject like this even in committee, and it is much worse on the floor of the Senate. I drafted the clause that has been stricken out by the committee. I drew it myself thinking that that was the best one, and I gave it careful consideration. After we had had it in committee and discussed it for two or three hours we finally agreed on the other proposition. I did not like it as well as the original, others liked it better, and the result is that it does state something that would follow without the statement of it.

I think it should be, now, perhaps, in this way, that in case of the death of the mortgagor the mortgagee may foreclose only in case of default and if necessary to protect the loan; that is, that the death of the mortgagee alone would not be sufficient to place the mortgage in default.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to me that the language now suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire does not alter the sense. It is simply another way of stating the same thing.

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Senator will pardon me, I think in many States in the case of the death of the mortgagor the debt becomes due and the mortgagee could instantly foreclose. If we provided in the bill that a foreclosure in case of death shall only be when in default we should be stating something that is positive and means what is intended. That is my thought.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to me that the original language which the Senator used in the bill is preferable.

Mr. HOLLIS. I should be very glad to see it restored, but that is, of course, for the Senate to determine. If anyone cares to move that the amendment of the committee be not agreed to, I shall not object.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood that it was to go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senate is ready to vote on it I would very much prefer the language of the original bill to the amendment of the committee. I still do not know what the amendment means. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests that in some States a mortgage becomes due on the death of the mortgagor.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the Senator must be mistaken in that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I never heard of such a rule anywhere. I do not think that is the case.

Mr. HOLLIS. When a man dies the debts that he owes, whether a mortgage or not, are due and payable and collectible against the estate. If the security is not sufficient they will collect out of his other assets; they are not obliged to wait to foreclose. I state what I know to be the fact in my own State, because I have had experience.

I observe Senators shaking their heads, but that is so in some States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A note due five years from date in New Hampshire would mature upon the death of the man who gave the note?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly; and he would be allowed discount for the time it had to run. It must be so; that is the only way that you can settle an estate. You can not settle an estate in any other way.

Mr. CURTIS. Does not the mortgage provide that the heir shall pay the mortgage in case of death?

Mr. HOLLIS. Some mortgages do and others do not. I can draw a mortgage in a hundred different ways.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My own view of the meaning of the amendment of the committee would be that it was a limitation upon the right to foreclose. In case of default the association would have to prove not only that there was default but that it was necessary to protect the loan. I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment of the committee and retain the language in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that some one a few moments ago asked that it might go over.

Mr. HOLLIS. That was the preceding amendment in lines 14, 15, and 16.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out and inserting.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was continued, as follows:

Ninth. The amount of loans to any one borrower shall in no case exceed a maximum of $10,000.

Tenth. Every applicant for a loan under the terms of this act shall make application on a form to be prescribed for that purpose by the Federal Farm Loan Board, and such applicant shall state the objects to which the proceeds of said loan are to be applied, and shall afford such other information as may be required.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question? The paragraph just read, I may say to the Senator from New Hampshire, gives me concern in its application. Examining the bill I discover that it prohibits loans in an amount of more than $10,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to have order in the Chamber.

Mr. LEWIS. It is my fault. It did not occur to me that other Senators would be interested in my confusion on this phase. This is my confusion, I will say to the Senator from Michigan, which I am submitting to the Senator from New Hampshire. A provision limits the loan to $10,000, but suppose there are three brothers, suppose there is a large family, suppose there is a partnership, and they all own a fee out in the West, a tract of land, jointly. Can each of those borrow $10,000?

Mr. HOLLIS. The limitation is here strictly to any one borrower. If I were to construe that as a member of the court, I would say that if there were three borrowing jointly they could borrow $30,000, but I might be wrong.

Mr. LEWIS. But that surely can not be the object. The object was merely to allow any one piece of land to raise $10,000, was it not?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; not the land. That was intended for the borrower. For instance, the borrower might have three or four different parcels of land, and it was not intended that there should be a loan of $10,000 on one, but the same farmer, as long as he personally attended to the cultivation, might include in the maximum of $10,000 as many tracts as he wanted.

Mr. LEWIS. If I am not disturbing the Senator, this is the point: Suppose one man has three tracts of land. If he could borrow then $10,000 on each he would borrow $30,000. Suppose, on the other hand three brothers or three partners or three associates would own one tract of land, could each of them borrow $10,000?

Mr. HOLLIS. That would be my opinion. It might be wrong.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. May I ask the Senator the object in specifying the limit on the loan at $10,000?

Mr. HOLLIS. The idea is to prevent land speculation. When a large fund is made available for the purchase of land it tends to increase speculation. That has been the experience in Europe. It is expected that a man who has security sufficient for more than $10,000 can get an accommodation from private persons—from a private bank—at a low rate without resorting to this system. This system is intended more particularly to help a small farmer to get a small loan. In the first bill drafted the maximum was fixed at $4,000, but it has steadily grown to $10,000. The aggregate composite idea of the committee was $10,000 in each case.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. My reason for asking the question is because in my State there are many large farms and many large borrowers, and this provision would eliminate a man wanting to borrow in excess of $10,000.

Mr. HOLLIS. There is no restriction as to the amount of the loan on a private joint-stock bank, and I should expect that men of that type could get accommodation at a private bank for larger sums at a low rate of interest.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 12, after the word "shall," to strike out "undertake" and insert "pay simple interest on defaulted payments at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, and by express covenant in his mortgage deed shall undertake," so as to read:

Eleventh. Every borrower shall pay simple interest on defaulted payments at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, and by express covenant in his mortgage deed shall undertake to pay when due all taxes, etc.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, before we reach that paragraph I should like to ask about paragraph 10. If a man is going to borrow money and is permitted to borrow only 50 per cent of the value of his farm and must state that he is going to live on the farm himself and operate it, why should he state what he wants the money for?

Mr. HOLLIS. Because the object of the bill is to furnish money for productive purposes only. It is not intended to allow a man to borrow money for living expenses; it is only for productive purposes. It is to prevent speculation, as I have explained in regard to other provisions. It is intended to help people borrow for certain specified purposes, and that is the reason why they are asked to state what those purposes are.

Mr. CURTIS. After the man gets his money he can do as he pleases with it?

Mr. HOLLIS. If he spends it for some other purpose, the land bank may foreclose it, if they care to do so.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Suppose a farmer wanted money to educate his boy and send him to college, or to educate his daughter, or for any other worthy purpose such as that, he could not borrow money for that purpose under the bill?

Mr. HOLLIS. No. The reason, if I may explain further, is this: It is intended under this plan to loan money to the farmer so that he may pay it back at some time, so that it will earn money with which he can pay it back. That is why it is limited to productive purposes; that is the thought and intention and scope of the bill. However worthy it may be to educate a boy at college or to loan money to a sick neighbor, this bill does not intend to permit that; but this bill will have this effect: It will furnish a great deal of new money, so that money that is now loaned will be available to these other purposes at a lower rate of interest; and I think it will have a tendency in the direction the Senator suggests.

Now, as to the pending amendment, which reads:

Eleventh. Every borrower shall pay simple interest on defaulted payments at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, and by express covenant in his mortgage deed shall undertake to pay when due all taxes.

The rate of 6 per cent seems to me not to be enough. I think in many cases a farmer would say: "Well, I would rather be in default and pay 6 per cent than to pay out." I think it should be as high as 10 per cent; and I am going to ask unanimous consent that in line 13 the word "six" be stricken out and the word "ten" substituted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How would it read then?

Mr. HOLLIS. It will read "10 per centum" instead of "6 per centum."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But how will the context read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Every borrower shall pay simple interest on defaulted payments at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, and by express covenant in his mortgage deed shall undertake to pay when due all taxes or assessments which may be lawfully assessed against the land mortgage.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have not looked into the matter carefully, but in some of the States, for instance, in the State of Michigan, the legal rate of interest is 6 per cent. The law provides that a loan shall be forfeited in case a larger rate is charged. This, for instance, would permit the charging or levying of 10 per cent where the legal rate in the State would be 6 per cent. Does the Senator think there would be any conflict there that would affect the validity of the act?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; Congress has authority to annex any condition it wishes if it has authority to pass the act at all.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, does the Senator think that any money would be borrowed under those conditions and with those restrictions placed upon it?

Mr. HOLLIS. Oh, certainly. Assume that I had a mortgage on which the regular rate was 6 per cent—that would be the maximum under this bill—and the time comes around to pay; the land bank has got to pay the interest on the bonds that have been issued by it. If it does not receive its interest promptly, it can not pay the interest that it owes. Therefore it must be able in some way to stimulate the borrower to pay promptly. Assuming that all the borrower has got to pay on his defaulted payment is 6 per cent, he would say, "I would a good deal rather let it run and take it out of the land bank; that is all I have got to pay anyhow, 6 per cent." So we must annex something that will stimulate the borrower to pay back. My experience is that that rate is usually fixed at 10 per cent in the States—it is in my State—and if a man does not pay his taxes on his personal property he is charged 10 per cent by the State on the default. That is done to force payment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was thinking of what the effect would be in the State of Michigan, for instance. Men with good security there can borrow 50 per cent on that security at 6 per cent anywhere in the State, and they do not have to pay 10 per cent if there is any default. I am wondering what inducement there would be for a Michigan farmer to join the banking system which is proposed in the bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Michigan farmer is fortunate enough to be getting his money now at as low a rate as this bill will provide, the only advantage he would get would be in an amortized long-term loan, so that he would know he would not have to renew within two or three or five years, and that he could make small payments, having an opportunity to pay out. I hope, of course, that we are going to get the rate as low as 5 or 4½ or even 4 per cent eventually, but I was stating a case. Of course, the bill provides a maximum rate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What does the Senator think of this suggestion: Leave the rate at 6 per cent, and after the words "per annum," in line 14, insert the words "together with a penalty of 4 per cent"?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not think that would change it at all; and I think it would be objectionable, because it does not make a plain statement of what could be more plainly stated. It would have exactly the same result in either case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was thinking about the building and loan associations in connection with the administration of which penalties under certain conditions are enforced, because the imposition of additional interest charges would be illegal; and, it occured to me that, as perhaps the farm-loan associations might be regarded as being similar in character, the amendment might meet the situation.

Mr. HOLLIS. The reason the building and loan associations provide penalties is because they have not the right to impose a higher rate than the legal rate; but we have a right to impose any rate of interest we see fit in this bill. I feel very confident of that. I would rather have it at a flat 10 per cent per annum, which would accomplish the same result as would be accomplished by the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is now nearly half past 5 o'clock; the conferees of the House and the Senate meet tonight for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Can we not finish this paragraph?

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator if, after we finish the paragraph we are now on, he would not agree to adjourn?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is entirely agreeable to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, on page 33, line 15, after the word "taxes," to insert the words "or assessments," so as to read:

To pay when due all taxes or assessments which may be lawfully assessed against the land mortgaged.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the next amendment may provoke considerable discussion, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 26, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 25, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, our heavenly Father, Source of Life and Light and Love, impart unto us strength for the duties before us and guide our thoughts that we may control our will and render unto Thee and our fellow men faithful and efficient service in the things which make for good government, that we may be worthy servants of the people, that Thy will may be done and Thy purposes fulfilled, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. In Jesus Christ, our Lord, who taught us the way and the truth and the life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF CALENDAR—RELIEF OF MAIL CONTRACTORS.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, by direction of the Committee on Claims, that the bill H. R. 11150, now on the Private Calendar, a bill for the relief of mail contractors, be placed on the Union Calendar, as it is a public bill and does not belong on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change of calendar will be made.

There was no objection.

REMAINS OF THE LATE ELSIE M'CAULLEY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and consider the bill S. 2290. There can not be any objection to it. It is simply to remove the remains of a person who died 12 or 15 years ago with diphtheria, and the health department has said that the removal now would be all right.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2290) authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Elsie McCaulley from Glenwood Cemetery, D. C., to Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this bill was in order yesterday.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It was, and on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman intended to call it up when the House went into consideration of the Agricultural bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I did; yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the health officer of the District of Columbia be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Elsie McCaulley from Glenwood Cemetery, D. C., to Philadelphia, Pa.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE] had been exhausted. The question now is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. COX. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general administrative expenses connected with the above-mentioned lines of work, including cooperation with other Federal bureaus, departments, boards, and commissions, on request from them, $12,560.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

This is the item that provides for general administrative expenses under the items which have preceded it, and therefore debate on any of those items is in order on the motion I have made. I voted for the appropriation for the enforcement of what is known as the migratory-bird law. I have voted for that appropriation ever since it has been carried in the bill, because I am of the opinion that the best way to defeat a bad law is to enforce it. If this law had been rigidly enforced, there would have been not three judicial decisions against its constitutionality, but a score. If it were necessary in order to protect migratory birds in these United States to override the fundamental law of the land to extend Federal police power into every part of the Union, if it were necessary in order to afford better hunting for a few sportsmen to have a Government of orders in council formulated by a clerk in the Agricultural Department promulgated by an executive officer—if this were necessary for the protection of birds, then it would be infinitely better that the birds should decrease in number and absolutely perish from the earth than that American liberty should be destroyed and that the foundation of the Government should be undermined.

It is not necessary to do these things in order to reasonably and properly protect bird life in the United States. It is not necessary to legislate along the lines of the migratory-bird law. It is true that lawless people, seeking to accomplish their purposes, largely selfish, always desire to take a short cut to reach the object sought; and the curious thing about it is that these people do not seem to have any regard for the effect of the legislation they propose or approve upon their country or upon its institutions. Never in all the history of the American Congress has legislation been proposed which was so dangerous, and which in the long run, if enforced, would be so utterly repudiated by the people of the country as the migratory-bird law—a law under which an order promulgated by an executive officer determines what shall be a felony, and prescribes the punishment for a law under which, for the protection of the robin, the wren, the sparrow, and the peewee, we allow a Federal officer to go into the States of the Union and exercise absolute and arbitrary police power to drag a barefoot boy that robs a blackbird's nest before a Federal court and, if found guilty, incarcerate him in a Federal dungeon. Of course, the Supreme Court will overturn this law when the court reaches it; and the surest way to have the law pronounced unconstitutional, the most certain and effective way to arouse public sentiment against the effort to extend Federal police power throughout the country, is to enforce the law. Therefore I am in favor of the appropriation.

We hear much about the importance of protecting insectivorous birds as a defense for this legislation; but if one looks into the matter carefully he will find that most of the support for this Federal control comes from duck hunters who want the Federal Government to improve the duck hunting.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the migratory-bird law is going to be declared constitutional or unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, but if declared unconstitutional it seems to me it would be a crime and a tremendous shame unless some equally effective national law that will stand the test can be enacted. This ought to be one great Nation, so far as migratory-bird life is concerned, and we ought to recognize that this law does not have anything to do with grouse or quail or other birds that are not migratory. It refers to birds that nest in one State or country and winter in another—to the ducks and geese that rear their young, most of them, in Canada, and to a great many insectivorous birds. Sometimes birds which have never been regarded as game birds in one State are allowed to be shot in others. A few States have no game laws at all, or did not have any until recently, and the only way that these birds can be given protection is to regard the United States as a Nation and to protect them by national policy and national effort. Even that will not save some of them from extermination. As I stated the other day, protected bird refuges are absolutely necessary to give some of them nesting places and wintering places where they will not be slaughtered in large numbers.

I have no doubt whatever but that the House of Representatives will stand by the migratory-bird law, as it already has done, but I thought the remarks of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who says that he has always voted for it in order to defeat it ultimately, ought to have some answer.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. Is there any real, practical way of protecting migratory-bird life in this country except through some national legislation?

Mr. PLATT. I do not believe there is.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it possible to protect migratory birds by any form of State legislation in the several States?

Mr. PLATT. No; I do not believe it is.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Does the gentleman think the present law protects the migratory birds?

Mr. PLATT. I have no doubt it does, so far as it is enforced.

Mr. AYRES. While some localities permit them to be taken for the market, other localities do not give that permission?

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman means in the States?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know very much about the details of the enforcement of the law within the States, but it makes a great deal of difference how closely the birds are congregated and how they are killed, especially when they are massed together in the winter time, when they roost. There are some places where they should not be allowed to be killed at all.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. COX. As I understood the gentleman to say, it is wholly impracticable to protect birds otherwise than by Federal statute?

Mr. PLATT. Migratory birds; yes.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman believe that if the States should enact proper laws and the grand juries and prosecuting attorneys of those States would see to it that the laws were enforced, the birds could be adequately protected in that way?

Mr. PLATT. Well, in Chesapeake Bay, where canvasback and red-head ducks used to gather from Canada and from the Dakotas and northern Michigan and Minnesota and Wisconsin, they were killed off until very few were left.

Mr. COX. They were killed in Chesapeake Bay?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; and in the adjacent waters of Maryland and Virginia.

Mr. COX. Was it not practicable for the States of Maryland and Virginia, having jurisdiction over those waters, to protect those birds exactly as other States protect the quail—by having an open and a closed season?

Mr. PLATT. To some extent, yes; but the sentiment of the people in local communities and neighborhoods where many migratory birds gather is often to let them be killed as long as there are any left.

Mr. COX. Is it not just as practicable to protect the ducks in that way as it would be to protect the quail through the enforcements of the State laws?

Mr. PLATT. No. The trouble is, the State laws differ greatly and are not uniformly enforced. If one State enforces the law and others do not, it would be practically impossible to save the ducks. One State might save its quails, although all were destroyed in adjoining States; but no one State could save ducks and geese in that way, because the same birds saved by enforcement of a good law in one State might all be killed in another.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Would the gentleman permit a personal question?

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. FESS. I would like to know what effect the gentleman's tramping the woods with John Burrough in the study of birds has had on his love for bird life?

Mr. PLATT. It has had a good deal to do with it. That is where I got a great part of it.

Mr. FESS. I think the House ought to know that the gentleman has some knowledge beyond what simply comes from general training through the woods.

Mr. PLATT. John Burrough happens to live within 7 miles of my home, and I used to see a good deal of him before I came to Washington.

Mr. FESS. And it is not only a personal matter with the gentleman, but a national matter with him, as it is with me, that the law ought to protect these birds?

Mr. PLATT. It certainly is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. The pro forma amendments are withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for general expenses, $530,200.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] made inquiry of the gentleman [Mr. PLATT] who was addressing the House as to whether there is any other way than by Federal statute by which we could protect the migratory birds of the country. Evidently the gentleman believes that there is no other way. I should exceedingly regret it if that were true.

I do not believe it to be true; but if it were true, we should not attempt in this way, contrary to the spirit of our institutions, to protect those birds. This country has a most sad and unhappy record of homicides. In no civilized nation on earth is human life held so lightly as in this "land of the free and home of the brave." Our record of violent deaths, of homicides, exceeds that, as I recall it, of almost any other civilized people of the world, and I have no doubt but there are people who believe the only way to cure this awful evil, this terrible stain on the public name, is by extending Federal police power over the country at large. No one is proposing it, however much as at times it seems necessary and effective, as it undoubtedly would be. But for the protection of the sparrow and the wren and the blackbird and the waterfowl we do a thing that is almost as dangerous as it would be to extend Federal police control and authority over all the Union for all purposes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the gentleman is thoroughly agreed that as to bird life, as well as insect life, there is no such thing as State lines, and the gentleman is thoroughly——

Mr. MONDELL. Well, as to crime there is no such thing as State lines, except as to the jurisdiction within which it may be punished.

Mr. BORLAND. That is a different question. But as to insect life, such as insect pests, the cattle tick, the boll weevil, and so on, the gentleman believes that the Federal Government should use the most effective power to exterminate the pests?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; as to inquiring into causes and into methods of extermination; but to defend the establishment of absolute police power throughout the Union for the protection of birds, when no one would attempt to justify it for the protection of human life, requires a lame and crooked logic that I can not understand.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman's argument were carried out it would involve the abandonment of the control of the cattle tick by the General Government.

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all; that is a very different matter. I am voicing no complaint of the people of my State against this law. I have heard little complaint of it. I do not think it has been enforced there. I take the same position of opposition in regard to it now that I did when it was passed—that it is contrary to the spirit and genius of our institutions, and that eventually, if it were enforced, this kind of bureaucratic control would breed contempt of law and anarchy throughout the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DIVISION OF PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, as I recall this bill, two years ago it provided for the publication of so many farmers' bulletins, to be distributed to each Member of Congress and each Senator. Am I correct about that?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is mistaken about that. The appropriation for the publication of farmers' bulletins as such is carried in the sundry civil bill, an item of $400,000. I understand there is an increase of $100,000 estimated for this year.

Mr. COX. Is the same plan for the distribution of farmers' bulletins to be carried out in the future as in the past?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Division of Publications, $197,530.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I will ask the chairman if the committee has made an estimate as to the use of these various publications, so as to know whether the general public appreciates the receipt of them.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I read as many of the farmers' bulletins as I have time to read, and judging them by these readings I take them to be very valuable publications; and judging from my own mail, and the request for these publications, I think the public very generally appreciate the value of them.

Mr. FESS. Are they generally sent out promiscuously to all the people, or just to those who have written for them?

Mr. LEVER. That depends on the individual Member of Congress himself. Each Member is allowed 15,000 of these farmers' bulletins. I try to carry out the policy myself of placing a little notice in each of the papers in my district, stating that I have a certain list of farmers' bulletins, which I will be glad to send to those who request them. That usually brings me a very large number of requests for certain bulletins. I feel that that is the better plan of making the distribution, rather than to send out the bulletins indiscriminately.

Mr. FESS. Is there anything in the suggestion that a publication received without paying for it is regarded as worthless and thrown into the wastebasket without reading?

Mr. LEVER. That has not been my experience.

Mr. FESS. Personally, I think the Government is publishing some very valuable bulletins.

Mr. LEVER. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. FESS. And if the public could discriminate, so as to know that they are of great value, it seems to me that there could be a wonderfully large amount of good done; but I have been a little in doubt as to just how to proceed to get these publications into the hands of the people who would appreciate them, and how to get them to read them.

Mr. LEVER. My plan has worked out very well in my own district. I send to the newspapers the statement that I have for distribution bulletin number so-and-so, dealing with such and such a subject. Probably I will attach to that list a dozen or fifteen bulletins on various subjects, and I state that I will be very glad to supply anyone writing to me for any of those bulletins. That usually brings a large demand, the result being that I get a demand for certain kinds of bulletins that the people want. I think the indiscriminate distribution of the bulletins probably does not bring the best results.

Mr. FESS. The department is increasing the number of bulletins all the time, is it not?

Mr. LEVER. I understand that there is an estimate for $100,000 additional appropriation to be carried in the sundry civil bill for the publication of additional farmers' bulletins. For a number of years the appropriation has been $500,000, which gives each Member approximately 15,000 bulletins a year.

Mr. FESS. Now and then they publish one for which there is an unusual demand. For example, there is the bulletin on Fifty Common Birds, for which I have had very many applications and of which the supply is exhausted.

Mr. LEVER. The department has the right to reprint that bulletin, and I hope that they will do it, because it is a very valuable bulletin for which there is great demand.

Mr. FESS. I simply wanted to say that I think the proper expenditure of this particular fund is justifiable many, many times, and my only question is as to how to get a better use of it.

Mr. LEVER. I am glad the gentleman has made that statement.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. After a person has exhausted his allotment of farmers' bulletins can he exchange any of his other documents for farmers' bulletins, or how can be proceed to secure an additional number?

Mr. LEVER. The only way to do that would be to take up the matter with the superintendent of documents. I know of no way by which a Member could make a direct exchange with the Agricultural Department. It might be done through the superintendent of documents, although I am not informed as to that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The superintendent of documents would have the authority, and he would negotiate an exchange, would he?

Mr. LEVER. He probably would. I am sure he has authority to sell some of these publications and probably all of them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, library, Department of Agriculture: One librarian, $2,000; 1 clerk, class 3; 1 clerk, class 2; 5 clerks, class 1; 3 clerks, at $1,080 each; 3 clerks, at $1,020 each; 3 clerks, at $1,000 each; 6 clerks, at $900 each; 1 clerk, $840; 1 junior library assistant, messenger, or messenger boy, $720; 1 junior library assistant or messenger boy, $660; 3 junior library assistants, or messenger boys, at $600 each; 1 messenger, messenger boy, or laborer, $480; 1 messenger, messenger boy, or laborer, $360; 2 charwomen, at $480 each; in all, $31,520.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what on earth they do with all these employees in the library in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. LEVER. The library of the Department of Agriculture contains something like 137,000 volumes. These employees are necessary to meet the demands of various departmental chiefs and others who use the library in carrying on the work of the department.

Mr. BORLAND. Is that purely a technical library—137,000 volumes?

Mr. LEVER. Purely a technical library; yes.

Mr. BORLAND. And it is solely for the use of the department?

Mr. LEVER. It is solely for the use of the department, except that they have the right to loan their books to agricultural experiment stations for a limited time. I will say to the gentleman that this is undoubtedly the greatest technical library of the kind in the world.

Mr. BORLAND. But it is not open to the public in any sense?

Mr. LEVER. No.

Mr. BORLAND. It is just for the use of the department?

Mr. LEVER. It is for the use of the department and for agricultural experiment stations.

Mr. BORLAND. That seems to be a pretty large amount simply to keep up a technical library in a department of the Government.

Mr. LEVER. I would think not. This appropriation has run for a good many years without any increase at all, although the work of the library has increased—that is, the number of volumes has increased.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have always been pretty strongly against the increase of overhead charges in the departments in Washington. I think if we pretend to spend any money for the farmer we ought to get it as near the farmer as we can. The sums we spend for overhead charges are in some cases unjustifiable, and the more we spend for them the less we are spending for the real benefit of the farmer. That has been my general theory on all these propositions. That was my theory a little while ago when I tried to get Congress to adopt a proposition to get a full day's work out of the clerks. I believe the overhead charges are too heavy and too much of this money such as we have here for clerical force is an unjustifiable increase in the overhead charges for the department. I can not understand how they can have $31,000 for employees for a purely technical library. This is not for the increase of the library itself, simply for the employees. It is only one of the score or more of technical libraries in Washington. Every department has built one for its use. They are not open for the public generally, but for the people who happen to be in that particular department. That is the case here, and it seems to me a pretty high overhead charge that we are supposed to appropriate for agriculture throughout the country.

Mr. COX. The gentleman would not vote to reduce it?

Mr. BORLAND. I will not move to reduce it, for I do not think it would do any good.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of information I want to direct the attention of the chairman to page 67, line 22, five charwomen at $240 each.

Mr. LEVER. We have not reached that point in the bill yet; we are seven pages away from it.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. The items have been read.

Mr. LEVER. But the gentleman said page 67.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I got the wrong page. I want to know as a matter of justice to these poor women who likely do more hard work than most any person there, and especially work harder than the messenger boys, if the gentleman would not be willing to make that compensation $300 each per year?

Mr. LEVER. I will say that these employees who receive the salary of $240 are only employed half of the time. Instead of being employed eight hours a day they are employed four hours. They come in the morning and again in the afternoon, and the balance of the day they are free to do such work as they please to do.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. If they can get it to do. They come in the morning, and that spoils the best part of the day. Now, I am in favor of economy, but it strikes me that that is worth the consideration of the House.

Mr. LEVER. I will say that the Agricultural Committee, about four years ago, did probably what very few committees of this House have done, namely, they brought in a recommendation to increase or consider the salaries of a number of these lower-grade employees affecting 100 or 150, I think. No proposition has been made to increase the salaries of the charwomen and messenger boys, and the like of that. I will say that I understand a bill is pending in the proper committee to reclassify the lower-grade clerks, messenger boys, charwomen, and the like of that, and, in general, I may say that I sympathize with the gentleman's position. This is not the bill, however, to do that. It would have the effect of making the salaries of this class of employees unequal in the various departments of the Government. You ought to have a general proposition covering all the departments in the Government, instead of one bureau.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. How would it do to fix it here and not take any chances on what will be done in the future?

Mr. LEVER. I think it would be inequitable to other employees in other departments.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. That is my purpose; I think it is inequitable to these people who are doing a valuable service and getting too little pay. I would be very glad of an opportunity to vote an increase in their wages, and I was in hopes that I might appeal to the magnanimity of the gentleman in charge of the bill not to object to an amendment along that line to provide for these charwomen.

Mr. LEVER. The difficulty of the gentleman's position is that we are on the last part of the bill, and to increase the salary of the charwomen in this bureau and not in the other bureaus that we have already passed would be a manifest injustice.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Why not let it apply to all the charwomen mentioned in the bill?

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will prepare his amendment we will consider it when we get to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, library: For books of reference, technical and scientific books, papers and periodicals, and for expenses incurred in completing imperfect series; for the employment of additional assistants in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for official traveling expenses, and for library fixtures, library cards, supplies, and for all other necessary expenses, $18,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 12 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, on some subsequent paragraph I desire to seek information from the chairman of the committee with reference to the purchase of supplies. I think we ought to know something about the manner in which these supplies are purchased, but for the present I would like to know whether the supplies referred to in line 8, page 61, include ink?

Mr. LEVER. In answer to the gentleman, I would say that I have made some personal investigation within the last few days as to the system which the Government has in buying its various and sundry supplies, and if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman from South Carolina did not get my question. At present I do not want to raise the question of the purchase of supplies. I want to know whether the supplies referred to in line 8, page 61, include ink?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; I think so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As to inks, I wish to say this: The dyestuffs question enters into ink. The Speaker yesterday, in a very eloquent address, urged that the House speed up on legislation, with which I think most of his colleagues here agree, but the difficulty has not been altogether with the House itself. To a certain extent it may be due to some of the committees, which have a large amount of work to do. The Ways and Means Committee is one of these. The Ways and Means Commitee has not gone far into revenue questions yet. In the investigation of the dyestuffs question by this committee, for instance, it developed that the Government itself was subject to high prices for ink and other commodities, just as private enterprises are. In the course of time, unless there is some legislation coming from the Ways and Means or some other committee with reference to dyestuffs, the Government is going to feel the pinch, if it does not feel it already. The Government is in the same boat with individual manufacturers and merchants throughout the country.

It may be interesting to the House at this time to know that the people are paying enormously high prices for certain merchandise because of the lack of legislation to enable us to develop the dyestuffs industry in the United States. I have now in my possession papers which give a fair idea as to the pressure in commercial lines with respect to the lack of dyestuffs. One concern advises me that it has just paid more than $4,400, or at the rate of $9 per pound for a certain kind of dye which prior to the war could readily be had for 20 cents a pound. Another concern which manufactures carpets has been obliged to pay $12,500 for one barrel of 500 pounds of dyestuffs, which could readily have been purchased before the war for $600.

The point I want to make is, that that increased cost to the man who buys the dyestuff is passed on to the consumer. The purchaser of the carpets has to pay that bill. By the same token the Government of the United States which is itself at fault in the matter of legislation just now, will be obliged in the matter of all these supplies, to pay this increased cost for everything. At the present time we seem to be at the mercy of the British Government which is holding up the supplies that we might obtain from Germany. It is publicly announced that Germany has proposed to let loose 15,000 tons of dyestuffs to relieve the situation in the United States, but until our State Department develops enough influence with the British Government which controls the seas, that dyestuff can not come into the United States for the relief of our people. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, this item carries $18,000 for the purchase of technical and reference books pertaining to the work of the Agricultural Department. I want to commend in the most hearty terms this sort of expenditure. I probably would agree with my friend from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] that the overhead expenditure should not, I would not say, be so much, but too much; we ought to guard that expenditure. I do not think we ought to economize upon the expenditure of money in this research work. I was pleased to hear the chairman say that this technical library was probably the best of its kind in the world.

On making an investigation in another field last year I sought information here in the Capital as to the number of technical libraries that were open to investigators—to scholars if they would care to enter them. I was surprised to learn that there are 137 libraries in the city of Washington, each one standing out unique in its line of investigation, and I presume many of them the greatest of their kind in the world. I believe it is true that Washington is the greatest center of research work, with the greatest group of scholars in special lines of research of any place in the world, unless it be Berlin. I think it is true also that the laboratory facilities for research work in this Capital City are the rarest and most extensive of any place in the world.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. I think probably the greatest danger to the future effectiveness of the Department of Agriculture is the desire, which seems to be growing more and more each day in Congress, to have the department do too much field work without a sufficient regard to its investigational and research work. We must keep a proper balance between the two lines of work. We can not educate unless we have the basis for education.

Mr. FESS. If the Chairman would permit, I would remind him of the statement he made the other day right along that line, that the research is probably more important than the demonstration work, for the demonstration will come anyway. I agree with him in that statement. Dissemination of knowledge is sure to come when the valuable knowledge is once made known, but the group of men who are in the laboratory doing the research work, discovering what is not known, finding out things that need to be known, is the big work to which the country should give its warmest support. The expert or research worker should be encouraged to push the work in new fields. This may be done frequently at small outlay of expense and within narrow compass. I happen to know of a geologist who has won a name in two continents, and he confined his study to a glen not more than three-quarters of a mile in length. There in that laboratory of nature he made sufficient research so that his name is known in two worlds as a great geologist. He did not have to go out all over the world. The same thing can be said of a botanist who confined himself to a narrow gorge, studying the plant life, and he has made a name that is known in two continents. I mention this item to indicate the character of the research worker, and I want to commend not only this committee but every committee that looks into the business of research, for that is the big work, and $18,000 is not too much to expend in this great field of agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous expenses, Department of Agriculture: For stationery, blank books, twine, paper, gum, dry goods, soap, brushes, brooms, mats, oils, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, fuel, water and gas pipes, heating apparatus, furniture, carpets, and matting; for lights, freight, express charges, advertising, telegraphing, telephoning, postage, washing towels, and necessary repairs and improvements to buildings and heating apparatus; for the purchase, subsistence, and care of horses and the purchase and repair of harness and vehicles, for official purposes only; for the payment of duties on imported articles, and the Department of Agriculture's proportionate share of the expense of the dispatch agent in New York; for official traveling expenses; and for other miscellaneous supplies and expenses not otherwise provided for, and necessary for the practical and efficient work of the department, $115,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Here is an item where we may fairly raise the question about the purchase of supplies, because it not only includes the purchase of supplies of one kind or another, but the payment of duties on imported articles, indicating that the Government is put to it sometimes to go abroad to purchase those things it needs. All through this Agricultural appropriation bill it appears that we spend large sums of money, first, for salaries which are specified, and then we appropriate large lump sums for purposes which necessitate the employment of men whose salaries are not specified and whose places are not specified, and who may be appointed at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture; and we also appropriate large sums, generally in excess of the amount appropriated for salaries, for the purchase of supplies.

These appropriations for supplies are generally in the lump. They are not specified as they are in other appropriation bills, and apparently there is a very wide discretion left to the Secretary or to somebody in the department to deal with those who have commodities to sell.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman realizes that they have a General Supply Committee, does he not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I am coming to.

Mr. BORLAND. They buy in quantities and at a uniform price and on uniform contracts. They intend to do that. There are some instances where they can not do it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Missouri states that the General Supply Committee buys at uniform prices in some instances. Now, occasionally a case arises where it appears that this General Supply Committee does not make its awards to the lowest bidder as in other instances. I have in mind one set of proposals that involve the expenditure of probably $200,000, where some men in the South have bidden and some men in the North, and where the practice seems to be to award to the highest bidder. Now, as we vest unusual discretion in the department in the purchase of agricultural supplies, which we do not seem to vest in other departments, I should like to know something about the method of purchase and the authority that is conferred by law upon those charged with responsibility.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I have asked the Department of Agriculture to furnish me a memorandum as to its methods of purchasing supplies; that is, those supplies that are not covered by the awards of the General Supply Committee, of which the gentleman from Missouri spoke. I think the statement furnished by the department is probably clearer than I can make it myself, and I am going to ask the gentleman that, in his time and mine together, I may read this statement. It says:

IN WASHINGTON.

Bureau chiefs are authorized to issue requisitions for supplies where the amount does not exceed $100, except in the case of the Forest Service and the Weather Bureau, where the limit is $500; all other requisitions for supplies in Washington are issued by the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary reserves the right, moreover, to approve all purchases of cameras and lenses, motor-driven vehicles or boats, and medicines for personal use, irrespective of the amount involved. In the case of all ordinary supplies for use in Washington, D. C., the General Supply Committee—

To which reference has been made—under existing law, advertises annually for quotations and prepares a general schedule, a copy of which is herewith appended.

This is a volume containing a couple hundred of pages.

The Department of Agriculture makes its purchases from this schedule whenever practicable. When articles are needed which are not listed in the general schedule of supplies they are purchased in the open market by the Secretary or the bureau chief, as already indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, and then I ask unanimous consent that all debate conclude in seven minutes on this paragraph and amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in seven minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. It says, further:

If the amount involved is less than $50, such purchases may be made without competition, but where the amount exceeds $50 the department requires that bona fide competition be secured by three or more dealers; if the estimated cost of the supplies to be purchased in the open market exceeds $2,500, advertising in newspapers is resorted to to secure proper competition. All competitive bids received are passed upon by a departmental board of survey and all acceptances of bids are approved by the Secretary, except that the Chief of the Weather Bureau and the Forester have authority from the Secretary to accept bids that do not exceed $500.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is that the board which the gentleman from Missouri referred to?

Mr. LEVER. No; the board referred to here, I take it, is a board within the Agricultural Department. The board to which the gentleman from Missouri refers is a board which includes membership from all the departments of the Government.

The communication says further:

The only departure from the rule that competition must be secured in all open-market purchases in excess of $50 occurs when one of the following exigencies is shown to exist: (a) When articles required for immediate use are not provided for in existing contracts and there is not time to obtain them through advertisement by any of the methods heretofore named; (b) when, under a formal contract for construction, there arises a necessity for additional work practicable of performance only by the contractor; (c) when the articles required are patented or copyrighted and not on sale by dealers, but by the owners of the patent or copyright or their agents or assigns alone at a fixed and uniform price; (d) when there is only one dealer within a practicable distance from whom the articles can be obtained; (e) when prices or rates are fixed by Federal, State, or municipal legislation, or by competent regulation; or (f) when previous advertising for the identical purchase has been followed by the receipt either of no proposals or only of such as were unreasonable, and under circumstances indicating that further advertising would not alter results.

OUTSIDE OF WASHINGTON.

Whenever possible, advantage is taken of the prices established in the general schedule of supplies. Otherwise, when the estimated price is in excess of $50 competition must be obtained in the same manner as provided in the case of purchases for use in Washington. Minor supplies may be purchased by employees on proper prior authority issued to them, but when the amount involved is of some consequence the supplies are purchased by requisitions issued from the offices in Washington. On account of the needs of the field service of the Forest Service that bureau maintains a distributing supply depot at Ogden, Utah. It secures competition annually for its stock supplies in a manner similar to that under which the General Supply Committee in Washington establishes its general schedule.

Now, that is the system that prevails in the city of Washington. The same system prevails outside of the city of Washington.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That obtains, Mr. Chairman, except as to patented articles and certain specialties, to purchases of supplies where the amount is small; that is, $100, and so forth. But this appropriation bill carries provision for the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars for supplies, and I am not sure that those regulations the gentleman has read would apply definitely to these enormous purchases.

Mr. LEVER. Any purchase above the amount stated in the memorandum which I have read would be covered by the General Supply Committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The General Supply Committee? I want to know what the Secretary of Agriculture knows about these purchases.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the general supply committee is an adjunct of the Treasury Department, and consists of one representative from each of the departments, which prepare the necessary estimates for supplies and then advertise for bids for the supplies and award the contract for the ensuing fiscal year to the respective bidders whom they believe are the lowest and most responsible.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the permission of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose two concerns were bidding for supplies involving the expenditure of $200,000 during the course of a year, and one concern already had the contract through this General Supply Committee, and another concern which had outbid it the year before had bid low again the second year, who would make the award, the Secretary of Agriculture or the supply committee?

Mr. STAFFORD. The General Supply Committee determine the award for these supplies. The final test as to the character of supplies that shall be furnished to the respective departments, each department having a representative on this board to pass upon such questions as the gentleman has propounded, is with this committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell us who the individual members of the Supply Committee are and how they are appointed?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I can not tell the gentleman who the individual members are, but the head of each of the respective department appoints a representative of that department—some person connected with the department who is versed in the purchase of supplies and having direct connection with the supplies of his respective department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose a department desired to secure a number of automobiles, and the agent of those automobiles, who had put in his proposal, was invited out to discuss the matter at dinner or did the inviting out himself. Does the gentleman think there should be some right of appeal from an award made under such circumstances?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, if a person submits to the temptations of a good dinner or a theater party and does not attend to business, he should not complain because he is not entitled to supreme consideration; but in that particular, so far as automobiles are concerned—and I mention this because it is a matter of live interest—this board asked for bids on certain characters of automobile delivery cars, and——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. This board determined the character of car to be accepted. During the past year the board accepted the Studebaker car, and that was the car that was purchased for such departments as had authorization granted them in the appropriation bill for the purchase of delivery cars. There was no privilege granted to the heads of respective departments to select any other car.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this Supply Committee created by law or is it a creature of the departments?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a creature of law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The law of 1910.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; the law of 1910. It has worked very efficiently, and a large saving has resulted in the purchase of supplies. It is the central supply depot for standard supplies for all the departments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are the men constituting this committee already under salary?

Mr. STAFFORD. They are heads of bureaus or occupy some other responsible position in the respective departments, where they come directly in contact with the needs of their respective departments as to supplies that are needed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do they receive any extra compensation for their services?

Mr. STAFFORD. They do not. Their service occupies but a part of their time the year round, but there is a division connected with the Treasury Department, with a special chief, who has charge of the administration of this Supply Division of the Treasury Department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is centralized in the Treasury Department?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; it is centralized in the Treasury Department as to bids and awards on supplies necessary for each department.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And is it not true that each representative of every department passes on every award?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is a correct statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rent of buildings, Department of Agriculture: For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, for use of the various bureaus, divisions, and offices of the Department of Agriculture, $123,689: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit annually to Congress in his estimates of appropriations a statement showing what proportion of this appropriation is paid for the quarters occupied by the various branches of the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to enter a protest against the extravagant amounts paid by the Department of Agriculture for rent of private quarters.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto shall close in 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. In no other department of the Government are such extravagant rates being paid for the rental of quarters as in the Department of Agriculture. It will surprise this committee when I say that the rentals aggregate in some instances the enormous return of 15 per cent on the value of the property used for these quarters, and the average rentals for the use of these buildings is 10 per cent, whereas in other departments the rental is as low as 5 per cent and 4 per cent on the value for a standard building. The committee says in their report that they have investigated this subject. I will read the exact language of the report. I read:

The committee investigated the matter thoroughly and is convinced that the sum appropriated is being wisely expended.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BORLAND. My recollection is that recently the subcommittee, of which the gentleman is a member, authorized a lease for quarters for the Department of Commerce, and they are very fine quarters, but they are based upon the price of about 31 cents a square foot.

Mr. STAFFORD. The department is authorized to make a contract at 40 cents, and the contract is 36.3 cents.

Mr. BORLAND. That is the building on Pennsylvania Avenue occupied by the Department of Commerce?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. But since the hearings of the subcommittee were concluded it appears that the return on that investment is something in the neighborhood of 8 or 9 per cent. Yet as to the buildings occupied by the Department of Agriculture, modern buildings, the net return on the value of the property is as high as 15 per cent, and still nothing is being done to curtail the rentals that these private owners are exacting of the Government, because this great department has grown so fast that the Government could not provide other quarters in which to house them.

Mr. BORLAND. Is the Department of Agriculture paying more than 36 cents a square foot?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. In some instances it is paying as high as 40 cents. For one building it is paying 41.6 cents. That is for the building used by the Office of Markets, a building where the space occupied is 85,000 square feet, and the annual rental is $35,360, where the assessed valuation of the property, according to the Book of Estimates, is $182,744. There has been prepared by the American Institute of Architects a list showing the rentals and the per cent of return to the owners received from the rental of these respective buildings used by the Government, and in no instance do you find such outrageous returns on the investment as in the case of the Department of Agriculture. I do not wish to criticize this heavily overworked committee. We all know that they work many days of the year continuously from early morn until late in the afternoon preparing this very important agricultural bill, and they have not time to go into details of this administrative feature that has been called particularly to the attention of the Appropriations Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I believe that something should be done not only by the Appropriations Committee but by all the committees that authorize rentals, whereby there shall be fixed a rate that will not permit the owner to receive more than a certain return on his investment. Who can justify such a return as 15 per cent year after year, when in the course of eight years the building will have paid for itself? We all know that a building will be occupied for eight years by the Government after the Government once moves in.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Who is it that makes the contract for the rentals of these buildings—what officer in the department?

Mr. STAFFORD. The matter is under the jurisdiction ultimately of the Secretary, the head of the department. I presume the head of the bureau negotiates the contract, subject to the approval of the chief clerk, and then the decision of the chief clerk is ultimately approved by the Secretary of the department.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to know, if the gentleman can tell me, what particular person in the Agricultural Department negotiates the contract with the lessor?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not give the gentleman that information, I regret to say.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. Has the gentleman's investigations led him to any definite conclusion as to the relative economy of the Government owning the buildings or renting them?

Mr. STAFFORD. If we would but pay a rental that would net a return of, say, 5 per cent to the owner, as, for instance, we do in the Mills Building, occupied by the Department of Labor, I think it would be more economical for the Government to rent. But bear in mind this fact: When the Government rents a building at a rate, as we have provided in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, of 36.3 cents per square foot rental of available floor space, that does not include the upkeep of the building. The upkeep of the building is in addition.

I was curious during the hearings on the legislative bill to ascertain what was the average cost per square foot for maintenance when the Government undertakes to care and provide for the upkeep of a building. The Secretary of Commerce at that time could not give the information, but appended it later in a detailed statement. It shows that the cost for maintenance, in addition to the rental, of 36.3 cents, is 18.5, making a total of 54.8 per foot. It may be interesting to know what the renters of office buildings pays and the Government pays for offices such as those in the Southern Building and the Woodward Building, which run up to 90 cents, and some to over $1. It is much more economical for the Government to rent large quarters in buildings occupied entirely by itself than to rent small quarters in buildings like the Woodward Building. Where we rent the entire building we are paying a rent that nets a return to the owner of 10 per cent, and that is the average to the owners of all buildings rented by the Agricultural Department, as shown by the compilation. In reply to the question propounded by the gentleman from Ohio I would say that it is more economical for the Government to rent a building if it only paid a return of 5 per cent to the owner. Taking into consideration the upkeep, there would be a saving of 4 or 5 per cent to the Government, even when the net return to the owner is 10 per cent.

I believe that some definite policy should be inaugurated by the Government. The Agricultural Department, I believe, does not enter into a long-term lease, but makes them from year to year. But we should make some definite rates whereby the Government would authorize the leasing based upon a fixed rental that would not deprive the owner of a fair return on his investment, taking into consideration the depreciation, the risk of the quarters or the building being vacated or abandoned by the Government, so that he would receive a fair return and no more—not a return that no one could justify, like a rate yielding 15 per cent.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the rent roll of the Government for private quarters in the District of Columbia is something enormous. It does not confine itself to this particular bill, but extends to every activity of the Government. That is not the fault of the committees who have these bills in charge. The activities of the Government have been growing. Every time Congress asks the Government to pursue some new line of activity—at the demand of the people, of course—it is necessary to provide headquarters in the city of Washington for that purpose. That is the first thing necessary. Usually, when the demand comes it is a sudden demand, and quarters must be had in order that the department be opened. That was exemplified when we passed the law providing for the physical valuation of railroads—some quarters had to be found for that particular branch of the Interstate Commerce Commission. When we provided for the Federal Trade Commission some quarters had to be found for them. When the Department of Labor was separated from the Department of Commerce they had to be provided with quarters. The Government in these cases is more or less helpless; it must take the quarters it can get at a price that the owner is willing to take. But the question is always coming up whether it would be cheaper for the Government to rent or own the building. The answer to the question is that if the Government rented the same class of buildings that it built it would be more expensive, but if the Government would erect the same class of buildings that it rents it would be cheaper for the Government to build. That is, we build monumental buildings, and we build them under a little different theory than that of the man who is building for commercial purposes. We do not make available as much of the space as we could, and we give a good deal to ornamentation, so that you can scarcely compare the two propositions. But what I want to call attention to is this, that the committee in charge of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill this year put in, as it had to do, certain limitations of law providing that the heads of the departments where they needed additional space should be allowed to enter into a businesslike lease for a definite length of time with the owner, four years, I think, being the time allowed. Under that they could get a commercial rate on the space rented. For some reason or other that provision went out on a point of order. I think that was a mistake.

I do not see how appropriating committees can deal with this subject unless they are enabled to put in a legislative provision giving the heads of departments power to enter into leases for a definite time, within definite limitations. Then the committee can control the price. We have found that we can get a building as good as the Department of Commerce is now occupying at a flat rate of 36 cents and a fraction per square foot, and we pay the cost of janitor service, light, and elevator service. That amounts to 18 cents a square foot, making 54 cents a square foot in all, but that can be done only where the department is given legislative power to enter into a lease on business terms.

Mr. LEVER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Department of Commerce are paying 54 cents?

Mr. BORLAND. About 54 cents a square foot, including the cost of janitor service, cleaning, lighting, elevator, and upkeep. We pay 36 cents and a fraction per square foot for the space occupied and provide the cost of caretaking in addition.

This is the only practical solution. We can not build buildings fast enough in Washington to house the activities of the Government. We must always depend to some extent on rented quarters, and we either ought to have a general provision of law, common to all the departments, fixing the terms upon which leases may be made, or we ought to permit these appropriating committees to put in legislative provisions providing for leases for a definite length of time. No man who owns property is going to lease it to the Government for a short-time lease, or upon an uncertain tenure, on the same terms that he will lease it for a certain tenure and for a long-time lease; and four years or even five or six years time is not too long to lease a piece of property in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this matter was referred to a subcommittee which made a very thorough investigation, the chairman of which subcommittee was the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY], who will now take charge of this matter.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, some two years ago I went into the matter of the rents paid by the Agricultural Department, and investigated the subject with some care and as exhaustively as I could in the time which I had. In order that Congress might be definitely advised in regard to the matter I have made up a table giving the name or location of the building, its character, the number of rooms, by whom occupied and for what purpose; the floor space in square feet, net and gross; the annual rental; the annual rental per square foot, net and gross; the date of the first lease; the name of the owner or lessor; and the assessed value of the building. I thought that under these subheads the committee could ascertain the reasonableness of rent paid by the Agricultural Department as compared with the rents paid by other departments of the Government.

In the report which I made at that time, I suggested to the House two years ago that it was my judgment that all of these rents paid by the different activities of the Federal Government were too high; but after comparing the rents paid by the Agricultural Department with the rents paid by other departments of this Government, I state to-day, as a result of that investigation, that the rents paid to-day by the Agricultural Department are lower than the rents paid by any other branch of the Government's activities. The table to which I refer is as follows:

Bureau of Animal Industry, Meat Inspection, appropriation pays rental for:

Rooms in Munsey Building	$420
Rear of 215 Linworth Place SW	120
Portion of rent for building 1358 B Street SW	10,000
Total	10,540

Office of Markets appropriation, "Determining cotton standards and spot markets, 1916" (continuing appropriation):

818 Four-and-a-half Street SW	360
1315 C Street NW	1,000
Total	1,360

I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this report shows that we are paying as low as 40 cents per square foot, gross, up to as high as $1.15 per square foot in the Munsey Building, a modern, fireproof, eight-story office building. I believe that if you will make a comparison of other rents paid, such as the Post Office Department, the Interior Department, and other departments, you will find that from the statement I made some two years since, which is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page 4852, Sixty-third Congress, second session, under date of March 14, 1914, that the rent paid by the Department of Agriculture is much less than the rent paid by any other branch of this Government. It is useless to encumber the records with comparison. The tables showing the rents paid by other branches of the Government departments have been incorporated into the record, and reference to same can be had by any who may be interested in the subject.

Mr. COX. What does the gentleman mean by "gross"?

Mr. JACOWAY. That is for the number of square feet in the whole building, not counting the net square feet actually used. The Bureau of Plant Industry and the States Relations Service pay 33 cents per square foot. The Office of Public Roads pays, for storage, 12 cents per square foot. The Office of Markets pays, for storage, as low as 6.4 cents per square foot.

Now, in the Interior Department the rate paid per square foot is 39.9 cents, 38 cents, 35 cents, 31.9 cents, 57.5 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. How much more time is there remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Eight minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas may proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Arkansas may proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOWAY. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I want to state, as I did two years since, when this matter was before the House, that I am of opinion, after the investigation I have been able to make, that the Government, from the standpoint of the Government and not from the viewpoint of the individual, is paying too much rent for all of those buildings. But I state and assert that the rent paid by the Government for the buildings for the use of the Agricultural Department is the cheapest rent paid by the Government for any of its great departments. Beyond question I feel this assertion is true. It is my hope that soon all branches of the Agricultural Department can be housed under one roof. Certainly no department of this Government is more important than that of agriculture. As has often been asserted—and it is a true statement—that agriculture is the basis of all wealth, then that source from which this wealth emanates should receive every encouragement. Besides its house the Agricultural Department in its own building would be a saving to the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOWAY. For a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee on what term of lease the Agricultural Department rents these respective buildings?

Mr. JACOWAY. It is from year to year, as a rule, generally.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; it is from year to year rather than for a term of years?

Mr. JACOWAY. It is from year to year, and the gentleman will find all this discussed in the report that I made some time ago, and to which I have made reference to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Whereas in the other departments, where they get much more economical rent, the term of lease being for from 5 to 10 years.

Mr. JACOWAY. I think there are some branches of the Department of Agriculture where they enter into leases for from 5 to 10 years, as just suggested by me.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOWAY. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Some years ago the committee tried to get the same authority the gentleman speaks of, but it was objected to on the floor of the House, and it went out on a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman's attention been called to the compilation of the American Institute of Architects which gives the returns on the valuations of the respective properties and which shows that for these modern buildings the net return to the owners is 15 per cent and the average return of all of the rentals is 10 per cent?

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is in error about that. In discussing this question two years ago I said in answer to a question from Mr. HAWLEY:

No; I did not state that. I said that assuming the assessed value of the property in the District of Columbia as shown on the tax books complied with the law, which requires it shall be assessed at 66⅔ per cent of its value, and arguing from that premise, then the rent paid on all these buildings occupied amounts to about 10 per cent. If the assessment is erroneous, then, of course, the per cent would vary.

I also stated in those remarks that the Federal Government can house the activities of the Department of Agriculture under one roof, completing the building down here that is not now completed—and you can get the money at 3 per cent—and in that way it would be a saving to the Federal Government to do so, and in my report I recommended that that be done, and to me it appears to be good business judgment on the part of the Government to do so. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question or two. Last year we provided at this place in the bill that the Maltby Building and all the buildings in that block might be used by the Agricultural Department. I understand that the Department of Agriculture has never made use of those buildings.

Mr. JACOWAY. It has not.

Mr. MANN. Does it require further legislation to strike that order out? The language of the law last year was:

Until otherwise ordered the Maltby Building, etc., may be used for governmental purposes by the Agricultural Department.

The design, of course, has been to tear down those buildings.

Mr. JACOWAY. I will state in answer to that question that the Department of Agriculture has not used that building this year.

Mr. MANN. I understand that it has never used it at all. The department never took possession of it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. The inspector of the Department of Agriculture looked over the Maltby Building and made a report to the Secretary of Agriculture that the building was unfit for use; that it was dangerous to use it.

Mr. MANN. I am not questioning that part of it. What I want to know is, if I can find out, whether there should be legislation now repealing this provision or whether these buildings are to stand there indefinitely, subject to being used by the Agricultural Department, which does not intend to use them?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that unless there is legislation the provision in the bill last year, I take it, will stand until repealed. The matter was not brought to the attention of the committee at all.

Mr. MANN. I think that provision ought to be repealed.

Mr. LEVER. I do also.

Mr. MANN. There is no earthly reason for keeping in the law a provision for the use by the department of a building which it can not, and I think properly does not, use.

Mr. LEVER. I am glad the gentleman called that to our attention.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who has given a good deal of attention to the question of rents for buildings, especially in connection with the legislative appropriation bill and otherwise, stated that the Agricultural Department was paying very excessive rents for buildings; that the average was very high. I notice, however, that the other day in the Senate there was inserted in the RECORD what purported to be the rentals received from public buildings in the District of Columbia, being an extract from the Journal of the American Institute of Architects, of February, 1916. In that statement the information is given that the rental paid for the Willard Building, opposite the Willard Hotel, which used to be occupied by the Department of Commerce and by the Department of Labor and is now occupied by the Department of Agriculture, amounts to 1½ per cent on the value. Certainly no one would complain that a rental of 1½ per cent on the value was a high rate of rental.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. For a question, I have only a little time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware that that is merely a temporary arrangement because they could not obtain another tenant, that that is not the real rental the Government has been paying heretofore?

Mr. MANN. I am aware that the statement is made here that the Agricultural Department is now paying 1½ per cent on the value of the building. I do not imagine that they will be allowed to continue indefinitely upon that basis, but it does not indicate any extravagant desire on the part of the Department of Agriculture.

Now, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, while there is always a great demand in Washington and from the outside that all the buildings occupied by the various bureaus and departments in Washington shall be Government buildings, and the ground of economy is constantly advanced, I have not the slightest doubt myself with some observations and experiences in Washington with the Government buildings, that if we erect public buildings to put all these offices in it will cost the Government a great deal more than it does now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. All time has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 16, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for an increased annual appropriation for agricultural experiment stations and regulating the expenditure thereof," the sums apportioned to the several States and Territories, to be paid quarterly in advance, $720,000: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 shall be paid to each State and Territory under this act.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to publish a letter from Dr. Melvin, the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry, in regard to experimental stations in two counties in Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from Dr. Melvin in relation to experimental stations in Indiana. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the letter referred to:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., April 15, 1916.

Hon. W. A. CULLOP,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CULLOP: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of April 13, asking for information concerning hog-cholera work by the bureau during the past two years.

Under the appropriation for work in the field experiments have been conducted in districts consisting of about one county each in 14 States, to determine the possibility of controlling hog cholera by quarantine and sanitary measures and the use of the serum preventive treatment, under some feasible plan which might permit of extending the work over large areas. Two of these experiments have been conducted in Indiana, one in Hendricks County and the other in Montgomery County, which cost the department during 1915, including the use of free serum, approximately $32,000.

In connection with these various experiments to December 31, 1915, there were treated 234,136 hogs in infected herds, with a loss of only 13.1 per cent, even though 85,547 of this number showed evidence of cholera at the time of treatment. During the same period 19,208 hogs were treated in well herds for protection, in which the loss was two-tenths of 1 per cent.

In addition to these experiments, educational, and demonstrational hog-cholera work was conducted in 10 States. This work has been more or less State-wide in advising farmers, through organizations and otherwise, of measures which may be taken to reduce losses and prevent cholera from reaching their herds.

The information obtained from these two classes of work indicates that the first, even though it has resulted in a saving of more than the amount expended, may be too expensive, and the other class does not afford a sufficient opportunity to place any one district in a position to control the disease.

It is believed that with a reasonable appropriation and a combination of these two methods, intensified work may be extended to larger sections of the country, and that with the support of the proper State officials, and the farmers themselves, the disease may be controlled and ultimately eradicated.

Very truly, yours,
A. D. MELVIN,
Chief of Bureau.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to enforce the provisions of the above acts and the act approved May 8, 1914, entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture," relative to their administration, including the employment of clerks, assistants, and other persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere, freight and express charges, official traveling expenses, office fixtures, supplies, apparatus, telegraph and telephone service, gas, electric current, and rent outside of the District of Columbia, $58,500; and the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe the form of the annual financial statement required under the above acts, ascertain whether the expenditures are in accordance with their provisions, coordinate the work of the Department of Agriculture with that of the State agricultural colleges and experiment stations in the lines authorized in said acts, and make report thereon to Congress.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point by inserting a letter written to me from the director of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station on the subject of pine blister rust.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject which he indicates. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the letter referred to:

THE CONNECTICUT AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION,
New Haven, Conn., April 19, 1916.

To the Hon. JOHN Q. TILSON,
New Haven, Conn.

DEAR SIR: The Agricultural appropriation bill soon to come before the House of Representatives contains an item of $30,000 for the suppression of the pine blister rust. The danger which confronts the lumber interests of the country from this source will no doubt be fully explained by the committee chairman.

I need only say that this station has made inspections and is now preparing for a third inspection of all white-pine plantations in this State. We could not do this effectively without the cooperation of the United States, made possible by the appropriation of $20,000 previously in the urgent deficiency bill. We are using every means which our State appropriations supply to detect and destroy this dangerous disease, but to do it effectively there will be needed further help from the General Government, and I hope you may be ready to give the item of the bill referred to your support.

Very truly, yours,
E. H. JENKINS, Director.

The Clerk read as follows:

For farmers' cooperative demonstrations and for the study and demonstration of the best methods of meeting the ravages of the cotton-boll weevil, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, supplies, and all other necessary expenses, $661,300: Provided, That the expense of such service shall be defrayed from this appropriation and such cooperative funds as may be voluntarily contributed by State, county, and municipal agencies, associations of farmers, and individual farmers, universities, colleges, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, other local associations of business men, business organizations, and individuals within the State.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice there is a very slight decrease in the appropriation. I suppose that grows out of transfer, the intention being to keep the appropriation the same as it was before?

Mr. LEVER. Exactly. There is no change at all.

Mr. MANN. Did the committee consider increasing it?

Mr. LEVER. We did not. It was not estimated for. We did increase the preceding appropriation $100,000.

Mr. MANN. I noticed that. The appropriation above is mainly for demonstration work in the Northwest?

Mr. LEVER. In the Northern and Western States; yes, sir; 33 States outside of the cotton belt. The one which we are considering now is for the 15 States in the cotton belt.

Mr. MANN. I was under the impression that a few years ago we made the amount about the same.

Mr. LEVER. No; the gentleman's impression is wrong. A few years ago there was no amount carried for demonstration work.

Mr. MANN. I know. A few years ago there was and a few years ago there was not.

Mr. LEVER. The amounts have not been the same at any time, but we are trying to build up the item above as rapidly as we think it would be wise to do so. The committee on its own initiative increased this appropriation $100,000 after, of course, taking it up with the Secretary of Agriculture and after he had told us that he could use $100,000 wisely and economically.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The chairman will remember that these amounts at one time were about the same, but the appropriations used by the South were supplemented by donations made by the General Educational Board, the Rockefeller fund, and Congress in considering that matter decided it was not wise longer to receive donations from that fund. And in order that the work should not be interfered with Congress added to the original appropriation enough to make up the amount that the General Educational Board had been in the habit of contributing.

Mr. MANN. My recollection was that at one time the items were almost the same.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. They were about the same.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Michigan will permit, I was in error when I said the items were never together. They were together for about one or two years, as I remember it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. And the addition to the southern item——

Mr. LEVER. By the outside fund.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. By the outside fund.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Michigan has stated the case accurately.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The House refused, and the Senate offered the amendment and the House accepted it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the island of Guam, including the erection of buildings, the preparation, illustration, and distribution of reports and bulletins, and all other necessary expenses, $143,000, as follows: Alaska, $48,000; Hawaii, $40,000; Porto Rico, $40,000; and Guam, $15,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell such products as are obtained on the land belonging to the agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the island of Guam: Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated for the experiment station in Hawaii $5,000 may be used in agricultural extension work in Hawaii.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will withhold that for a moment. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INCREASE OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 216 (H. Rept. 599).

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution the Committee on Military Affairs be, and is hereby, discharged from the consideration of H. R. 12766, a bill to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, with the Senate amendments thereto; that the said Senate amendments be, and are hereby, disagreed to by the House and a conference asked of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the said bill; and the Speaker shall immediately appoint the managers on the part of the House, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Committee on Rules has no jurisdiction to report this rule, and that it is not a privileged rule.

The Speaker yesterday ruled that the Committee on Rules could not report a rule which would prevent the exercise of the right to make the motion to recommit. In the discussion the Speaker referred to the last clause of the rule reported yesterday, which was, "without intervening motion," and intimated that if that were stricken out, or if that were left in and a provision were inserted, "except one motion to recommit," the rule would be in order. But the decision that the Speaker made yesterday was that the right to move to recommit under the rules of the House could not be taken away by a rule reported from the Committee on Rules.

Now, this rule provides, first, that the Committee on Military Affairs is discharged from further consideration of the bill. No exception can be taken to that. Second, it provides that the "Senate amendments be, and are hereby, disagreed to by the House and a conference asked of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses." That disposes of the Senate amendments. That is final action on the Senate amendments. The motion to recommit can not be made until the rule is adopted and the Committee on Military Affairs is discharged.

But the rule provides that when the Committee on Military Affairs is discharged at the same time the Senate amendment is disagreed to and a conference is asked. What can you do with a motion to recommit then? That is like offering a right to offer a motion to recommit after a bill has passed and a motion to reconsider has been laid on the table. What good is it? It has passed beyond further action by the House. It provides that the Senate amendment is already disagreed to and a conference asked for.

Now, if the Speaker would hold that at that stage of the proceedings, before the conferees are appointed, it would be in order to recommit to the committee with instruction to the committee to report a recommendation to the House that the conferees be instructed, it leaves something to be done; but unless that motion should be in order there is nothing that can be done. The matter has been disposed of before the motion to recommit can be offered. If the motion to recommit, which the Speaker held we were entitled to make under the rules of the House, is to be offered at all, it must be offered with the purpose of accomplishing something by it. It is too late to move to recommit, to recommend a concurrence in the Senate amendment or an amendment to the Senate amendment after the amendment has been disagreed to and a conference asked. You can not move to concur after you have disagreed. You can not move to amend after you have disagreed. The only thing you can do in the House, after disagreement and conference is asked, is to move to instruct the conferees. If that motion is in order at that time, then this rule is in order. But if that motion is not in order at that time, then this rule is in violation of the rules of the House offering the right to make a motion to recommit, because it can not be said that the motion to recommit can be made when it can not possibly under any circumstances accomplish anything.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. This particular phase of this aggravated question has been passed upon once or twice before by eminent Speakers; that is, the question as to what takes this matter in controversy away from the House. On July 27, 1886, section 6380 of Hinds' Precedents, in a comparatively long decision, a ruling was made upon it which it is not necessary to read, except as to one sentence of it. The decision was made by Mr. Speaker Carlisle. I read:

> But the Chair thinks even if the present motion of the gentleman from Kentucky prevails, at any time before the Chair actually appoints the conferees, which takes the matter away from the House, resolutions of instructions are in order, and the Chair will entertain them after this motion is disposed of.

The pending rule cuts out the privilege to instruct the conferees. But evidently Speaker Carlisle thought, and evidently Mr. Speaker CANNON thought, later on, because he quoted Speaker Carlisle's conclusion approvingly, making a very short decision, that the matter is not taken away from the House until the conferees are appointed.

In rendering that decision yesterday, the Chair never guaranteed to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] or anybody else that they would get a chance to offer a motion to instruct the conferees. What the Chair did decide was that the Committee on Rules could not cut out the privilege of offering the motion to recommit, with or without instructions. That is a correct decision, I think. The more I think about it the more certain I am. Everybody knows that I try to treat them all fairly. [Applause on the Republican side.]

If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] can rig up a motion to recommit at the proper time—a motion that would be in order as an amendment—then the Chair will rule his motion in order, and if he does not do that, he will rule it out of order. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the majority and minority members of the Committee on Rules had an agreement that there should be an hour's debate on the resolution, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. I ask unanimous consent that that be ratified by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks that there be an hour's debate on this rule, 30 minutes to be controlled by himself and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. POU. I would like to get an arrangement, if possible, that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. MANN. I shall have to object to that.

Mr. POU. Then I will not ask for that. It is not in the agreement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that there be one hour debate, if desired, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] and one-half by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. POU. I will reserve my time and ask the gentleman from Kansas to consume some of his time. I will say that in all probability we will not consume our 30 minutes on this side.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the previous question may be voted down so that the rule can be amended in order to give the House an opportunity to express its opinion upon at least one phase of the Senate amendments to the bill. No one desires to keep this bill from going to conference or to prevent its early enactment into law.

Mr. Speaker, I am against our country entering into war [applause], but I am in favor of a sufficient preparation now so that if under any conditions we are forced into war we will have something to fight with. [Applause.] We can not determine the force of events which may settle the question whether we shall enter into war or not, but we can determine now whether we will endeavor to make preparation for that which may come, though I shall do everything in my power, so long as I am a Member of this House, to prevent our country entering into war except under the most extreme circumstances. [Applause.]

The Senate amendment contains section 2, which provides for an army of 250,000 men. It is not excessive. There are many other provisions in both the House and Senate bills which in course of time would absorb, in the main, the officers provided for, with the schools throughout the country; but at present we ought to provide an army of 250,000 men, put them in training, and be prepared, if events shall force it, so that we may have them to use as a first line of defense. If, when peace is really again hovering over the world and the cloud of war is dissipated, we want to reduce the Army, I should favor that. I think we are foolish beyond description if, in the present situation of the world, we hesitate to spend a little money in order that we may have trained men ready if war should come from causes beyond our control. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of our country going to war whenever it is necessary to uphold human liberty and to fight for the right, and I am in favor of being prepared for that event, let it come when it may; but I am also in favor of sending this bill to conference, and sending it there at once. Many things have been injected into this bill in the Senate that I would like to see voted out of it before it goes to conference, but under the parliamentary situation I understand that is impossible, and that it is necessary that this bill go to conference without tying the hands of our conferees, in order that they may take out some of the bad things in this bill and insert some of the good things left out. If they fail to do that, we have the power in our hands to vote down the report when it comes in here, and to continue to vote it down until such a report is brought in as we feel justified in supporting.

While I am on my feet, however, I want to say one word. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says he is in favor of an army of 250,000 men now, to be maintained in time of peace. You understand my position. I am opposed to a large regular army in our country in time of peace or war. I believe in a small regular army sufficient to perform the functions of an army, and I believe in depending upon reservists and trained men to fight our battles when war comes. [Applause.] To say that we can fasten this army of 250,000 men on our shoulders and then release it when the emergency has gone by is idle talk. The Senate bill provides for the officers for an army of 250,000 men, but to write that bill into law as it comes from the Senate would simply mean a fraud and a deception upon the American people.

If it were possible to do so, I would offer an amendment here providing that hereafter the private soldier, the enlisted man in the Army of the United States, shall receive $30 per month, and I would provide that within 30 days after this bill becomes a law the President of the United States shall by a proclamation notify the governors of the various States of their quota necessary to fill up the Army to 250,000 men, and if they were not forthcoming within 60 days I would provide for a draft. If we want an army of 250,000 men, let us be honest and get that Army and not put it on paper simply, but take the steps necessary to give the people an Army of 250,000 men. I have grown weary listening to men talking about an Army of 250,000 men on paper, when last week, at a time when in every post office in this country there are advertisements urging men to enlist to help catch Villa, notwithstanding that fact, the great city of Boston, the metropolis of the State from which comes our good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], furnished one man for the Army. [Laughter and applause.] Talk about an Army of 250,000 Americans in time of peace at $15 a month! You can not get them, gentlemen. Let us be honest. Let us bring out this bill from conference, this war dog with some teeth in it, and not hand them out a piece of buncombe pure and simple. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I wish to insert in my remarks an article published in the Chicago Tribune on April 22, showing that for the week ending April 22 there were 772 men who enlisted in the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to insert the article referred to by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article is as follows:

ONLY 772 JOIN ARMY IN WEEK—RECRUITING SLACKENS ALL OVER NATION—CHICAGO LOSES LEADERSHIP—BOSTON SENDS ONE MAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22.

The week's recruiting figures were compiled to-day and displayed to the chief officials of the War Department and to others interested in the administration program. They were read with consternation and a degree of discouragement, which few of the Army men made any effort to conceal. Only 772 men were accepted.

Even Chicago, which has been leading the cities every week, with the exception of one occasion, when it fell below San Francisco, produced only 60 new men for the Army, falling below not only San Francisco, with its 84 acceptances out of 406 applications, but below New York, with 63 acceptances out of 322 applications.

Philadelphia, the third largest city of the land, produced only 22, and Boston contributed just one soldier to the colors.

ROLL IN MIDWEST CITIES.

Here are the figures for Chicago and near-by cities:

	Applications.	Acceptances.
Chicago	273	60
Peoria	32	8
Detroit	64	9
Grand Rapids	17	2
Indianapolis	110	27
Evansville	53	9
Terre Haute	29	13
Davenport	21	6

These acceptances total 134 out of 772 from the whole country. The total for the preceding 30 days was 3,927. This total of 4,700 men represents all that have been accepted at the station since the authorization of war strength regiments was passed by Congress.

MORE MAY BE DECLINED.

Probably 15 per cent of them will be declined at the receiving depots. At this rate the Army will have to wait close to a year to reach war strength.

War Department reports indicate that attendance at the Army instruction camps for civilians this summer will approximate 28,500. Secretary Baker, reporting to Congress to-day on the department's plans for the camps, asked for an appropriation of $454,085 for their expenses.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the resolution and to favor sending the bill to conference at the earliest possible moment. [Applause.] It is very seldom that I disagree with the minority leader on this side of the House, but in this instance, if Congress is to put the country in a greater condition of military preparedness at the earliest possible date, I believe he is not proceeding along the proper line. I believe it would be a mistake for this House to indorse the proposition contained in the Senate bill to increase the Army to 250,000 men at this time. I believe that the adverse vote which the House might give at this time would handicap the conferees on the part of the House in subsequently obtaining from the conferees on the part of the Senate an adequate and reasonable increase in the Regular Establishment, which I favor and which I believe this House will eventually favor.

I believe, furthermore, that if we seek to place the country in a state of defense now that we can not attain it by indorsing the Senate proposition of making the Regular Army 250,000 men, for when you refer to the language of the Senate amendment you will find that they propose to take five years to attain that end. I favor a policy which will more quickly accomplish an increase in our military strength.

If this country should go into a great war, that war will be fought, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] says, not by the Regular Army, but by the hundreds of thousands of volunteers of the country who will rise to fight the battle.

Mr. MADDEN. How many years does it take under the Hay bill to get the number?

Mr. ANTHONY. Four years. Let me say to the gentleman that I stand for a Regular Army of practically the size named in the Senate bill as it was reported from the Senate committee, a Regular Army of 150,000 or even 175,000 men. I do not believe the country is in the slightest danger of invasion by a European enemy. [Applause.] The enemy in Europe of whom they speak would be utterly unable to reach us for purely physical reasons for at least a year after any declaration of war or severance of diplomatic relations. In the meantime we could arm and equip an army of a million volunteers to defend our shores.

In my opinion, our most pressing need for troops to-day is upon the Mexican border, and what we really need more than troops in Mexico is a well-defined policy on the part of our national administration as to what we shall do in that country. [Applause.] So far, the present administration has utterly failed to outline any definite policy as to our relations with Mexico. In my opinion, what we should do, or what the President of the United States should do now, is to issue a proclamation very similar to that we put forth at the time of the second intervention of Cuba and say to the Mexican people that we come to reestablish and restore law and order and a stable Government, and that upon the establishment of such a Government we intended to withdraw our soldiers; but I would also flatly say that if hostile shots were fired at these soldiers we would stay there and ourselves set up a stable Government as a duty which we owe to humanity as well as to afford protection to the lives and property of American citizens, and if war results we should take in return such territorial payment as would remunerate us for the bloodshed. I believe that such a clearly defined policy put forth at this time would absolutely make unnecessary the use of any great army in Mexico and cause the people of that country to recognize us as benefactors instead. I hope the House will send the bill to conference, believing as I do that a good bill will be the result. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] five minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, much as I regret the necessity of disagreeing with the minority leader, I find that I am in that position now. When the Kahn amendment, providing 220,000 men, was before the House a few days ago, I voted for it, but when I did that I stretched my judgment to the uttermost. I thought perhaps that an emergency was at hand and that it might be wise because of the situation on our border on the south of us to have this authorization given to the President to recruit the Regular Army up to 220,000 men. But when it comes to increasing it to 250,000 men and making that the permanent policy of the Government, I can not see my way clear to support it. [Applause.] I take this position, first of all, because I do not believe that a great army is the natural or normal or most effective protection of the people of the United States. Because of our geographical location the natural and normal protection of this country, in case of war, is the Navy, and if we are going to enlarge our Military Establishment let us put the bulk of the money in the Navy, where it will give us the greatest measure of protection. [Applause.]

In this connection, I believe that England has taught us the way in this great war now raging in Europe. She is separated from her neighbors by only a narrow stretch of water 20 miles wide, but for a year and a half that narrow stretch of water has been a barrier between her and the marching millions of her enemies in arms. Not only that, but for a thousand years no hostile foot has been planted on English soil from across the English Channel against the will of Great Britain. Why? Because the Navy of Great Britain has been her protection and defense. Probably at this hour she can hear the boom of her enemy's guns across the English Channel. Her people can almost hear the tramp of mighty armed forces on the Continent, yet the English Channel, 20 miles wide, controlled by the English Navy, constitutes a perfect protection from attack. We have 3,000 miles of the same kind of water to protect us from possible invasion by any great power, and it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we should take advantage of our natural location in determining upon the best means for our defense.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill proposes to add practically a hundred thousand men in excess of the number provided in the bill recently passed by this House. A hundred thousand additional men for the Navy would man a navy equal to that of Great Britain, a thing, of course, which we do not need. But if we are ever going to fight, and I trust we never may, let us fight upon the sea, where the total loss of life would be reduced to the minimum. It would take money to build an adequate navy, but I am in favor of spending the money and saving the lives of the youth of America. [Applause.] In the Spanish-American War our Navy destroyed two Spanish fleets without the loss of a single American ship or a single American life, while thousands of lives were lost in land operations in that brief war in camp and in battle. In the Old World thousands of the best youth of Europe are being sacrificed daily in the great struggle now going on over there. What we should do in this Congress is to increase the size and strength of our Navy so that it will be large enough and powerful enough to prevent the landing of troops on our soil by any great military country. It will be a great deal easier and a great deal safer to provide the necessary means to prevent the landing of any possible enemy than to drive him off once he has landed.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of sending this bill to conference. Let the conference committee reach an agreement, if possible, on all points of difference between the House and the Senate. I sincerely hope that in no event will provision be made for a greater permanent standing Army than that provided in the amendment offered to the House bill by the distinguished Member from California, Mr. KAHN. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California, Mr. KAHN.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I am for a substantial Army. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr KELLEY], in speaking of the defenses of the country, said truly that our first line of defense must be a great Navy; but, according to the program that has been proposed for the upbuilding of our Navy it will take five years before we can have an adequate Navy. In the meantime we ought to have an adequate Army. [Applause.] I am not frightened by figures. The fact that the Congress fixes the line of the Army at 250,000 men or 220,000 men does not thereby mean that they must be immediately enlisted. It is simply an authorization. That is all that it is.

The existing law is an authorization for 100,000 men. It has been on the statute books since 1901. But up to the present time we have not had the 100,000 men. Suppose we fix the figures at 250,000. It then rests with the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army, to instruct the recruiting officers of this country to fill up the ranks to that number. But in the final analysis Congress has to pay for them. The President can not have them enlisted unless Congress is willing to pay for them. I can conceive of conditions under which it will be absolutely necessary to have the authorization. Take a case like this: Congress expires by limitation of law upon the 4th of next March. If there is no extra session, it will not be convened again until the following December. There is an interim of nine months between the short session and the new regular session of Congress. Suppose an incident should occur in our relations with a foreign Government that may make it possible or probable there will be a break. The President might not deem it advisable to call Congress together, and yet he ought to have the authority, in my judgment, to begin to enlist his regiments to full statutory strength, so that when the break comes our country will be ready for the emergency.

All this talk about enormous appropriations is simply begging the question. The law, if enacted, will simply be an authorization. There ought to be an authorization. The House of Representatives, in my judgment, ought to be willing to give the President an Army of sufficient strength that will enable us to be prepared in case we get into hostilities with any foreign Government. I feel that the time has come when we ought to tell the world emphatically that the United States of America stands ready to defend the life and the property of her citizens in every quarter of the globe. [Applause.] Notes between nations—why, enough notes have been exchanged between our Government and the various belligerent nations to make a tune! You can not expect results unless you have force behind your notes. [Applause.] I am ready to vote for a large substantial army, and I sincerely hope that the House itself will vote for an authorization for a large substantial army. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the doctor told me not to come here this morning. I am a sick man—hardly able to stand on my feet, but I feel that when the military policy of my country is being changed, as it evidently is by this bill which the Senate has passed, I can not sit idly by and not have my voice go up in protest against any such proceeding. I wish to reply to my distinguished colleague on the committee, Mr. KAHN, from the State of California. He says that this country needs force to back up its notes; that enough notes have already been sent to play a tune. My friend, according to the policy that you believe in the taxpayers of this country will be called on to pay for a tune that will keep them burdened for all time to come, while countless thousands of Army officers in idleness will dance in glee, drawing big salaries for life. Once you venture out on that sort of policy there is no end to it. This House passed a bill almost unanimously, a bill that the President was satisfied with, which he said was his bill, and yet the Senate has put a standing army of 250,000 soldiers on the people. Section 56 in this bill I consider an outrage. You have now a great number of recruiting stations trying to get men to fill out the special 20,000 that are ordered. They get nowhere. One hundred and forty thousand men are provided for in the Hay bill, and it will take a long time to get them. I want to say to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that if the citizenship of the American Republic at any time is outraged by any other Government, it will not be the force of the standing army that will protect the people of this country in their rights; it will be this great force of patriots—the volunteers, the honest citizens of the country—who will rise up to protect our Republic and back up the notes of the President. [Applause.] The standing army is nothing but a bagatelle. You can not fool anybody with that. We know that in the case of a real war your standing army will amount to nothing but chaff before the wind. You must go out with that flag and the love of country that we know beats in the heart of every true American, regardless of the position that he may occupy, and they will come to the defense of American rights and honor. [Applause.] When our country really needs soldiers to defend her, millions of patriots will rush to arms and rally to the flag. They do not believe in the burden and oppression of a big standing army in peace times. It comes, in the last analysis, to the volunteer soldier, and that is what I want, and not this dangerous and expensive policy of a standing army of 250,000 men to burden the taxpayers with. Let this bill go to conference without any handicap. We can rely on the House conferees taking care of the views of this great body expressed in thunder tones in passing the Hay bill. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Kansas that we have but one more speech on this side, and I will state to the Chair that by agreement between the gentleman from Kansas and myself I yield to him five minutes, and I will now ask him to conclude the debate upon his side.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, there are new and important provisions in this Senate substitute involving millions of dollars of appropriations and important questions of public policy that, with the adoption of this rule—and I concede it will be adopted—will never receive any discussion whatever in this House, and there will be no opportunity for a separate vote on those matters unless the conferees who shall be appointed shall see fit before agreeing to the propositions contained in the bill or any amendment thereof to bring those propositions back to the House for a vote upon them, and one of those propositions, Mr. Speaker, is section 122 of this amendment, known as the nitrate-plant section. A similar section was voted out of the House bill without a debate by a substantial majority, and if it had been debated and the lobby behind it had been exposed, as I now wish it had been, I undertake to say there would not have been 50 votes for it in the House, and yet, Mr. Speaker, this amendment, section 122, has from beginning to the end the earmarks of this same lobby, a lobby as persistent and pernicious as any lobby I have ever known since I have been a Member of Congress.

This lobby has gone before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and urged this proposition as a navigation proposition. They have gone before the Committee on Military Affairs and urged it as a preparedness proposition. They have gone before the Committee on Agriculture and urged it as a fertilizer proposition, and they have now been successful in getting this thing in a very ingenious form in the amendment that is now before us, very innocent appearing upon its face, although they have not all that they want nor what they hope to secure at the hands of these conferees. There is a paragraph in this section that provides that when these plants are erected by the Government they shall be operated by the Government and that there shall be no private cooperation. These lobbyists, no doubt some of them sitting in the galleries at this moment, fully expect these conferees to strike out that proposition, and when they do it they will get exactly what they have been working for, at the hands of Congress for the past two or three years, namely, a dam at Muscle Shoals, at an expense to the Government of $20,000,000, and giving them 200,000 horsepower for the paltry sum of $3 per horsepower per year. That is what is involved in this proposition.

Even though they do not get that, there are only two processes of fixing nitrogen, one owned by the American Cyanimide Co. and the other the Du Pont Powder Co., and charges have been made by each against the other as to this very legislation, charges which are so broad and so serious that there is now pending before the Committee on Rules a resolution to investigate this lobby, and I sincerely hope it will be investigated before this session is over. Before any proposition of this kind is incorporated in this or any other bill that lobby ought to be investigated. There ought to be an opportunity to expose that lobby upon the floor of the House, so that when the House votes upon this proposition, whether contained in a conference report or otherwise, the House may know exactly what it is doing. Even if the section should remain as it is, the water-power lobby will get practically what it wants in the end.

If it was a preparedness proposition, and that is the only excuse it has for being in this bill, why is it confined to water power? Why was not the Secretary of War given the discretion to secure the manufacture of nitric acid in any manner he thought best? The only reason is because if it was secured in any other manner than by the creation of water power the water-power lobby that is behind this section would have no interest in the bill, and they would be cut out of the benefit of millions and millions of dollars that they expect to receive at the hands of this Congress. As I say, there are only two and they are controlled by patented processes. True, this section provides for the securing of those processes by eminent domain, but if this was to go in a bill, before a dollar should be expended upon a dam those processes should first be secured. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say just a word, supplementing what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has just said, and to call the attention of Members of this House to section 122 of the Senate amendment.

I think that the first poem I ever committed to memory, one that I heard when I was a very young boy, and which went the rounds of this country during a presidential campaign, was this:

> If 'tis a sin to steal a pin,
> How much more great to appropriate
> The electoral vote of a sovereign State.

Proceeding by analogy in this case, gentlemen, if it is a sin for one individual to obtain money from another individual on false pretenses, how much more great a sin it is for an individual, or a sovereign State for that matter, to obtain the people's money out of the Public Treasury on false pretenses. [Applause.] This matter is the old wolf in sheep's clothing. It is brought in as a preparedness measure, and I say to you, gentlemen of the House, and I say it advisedly, that the fiction about preparedness in this case is used as an effort to take money from the people under false pretenses. It is all based upon the false premise that water power is necessary for developing nitrogen out of the air, and is therefore something that this country must have in time of war in case we should be deprived of our supply of Chile saltpeter.

I do not intend, and I have not the time, to speak of the very large number of processes that are being used and can be used in this and other countries for extracting nitrogen out of the air without the use of water power. But I simply submit this to you without going into detail: Germany to-day is manufacturing an unlimited quantity of high explosives. To make those high explosives she is extracting an unlimited quantity of nitrogen out of the air, and doing that without the use of an ounce of water power. More, the German chemical interests owned the water power of Norway, the best and cheapest water supply ever developed in the world. They recently sold their stock—their controlling stock—in the Norway water power. Why? Because they had invented a far cheaper method of extracting nitrogen out of the air. We can do it in this country by a number of methods for much less than we could do it with water power.

I tell you, gentlemen, water power as an instrument for making nitrogen is obsolete. You might just as well, as a preparedness measure in the naval bill, build a lot of battleships of the Oregon class as to submit to this Senate proposal to spend $15,000,000 of the American people's money in the development of water power for this alleged purpose. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, these are abnormal times throughout the world. This is not, therefore, a good time in which to adopt a normal policy. Why, within my short memory I have seen this country thrown into a fury by men advocating the adoption of policies that, it was shown, in a few years would have been ruinous to the country. There was a contraction of money. Policies of inflation were advocated that would have made our money worth 50 cents on the dollar. A very few years ago a number of bank failures led others to advocate throughout the country the Government guaranty of bank deposits—that was done on this floor and upon every stump throughout the country.

To-day half the world is at war. The war sentiment is in the United States, but we shall not always be influenced by a sentiment for war. The war spirit will not always control the world nor the United States.

The Senate bill proposes the establishment as a normal, permanent policy a large standing army in the United States. There is no possibility of using the army that is provided for in the Senate bill in any emergency that might arise in the immediate future. Under that measure an army of 250,000 men could not be recruited for the immediate use of the country. If we are in immediate danger, if the sparks are flying all around and are liable to start a conflagration here any minute, what the President should do and what the Congress should do would be to call for half a million volunteers. [Applause.] They would respond within 10 days to the demands of the country.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the Senate proposition to give to the United States a permanent policy of a standing army of 250,000 men. If the President, if the Congress, wants men for immediate service for the defense of the honor, for the preservation of the liberty of the United States, the men can be secured within 10 days for immediate training, and they will differ from those who would enlist in the Regular Army. They will be men from every walk of life, such men as enlisted in 1898 and in the sixties, such men as made up the Nebraska regiment that made itself famous throughout the country and the world [applause]; such men as enlisted in the Twentieth Kansas, which made every regiment in the Regular Army look like toy soldiers when it came to action; such men as fought in every battle of the Civil War. These men are everywhere in the United States, ready to serve their country when their country needs them. They are not ready to enlist in a regular army such as is proposed by the Senate amendment, which amendment, I repeat, would saddle permanently on the country a large standing army in time of peace if the Senate amendment were agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if opportunity is offered, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] will make a motion that the House agree to the substance of section 2 of the Senate amendment, that section fixing the maximum of the Regular Army at 250,000 men, leaving the question of the details of its organization and raising for disposition by the conference committee in the remaining portions of the bill.

This is an authorization, 250,000 men. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] just said that the President can call for half a million men and receive them at once. But the President is not authorized to make such a call. The President can not make the call. What we want to do is to give the President the authority to call for 250,000. [Applause.]

My friend from Kansas says the President can call for half a million and receive them at once. He has not that authority, and then the gentleman votes against the proposition to give the President authority to call for only 250,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We can give him the authority to call for half a million.

Mr. MANN. We can, but we have not done so. All we are asking is to give him the authority for a quarter of a million. Now, gentlemen say this means a permanent Army of 250,000 men. Mr. Speaker, all wisdom will not cease when this Congress ends or when the Members of this Congress have passed on to other duties, either in this world or the next. [Applause.] Congress has the power at any time to increase or decrease the Army. All the older Members of this House know that for years I have stood here opposing a large Navy or a large Army. I do not believe that under normal conditions either one is essential to our peace or our preservation.

I wish that I had the power of expression to make you see what is so clear in my mind. We are sitting on the top of an earthquake in the world. We are the only great, rich, powerful country that is not engaged in war and the only one without a method of defense. We may become at any time involved in war through our notions of our rights or because of the cupidity of other nations. I would rather spend a little money now than to spend oceans of American blood later. [Applause.] I think we ought to prepare for the worst now. [Applause.] I want to keep out of the war; I am opposed to even breaking off diplomatic relations with any of the countries at war in Europe. [Prolonged applause.] I think we ought to remain at peace, to stand even insult and injury. But there is a limit beyond which no one goes; and while in my opinion we have not reached that limit, and I hope we will be able to restrain ourselves so that we will never reach the limit, I am in favor now of preparing men who may be ready and trained to fight, if necessary, before we pour out the blood of the volunteers, unprepared and untrained. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 11 minutes.

Mr. POU. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to appeal to anybody's passion. I only want to appeal to the good sense of this House and to the fairness of the House. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has talked about his great desire that this country shall be prepared for any emergency which may arise. He has no greater desire than I that the country should be prepared; but I do not want to put upon the country a proposition which will not prepare us, and this Senate bill is an attempt to fool the country into believing that we are doing something to make preparations when we are not. [Applause.]

This amendment provides for an Army in the discretion of the President of 250,000 men. But will they come when he calls for them? Has it ever been known in the history of this country that the Regular Army, when war came, was recruited?

What men have fought the wars of this country? During the Civil War did you rely upon your Regular Army? Did you recruit up your Regular Army? Gentlemen, if war should be declared to-morrow, or next week, or next month this legislation would be thrown aside as worthless for preparation for that war. If gentlemen have the courage of their convictions, if we believe that this is preparation, and the kind of preparation that they claim we ought to have, why did not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offer an amendment to the House bill when it was before this House, providing for compulsory military service? Then he would have gotten the men which he says he wants. When that bill was before the House, why did not the gentleman offer an amendment to increase the pay of the soldiers of the Regular Army, so that he might induce men to enlist in the Army? He did neither one of those two essential things. We have had trouble in Mexico. In the last few days we have had much said about the possibility of war with Germany. Yet, where are the 20,000 men that we authorized to be recruited? How many have been recruited in the last six weeks? Just 4,669 men; and all the time that those men were being recruited, other men were going out of the Army by reason of the expiration of their terms of enlistment. If you are going to rely on the Senate bill, if you are ready to believe that by voting for these 250,000 men you are going to prepare for an emergency, you believe what is not true, and what you know is not true. [Applause.] You are voting for it in response to a sentiment, and in response to a fear of your constituents, and not because you believe you are going to get the men under it. The very bill itself provides that they shall not be raised except in five annual increments, and even so they can not be raised at all. The first annual increment can not be raised within a year. To show you what the War Department thinks about this proposition, they have sent to the Committee on Military Affairs an estimate of the men they believe it necessary to appropriate for for the next fiscal year. They could have asked for 120,000 men. They have only asked for 105,000 men for the Regular Army for the next fiscal year. That shows that they know they can not get these men; and when you go home to your constituents and tell them that you have provided them with an Army of 250,000 men, you are telling them something which you ought to know and which I now tell you is not a fact. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], who, unlike the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], is opposed to a certain provision in the Senate bill, seems to assume that the House conferees are not going to do their duty by this House. I have been in this House a good many years. I have been a conferee on many bills, and this is the first time that I have ever been charged with any intention to defeat the purposes of this House. [Applause.] I know as well as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] knows that this House voted down an amendment for a nitrate proposition, and until I get a further instruction from the House on that proposition I will not depart from the instruction that I consider the House has given me on that. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Then, if this resolution is adopted, the gentleman gives the House his assurance that the conferees will not agree to section 122 of the Chamberlain amendment as it passed the Senate?

Mr. HAY. Until the House instructs me further; yes.

Mr. MAPES. Further than by the adoption of this resolution?

Mr. HAY. Exactly. Now, as I was going on to say, the conferees are entitled to the confidence of the House. Not one of them, so far as I know, has ever violated that confidence; and why should we now have our hands tied by the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and go into a conference with the Senate conferees unable to do our duty as we ought to do it by this House. It is a most unusual proposition for conferees to be bound in the first conference. It has happened but few times in this House, and I am not sure but that an instruction would be subject to a point of order for that reason. So I want to assure these gentlemen who come from the great cities of the country, and who are actuated by the panic of great riches, who have heard fairy tales about a German army being landed upon the shores of this country within two weeks after a declaration of war—I want to assure these gentlemen that they can possess their souls in patience, and that if the conferees on the part of the House are left untrammeled they will bring back here a better measure of preparedness than is contained in the Senate amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman permit one question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. POU. I move the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the previous question.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 207, nays 144, answered "present" 1, not voting 81, as follows:

The name of Mr. EAGAN was called, and he answered "Present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the adoption of the rule.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN was recognized.

Mr. LONDON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. LONDON. I move to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from California. Is the gentleman from California opposed to the bill?

Mr. KAHN. I am opposed to the Senate amendment as it stands.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KAHN moves that the bill H. R. 12766 be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to that committee to report the said bill back to the House forthwith with a recommendation that the Senate amendment to the text of the bill be concurred in with the following amendment: "Strike out all of the said amendment except section 2."

Mr. HAY. I make a point of order on that.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. HAY. As soon as I can inspect the motion to recommit I will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California stated that he was opposed to the Senate amendment. I submit to the Speaker that that does not come within the rule. He must say that he is opposed to the bill, and the bill being considered is the House bill and not the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman correct?

Mr. HARRISON. I think I am.

The SPEAKER. Is not the very thing being considered the Senate amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. It is the Senate amendment to a House bill, but the bill being considered is the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that the matter in controversy here is the Senate amendment, and that it is the only thing in controversy.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, this is a House bill with a Senate amendment, and we are now considering the House bill with a Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is not reasonable to suppose that the House will go back on its own bill.

Mr. MANN. It can not.

Mr. FOSTER. They are not going back on the House bill, they are disagreeing to the Senate amendments, and it is a House bill with Senate amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, the very amendment that the gentleman proposes to concur in is a Senate amendment to the House bill.

Mr. HAY. With an amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. With an amendment.

The SPEAKER. It strikes out all of the Senate amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. The message came back from the Senate as a House bill with Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, of course this is a House bill pending before the House, a House bill that has passed the House. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was made and that motion was laid on the table, and it is not within the power of the House itself under the rules of the House to change a word in the House bill of its own motion. The only way that it can make a change in the House bill as it passed the House is by agreeing to some proposition which the Senate proposes or which comes to the House as a result of a conference between the House and the Senate. The House can not take any vote upon the House bill now. The only thing that the House can dispose of now are the Senate amendments. To ask whether a Member is opposed to the original House bill upon which the House can not act would be ridiculous, as it seems to me. The question is, What will the House do with the Senate amendments? That is the question that has to be put when the Speaker asks whether the Member making the motion is opposed to the proposition.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the House can dispose of the whole bill by concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. That is what I said. The House can not change a line in the House bill except by acting upon the Senate amendments.

Mr. HAY. And the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is making a motion to recommit this bill to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to that committee to bring back a recommendation to concur in the Senate amendments with an amendment. He is actually moving to take affirmative action on the Senate amendments with an amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is opposed to the Senate amendments and to the House bill. He voted against the House bill when it was up here before, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] voted for the House bill, and I submit that the gentleman from New York comes within the rules more than does the gentleman from California.

The SPEAKER. No doubt the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] would vote against any proposition that could be made with reference to this military preparedness. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. In a moment. The gentleman from New York has stated that courageously, honestly, and fairly, but the only question is whether or not the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], the leading minority member of the Committee on Military Affairs, brings himself reasonably within the rule. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair has made up his mind, I do not care to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never makes up his mind so that he can not change it by sufficient argument. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I know that statement to be absolutely true, for I never knew a man in the chair who wanted to do what he thinks is right more than the present occupant of the chair. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, may we have the motion again reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the motion of the gentleman from California to recommit.

The Clerk again reported the motion to recommit.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, all I desire to present to the Chair is my view as to which of the two gentlemen—the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON]—is entitled to preferential recognition for the purpose of making the motion to recommit. Under the rules of the House, for the purpose of protecting the rights of the minority and for the purpose of giving the minority the right to go on record as to its views regarding the legislation before the House, the rules provide that when a Member states he is opposed to the bill or to the measure before the House he is entitled to preferential recognition to make that motion. With this exception, recognition for a motion to recommit is discretionary with the Speaker. What is the condition the House is in, or, rather, what measure is now up for consideration before the House? Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the House is not considering by itself standing alone a Senate amendment. The question before the House is a House bill with Senate amendments. The proposition before the House is the House bill. We passed the bill and it went to the Senate, and the Senate passed it with two amendments, one of them striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting a new text, and the other amendment being simply to the title of the bill. That bill was messaged back from the Senate to the House, stating that the Senate had passed the House bill with certain amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was asked. That bill, the House bill with Senate amendments, is now before the House, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] makes a motion to recommit, stating that he is opposed to the Senate amendment, or to certain parts of it, and he offers to concur in the amendment with an amendment striking it all out save the part dealing with the size of the Army, which motion is an admission by the gentleman from California that he favors the legislation before the House.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is opposed not only to the Senate amendments, but is opposed to the bill in its entirety. He is opposed to the bill before the House, to wit, the House bill with Senate amendments, and it seems to me that under the rule he is entitled to preferential recognition for the purpose of making the motion to recommit. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think, after reflection, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], who is opposed to the whole business from start to finish, and who not only speaks for a minority but is the whole minority in himself, is entitled to recognition to make that motion.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit upon the ground that I voted against the original bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] voted against the original bill in the House and is also against the Senate amendments, and I submit, all things considered, the Republican minority is entitled to recognition to make the motion to recommit in preference to some one who represents only himself on the floor of this House.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Illinois on the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. BRITTEN. No.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON]. The situation is this: The Chair first recognized the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], the ranking Republican on the Committee on Military Affairs, but he failed to qualify under the practice and was ruled out; then the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] arose and addressed the Chair. He was recognized by the Chair because he is notoriously opposed to the increase of military and naval forces and was fairly entitled to recognition; after he had been recognized by the Chair, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], who also voted against the bill and is opposed to it, demanded recognition, but he was too late, as the gentleman from New York had already been recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think that is an unfair recognition.

Mr. LONDON. I offer the amendment and offer the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. There will be no debate on it. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LONDON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, and on that he moves the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 186, nays 161, answered "present" 3, not voting 83, as follows:

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12843, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

An act (H. R. 12843) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, Mr. ASHBROOK, and Mr. FULLER.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose I had a point of order pending against a paragraph of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is correct. A point of order was reserved.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina what is the provision of law in reference to these experiment stations in the islands and in Alaska?

Mr. LEVER. There is no law except the appropriation bill from year to year.

Mr. MANN. It is proposed this year to make a considerable increase, or some increase, in the appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. We make an increase, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, in all of these stations except one.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. We did that for this reason: The gentleman will remember that in the consideration of the bill last year a point of order was made against that provision which was carried in this item, which enabled the Secretary to sell the products of these stations and use those funds in the work of the stations. I think the gentleman himself made the point of order, which was well taken. I am glad he made it.

Mr. MANN. Yes. That is not in this bill.

Mr. LEVER. No; that is not in this bill. It was found in the case of the Alaska station, for instance, that the proceeds during the past year from the sale of products amounted to about $8,000, and the committee thought that inasmuch as the station had been using these products in the past, we ought to make their funds what they were in the past.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the relative utility and economy of agricultural products for food, clothing, and other uses in the home, with special suggestions of plans and methods for the more effective utilization of such products for these purposes, with the cooperation of other bureaus of the department, and to disseminate useful information on this subject, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, supplies, and all other necessary expenses, $24,220.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this paragraph in the bill, because it is an instance of research run wild. This provision is under the home economics investigation of the bureau, and it is supposed to provide for an investigation of the use of agricultural products for food and clothing.

I find, upon looking up the program of the department, that they have been engaged in ascertaining the digestibility of certain kinds of agricultural products as foods; and with reference to the adaptability of agricultural products for clothing, the department has disseminated some general information pertaining to spots and stains on clothing and their removal. The gentleman who appeared before the committee states also the department under this item is engaged in considering the finishing of walls and ceilings, the proper height of work tables, sinks, and so on, the arrangement of household furniture, and the choice of house furniture. I suppose they would have the country believe that the farmers and their wives are anxious to know whether they ought to have rocking-chairs in the kitchen or couches in the woodshed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was the gentleman reading from the hearings before the Rivers and Harbors Committee, or before the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. WALSH. I happened to be reading from page 1225 of the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture, from the testimony of the chief of this particular office or branch.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are we spending $24,200 a year to find out how to remove stains from clothing?

Mr. WALSH. I think they have spent $29,980 on this and like problems.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think that is an economical expenditure?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so. I do not think the farmers of this country are anxious to know how they can remove from their clothing the spots and stains that come from honest toil upon the farm. Yet the committee propose to expend $24,000, or $2,000 a month, to tell the farmers and the farmers' wives how they can remove spots from clothing, and whether squash, pumpkins, sweet potatoes, and other agricultural products are digestible. I submit that here is an item in this bill where the committee can practice economy. I submit that there is no justification for any such research or any such investigation on the part of a department of this Government. Think of it! The farmer's wife can write to the Department of Agriculture and ask this great Government how she can remove an ink stain from clothing, or how she can put up preserves, dried apples, or other agricultural products. I submit that a department as important as this ought to be spending its time and energies in the expenditure of Government funds on more important problems. I think it is time that we cried halt on such research as that which is proposed in this item. It is only another item of the bill which tends to deepen the impression that prevails, that Uncle Sam's highest ambition is to be a national Santa Claus.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield for a question or I will yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in my part of the country it is considered quite the proper thing to remove ink stains and grease stains, which do get on clothing, and I had supposed it would not be improper to do that even in Massachusetts. [Laughter.] We have to learn how it is done. I have seen fakers on the street, with some kind of preparation that purported to do this, and they were surrounded by a large crowd. I remember seeing that particularly in Boston: but I judge from the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts that it is purely academic information there. They want to learn from the faker, but do not want to know how to remove the stain. What is the use! [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. MANN. I have yielded the floor.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, how many minutes remain?

The CHAIRMAN. There are three minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] entirely misunderstands the situation in the country. There is no more important problem before the American public to-day than the problem of the country woman. Two years ago we passed what was known as the agricultural extension act. Among its provisions is one requiring the teaching of home economics. Home economics has to do with the work of the farm woman and the farm children. This item carries the appropriation which furnishes the foundation upon which the teaching of home economics is to be done in the future. Of course it may not appear to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] that the matter of removing stains, or the preparation of proper cooking recipes, or of looking into the comparative digestibility of certain articles of food common to the people of the country is a matter of any moment, but that is due to the fact that the gentleman does not know anything about the country. He does not know anything about rural economics. [Applause.] We are spending in this bill to-day hundreds of thousands of dollars to teach the people of this country the best ration for a pig or a cow or a horse. The gentleman has not raised his voice against these items, but when we want to give information as to the best kinds of food for our wives and our children, and the proper way to prepare them, the gentleman from Massachusetts objects. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts to strike out the paragraph.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering: One director, who shall be a scientist and have charge of all scientific and technical work, $5,000; 1 draftsman or clerk, $1,920; 1 chief clerk, $1,900; 1 model maker, $1,800; 2 clerks, class 4; 5 clerks, class 3; 1 clerk or editorial clerk, $1,600; 1 clerk, $1,500; 1 clerk or photographer, $1,440; 1 clerk or instrument maker, $1,440; 1 clerk or tabulator, $1,440; 1 clerk, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,380; 2 clerks, at $1,320 each; 4 clerks, at $1,260 each; 6 clerks, class 1; 1 clerk or editorial clerk, $1,200; 1 draftsman, $1,320; 1 clerk or draftsman, $1,200; 1 clerk or draftsman, $900; 1 clerk or photographer, $1,200; 1 clerk or photographer, $1,000; 2 clerks, at $1,140 each; 2 clerks, at $1,080 each; 1 clerk, $1,020; 7 clerks, at $1,000 each; 1 clerk or skilled laborer, $1,000; 3 clerks, at $900 each; 1 mechanician, $1,680; 1 clerk or instrument maker, $1,200; 1 lantern slide colorist, $1,320; 1 mechanic, $1,200; 1 carpenter, $1,200; 1 messenger, laborer, or laboratory helper, $840; 1 messenger or laborer, $840; 2 messengers, laborers, or laboratory helpers, at $720 each; 2 messengers or laborers, at $660 each; 5 messengers, laborers, or messenger boys, at $600 each; 7 laborers, messenger boys, or charwomen, at $480 each; 5 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $88,880.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I notice that the committee has recommended an increase in the salary of the Director of Public Roads and Rural Engineering from $4,500 to $5,000. My attention has also been called to other increases in the salaries of heads of bureaus and divisions of $250 and $500. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what was the reason for making these increases in the salaries of the heads of these respective offices? For instance, here is an item which we have passed which provided an increase in the salary of the editor of the Division of Publications from $3,250 to $3,500, and there are other instances. Will the chairman indicate to the committee the number of salaries of head officials that have been increased, and what was the reason that prompted the committee in recommending these increases?

Mr. LEVER. There have been only two increases, one in the Division of Publications, $250, and this item of $500. The committee, in recommending the increase in the Division of Publications, took into consideration the fact that the present chief of that bureau is one of the most efficient men in the Government service. He has been in the service for a great many years, and has had no increase in salary in some time. That increase was not recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. STAFFORD. What member of the committee recommended it?

Mr. LEVER. I do not mind telling the gentleman. It was the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not wish to embarrass the gentleman at all, but I assumed that if the department did not recommend it there was some one in the committee who was interested in looking after this most worthy official.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RUBEY. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I made the motion in the committee for this increase, and I did so because the gentleman to whom the committee voted this increase has been in the department for 25 years. I made the motion without consulting him. He did not know anything about it. In the 25 years that he has been connected with the department he has never asked for an increase. I did not even know from what State he came. I did not know anything about him, except that he was an efficient man and an accommodating gentleman who had rendered valuable service and has been in the department year after year and has never had an increase. I felt that we ought to make this increase of $250, bringing his salary up to $3,500 and placing him upon a par with other gentlemen in the Agricultural Department who hold similar positions and who receive that amount. This man does not come from my State. I have since learned that he comes from the State of Indiana.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assumed that he was a very efficient man, else I would have made a point of order or reserved a point of order against the item. I assumed that he was a very worthy official and that there must be some good reason that prompted the committee to make that recommendation. Now, what is the purpose of increasing the salary of the director of the Public Roads Division from $4,500 to $5,000? Of course, there are other chiefs that receive $4,500, but when you once raise the salary of one chief it is an incentive when the committee commences to prepare the bill again to have the committee raise every other salary accordingly, as instanced by the gentleman from Missouri in the case at hand.

Mr. LEVER. The Secretary of Agriculture two years ago and, I think, three years ago insistently recommended an increase of $500 in the chief of the Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering. The committee has each time allowed the increase. The present head of the service is one of the great road engineers of the world. We have felt that the road question is becoming more acute each day, and the demands on his service each day are growing larger and larger. His responsibility is greater, he is being called upon from time to time to advise the various legislative agencies in States and is endeavoring to provide, as far as possible, a uniform and useful system of roads and roads maintenance in this country, and we think such a man ought to be the highest type of man, a man of peculiar information, good judgment, sound business ability.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long has he held the position?

Mr. LEVER. I do not know. He has been there ever since I have been connected with the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. What was the initial salary?

Mr. LEVER. I do not remember. He has been holding this salary, I think, six or eight years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I presume there is good warrant for the committee making an exception of these two cases, but I thought the committee might be prompted to do it in view of the possible Federal legislation involving heavier work on this official.

Mr. LEVER. We did have that in mind.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire further, so that I may have a true concept of the policy of the committee in framing the bill, as to whether the committee when they transferred from the lump-sum appropriation to the statutory rolls they transferred all clerks who are performing work other than of a scientific character, so that next year the committee will be in a position, when confronting the heads of the respective bureaus, in case they divert the lump-sum appropriation that Congress intends for field service, that they will have no excuse and can not abuse or use it as a ruse to justify their utilizing it for some other purpose than Congress intended.

Mr. LEVER. In every case the information the committee has from the bureaus is that all their clerks carried on the lump-sum rolls not of a scientific character and whose employment is of a permanent nature have been transferred to the statutory roll.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand the chairman, the committee took into consideration the likelihood of Federal legislation in road making?

Mr. LEVER. We did.

Mr. WALSH. If there is no Federal legislation, does the gentleman still think the increase would be warranted?

Mr. LEVER. I think it would.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to ask the gentleman when it was—I do not recollect—that this road bureau was called the Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering?

Mr. LEVER. One year ago, under an authorization to rearrange and reorganize the department.

Mr. BORLAND. And it was then that the swamp drainage was put under the Road Bureau.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; transferred from what is known as the Office of Experiment Stations.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it the intention to separate this department and have a department purely for roads if the Federal legislation becomes a law?

Mr. LEVER. I would think that it would remain generally as it is, although I have no information about that.

Mr. MANN. How many bureau chiefs, may I ask, who receive $5,000 in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. LEVER. I think we can name them: The Weather Bureau, the Bureau of Animal Industry, the Bureau of Plant Industry, the Forest Service, and the Bureau of Chemistry—five.

Mr. MANN. How many bureaus are there whose heads receive less than $5,000?

Mr. LEVER. The Bureau of Soils, the Bureau of Entomology, the Biological Survey, the Office of Roads, the Division of Publications, the Division of Accounts and Disbursements, the Bureau of Crop Estimates, the States Relations Service, the Office of Markets, and the Library.

Mr. MANN. The Bureau of Markets?

Mr. LEVER. The chief of that office receives $4,500.

Mr. MANN. Nearly all of these bureaus have just as much money expended under them and a great deal more diverse work done under them than under the chief of this bureau.

Mr. LEVER. Well, the Bureau of Markets is a new service. The gentleman in charge of that work is one of the ablest men in the department, but he has been in charge of this work only a few years.

Mr. MANN. The chief of the Bureau of Soils has $4,000 and the chief of the Bureau of Crop Estimates $3,500.

Mr. LEVER. But I do not regard either of these bureaus as equal in importance to the Office of Roads.

Mr. MANN. I judged from the efforts my friend has made in reference to the crop estimates that he thought that was the most important of all.

Mr. LEVER. My efforts had to do with the Census Bureau.

Mr. MANN. The Bureau of Markets is probably the most difficult bureau in the department. Now, if we consider building Federal roads, if that bill becomes a law, and the Government spends a large amount of money, under the control of this chief of the bureau, I think his salary ought to be increased; but it is quite certain, it seems to me, that you can not increase this salary from $4,500 to $5,000 without increasing the salaries of $3,500 and $4,000, and without increasing the other salary of $4,500, because this work has not expanded recently to any extent, and there is nothing very difficult about it. I agree that the gentleman is undoubtedly an efficient chief.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not true that placing the rural engineering work under this bureau has not increased the duties of the chief?

Mr. LEVER. The duties of the chief of the bureau have somewhat increased; we have added to it irrigation investigation and also some work with reference to rural engineering. Notwithstanding that fact, however, the committee before that time recommended to the House here once or twice an increase in this gentleman's salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Is it not a fact that the activities of this particular bureau have expanded and multiplied more than those of almost any other bureau in the department?

Mr. LEVER. This bureau has increased in its work and activities probably more than any other bureau in the Department of Agriculture, with the exception of the Bureau of Markets, which is a new bureau.

Mr. SLOAN. Is it not a fact that this particular bureau is now sending throughout the United States, wherever called for, efficient men to aid in the work of advising and assisting in ideal road building everywhere, where called upon, and is, in fact, doing a great deal more than it has ever done before and is being called upon for more work all of the time?

Mr. LEVER. I think that is true, and it is true.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman speaks of the increase. Is it not a fact that the appropriation proposed this year is $599,000 for this bureau, while last year it was $586,000; practically the same?

Mr. LEVER. It is an increase of about $13,000, but that is a considerable increase over what it was three years ago.

Mr. MANN. An increase of 2 per cent in a year—not very much.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Against just what is the point of order directed?

Mr. MANN. It is against the figures "$5,000," in line 26, page 66.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting the figures "$4,500" at the place where the other figures are stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 66, line 26, after the word "work," insert "$4,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to these several gentlemen extending their remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I called attention in the previous paragraph to the method of making the estimates and appropriations for certain minor employees. On page 67 there are various items, and I will read a few of them:

One draftsman or clerk, one clerk or instrument maker, one clerk or photographer, one clerk or tabulator, one clerk or editorial clerk, one clerk or draftsman, one clerk or draftsman, one clerk or photographer, one clerk or photographer, one clerk or skilled laborer, one clerk or instrument maker—

And so forth.

It does seem to me that the department ought to be able to determine whether they want instrument makers or clerks. I do not imagine that the average clerk is a very good instrument maker and I am quite sure that a good instrument maker is not much of a clerk.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, as I said to the gentleman on a previous occasion, the explanation of the department, of course, was accepted by the committee, and that is, that they make these dual designations, as it were, in order to give them more flexibility in getting their clerks and employees from the civil service.

Mr. MANN. There would be still more flexibility if we just said, "Employees in this bureau, $88,880."

Mr. LEVER. That is very true.

Mr. MANN. But we have found through long experience that too much flexibility adds to the number of employees and the expense without adding to the efficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I would like to know what there is that this Roads Bureau does which requires so many clerks. Just what do they do?

Mr. LEVER. The story of what the Office of Roads does is a long story.

Mr. MADDEN. Let us hear it.

Mr. LEVER. I am sure it is too long for me to tell in even five minutes. The Office of Roads, of course, is engaged in investigations along a number of lines that have to do with the technical question of road building, road maintenance, the question of the best kinds of material for road building and binders, and things of that kind; and in addition to that it also has to do with the irrigation problems in the West.

Mr. MADDEN. What has that to do with roads?

Mr. LEVER. It is in this bureau.

Mr. MADDEN. How much money is appropriated altogether for the Road Bureau?

Mr. LEVER. Five hundred and ninety-nine thousand dollars.

Mr. MADDEN. Do they build any roads?

Mr. LEVER. They have built a few experimental roads. They have one out here at Chevy Chase and one in the direction of Alexandria, and one in Maryland, where they are making investigations of the best types of roads to build, and what is the best material to be used in the way of binders, and so on.

Mr. MADDEN. Does any community in the United States ever adopt the suggestion they make as to the character of materials to be used?

Mr. LEVER. I think so, without a doubt.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman know that every community has a particular material close by that it can move to the road to be built economically, and that that is used in preference to all other materials regardless of what the Department of Agriculture determines—that the cost always determines the question?

Mr. LEVER. That is very true, but the gentleman will realize that almost every community not only has one road material but several road materials that can be used.

Now, the work of the department in some of its aspects is to determine for that community which is the best of the road materials it has at hand with which to build a local road under local conditions, and they frequently send an engineer for that purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. What are the engineer departments of the various States and counties for? Are they not organized for the same purpose?

Mr. LEVER. A great many of the States do not have these departments, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. All States have some kind of road organization.

Mr. LEVER. Of course, the department here works in close cooperation with such States as have road-engineering features.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. MADDEN. Go ahead.

Mr. HAWLEY. Did not the director say before the committee this year and last that they were devoting a great deal of attention to the construction of dirt or earth roads?

Mr. LEVER. More attention this year than they have ever done in the past.

Mr. HAWLEY. And there is more demand for the construction of dirt roads than ever before?

Mr. LEVER. There is more demand for the construction of dirt roads than ever before, and there is more agitation for road building in this country than ever before.

Mr. MADDEN. I know, but it is not all done through the Bureau of Roads in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. LEVER. Let me illustrate. In one of the counties in my district there was a bond proposition on. It was lost, I may say, but the people down there asked me to send a road man to talk over the situation with the progressive men in the community. He went and suggested to them under their local situation what would be the best type of road that might be built there and what it would probably cost, according to his judgment. That is being done all over the country, and it is really a bureau of education coupled with investigation.

Mr. MADDEN. What proportion of the total amount appropriated is used, as a matter of fact, for the building of roads?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for three minutes more.

Mr. LEVER. Make it five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I will ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. What proportion of the total appropriation is expended in the real construction of roads?

Mr. LEVER. I would say a very small proportion of the entire appropriation is spent for the building of roads as such. Sixty thousand dollars, I am informed, is the total, which is about 10 per cent.

Mr. TILSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly; when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is through.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina really believe that the work done by the Bureau of Roads in the Agricultural Department justifies the department?

Mr. LEVER. I think the appropriation for the maintenance of the Office of Public Roads in the Department of Agriculture is one of the best dividend-paying investments that this committee makes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know any particular case where roads have been built as the result of the investigation made by the Bureau of Roads in the Agricultural Department, and on the recommendations of the department?

Mr. HAWLEY rose.

Mr. LEVER. My friend from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] is about to give you an instance, I think.

Mr. HAWLEY. In a certain section of the South there was a road that ran through a gumbo swamp. It became impassable during certain seasons of the year. It was a very essential part of a great road, and they had planked it with cypress, but the base was so soft it was out of repair a great deal of the time during the winter months. They appealed to the Director of Public Roads in Washington, and he sent some experts down there to investigate the question. As a result they built a road through that swamp, and when it was reported on about two years ago, after having been in use for two or three years, it was in good repair, and could be used the entire year around. That is one instance out of a very great many that can be cited.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit, I can give him another that has just been brought to my attention. About two or three years ago the department built a model road in Chaighead County, in Arkansas. It is said to be one of the finest gravel roads ever built in that county. The result has been to greatly stimulate interest in that county and in that State for better roads, and that is the general result from this work throughout the country.

Mr. HAWLEY. There were constructed later many roads, I might add, like that which was built through this gumbo swamp.

Mr. LEVER. And we could pile these illustrations up very high.

Mr. MADDEN. I was wondering whether, in view of the fact that in all the States I know anything about, they have efficient organizations for road building in both the counties and townships, whether a bureau of roads in the department was needed at all.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. These State departments, as I recall, are continually applying to the office here for expert advice and counsel, and the better the road engineers are in the State the more they appreciate the advice and counsel given by the department, and they apply to them continually.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the committee believe that the knowledge possessed by the men in charge of the Bureau of Roads in the Department of Agriculture is better than that possessed by the engineers in the State road organizations?

Mr. LEVER. I would not like to commit myself to the proposition that they were a higher class of men or a higher class of scientists, but I may say this, however, that the men in the Department of Agriculture have an advantage in reference to roads just as the Bureau of Plant Industry men have advantage over the State scientists. They get the benefit of all the best in all the States in the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. In other words, the Office of Roads, just like all these other various activities in the Department of Agriculture, is in a measure a gathering place for the best of the various things that are being done along certain lines.

Mr. MADDEN. So that, as a matter of fact, instead of the State depending upon the Bureau of Roads in the Department of Agriculture for information, the Bureau of Roads in the Department of Agriculture is getting the information from the States and then disseminating it in other directions.

Mr. LEVER. No; that does not necessarily follow. The Office of Public Roads, like all the bureaus of the Department of Agriculture, is getting its information wherever it can, and from the fact that its work is scattered all over the country it is given opportunities that the State road systems would not have.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman thinks that the money appropriated is properly expended and ought to be continued?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; we think so.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question in that connection?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman know of any item in this entire bill where the money is doing more good to the people throughout the country than this good-roads appropriation?

Mr. LEVER. I think this is the best dividend paying of all the appropriations that we make.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says "throughout the country." Does not the gentleman mean this Chevy Chase road out here—not throughout the country, but right here, and the road to Alexandria—not throughout the country, but right here where we ride?

Mr. LEVER. The Government built both of those roads.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield, and to whom?

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Bureau of Public Roads stands as a clearing house for information for all the bureaus of public roads in the several States of the Union, and instead of every State in the Union maintaining a bureau that would be compelled to go all over the country to get information at great expense to each State, we gather it all together here in one bureau, from which that information is furnished without great expense to the States.

Mr. LEVER. Yes. The theory underlying the Office of Roads is exactly the same as the theory underlying the work of the entire Department of Agriculture.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I wish to ask a question in regard to the building of sample roads, as distinguished from the dissemination of engineering information. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has spoken of the roads in the vicinity of Washington, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has referred to a road down in Arkansas as being built under the supervision of this department. I wish to ask the gentleman how extensively has work of this kind been carried on, realizing the fact that the climatic and soil conditions are different in different parts of the country, and that the same kind of material that is used in Arizona, for example, might not be the best material in Connecticut or in Pennsylvania, and vice versa.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman must have misunderstood my statement, or I did not make it entirely clear. The roads actually built by the Office of Public Roads in the Department of Agriculture are those roads near at hand, to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has referred; one out here by the District line, at Rockville, Md., and one at Bradley Lane, Md.; and then they have one under way in Alexandria County, Va. These roads that have been built in this vicinity have been constructed for the purpose of testing out various and sundry kinds of materials that are recommended for road building.

Mr. TILSON. But you can only test them out under the climatic and other conditions that prevail in the vicinity of Washington.

Mr. LEVER. Let me go a little further. These roads are really the field laboratory of the Office of Public Roads, and they have been concentrated here so that they can be under the closest observation at the least expenditure of money. The roads to which the gentleman refers, such as I referred to a moment ago in Arkansas, are not, in fact, built by the Office of Public Roads at all. That is to say, they are not actually constructed by the Office of Public Roads. The construction is under the supervision—the complete supervision—of the Office of Public Roads, but the actual work and the actual money put into the roads, aside from the salaries of the supervisory force, are all furnished by the local authorities of the States.

Mr. TILSON. In those cases they are simply gathering information which is developed by the work of the States?

Mr. LEVER. We are doing both. We are not only gathering information, but at the same time we are disseminating that information in that community.

Mr. TILSON. Then, as a matter of fact, we have not built roads at any place except in the vicinity of Washington?

Mr. LEVER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, has all time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. No; there is no limit fixed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] what is being done by the Road Bureau with a view of connecting up good roads with railroad and waterway terminals?

Mr. LEVER. Well, if they have any work of that kind under consideration it was not brought to the attention of the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They have or have not?

Mr. LEVER. I would say that if they have any project which in itself looks to the linking of the country road with the terminal and the railroad and the water facilities of the country, the committee is not advised of it. Of course, the ultimate aim of all the work of the Office of Roads is to furnish better transportation facilities from the farm to the market.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I am inquiring about.

Mr. LEVER. But they are making no general survey of that situation. Their whole plan looks to that, of course, ultimately.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We are spending a large sum of money to spread information in regard to road construction. If the road is to be of any great value to the farmer in helping him to get to the market it ought to connect up with terminals somewhere, either a railroad terminal or a water terminal. At the proper time I will introduce an amendment which will suggest to the bureau the advisability of giving special consideration to the matter of terminals. A road that begins nowhere and ends nowhere is of no general service, of course.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I take it that no man in charge of building the roads would fail to take into account the fundamental purpose of road building that the gentleman has suggested, namely, to connect up the man who has something to sell by cheaper road facilities with the man who wants to buy something.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If we considered the matter of the transportation of farm products in relation to freight rates it would be conceded by most people who have studied the subject, I think, that the road leading to a waterway terminal would facilitate the transportation of the farm products to the market at a cheaper rate than could be attained otherwise. The development of waterways has been discouraged to a large extent, for reasons which it is not now necessary to explain; but I think when the time comes for offering this amendment, I can show to the Agricultural Committee and the chairman that if roads lead up to terminals on waterways, the farmers of the country will be very greatly advantaged. One of the farmer's difficulties now is in getting to market. I understand provision is made in this bill for an appropriation which will further the dissemination of information with respect to markets. It seems to me the one practical way to help the farmer is to link up his avenues of communication; that is, to make his roads lead somewhere where they will be of special advantage to him. That will apply to cotton, which now has to take the railroad to get to the sea, and which has no special advantage from inside waterways, because they are not sufficiently improved. It would apply to food products which are now often permitted to go to waste because there are no intermediate transportation facilities by water. I mention this now, in the course of these five minutes, in order that the chairman may think it over before the time comes for offering the amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ADAMSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12766) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. BROUSSARD, Mr. DU PONT, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inquiries in regard to systems of road management throughout the United States and for giving expert advice on this subject, $39,540.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture whether there is very much interest throughout the country manifested by inquiries coming to the department as to the proper kinds of material for road building?

Mr. LEVER. I understand that the chemical and physical laboratory of the Office of Roads is kept busy investigating the materials sent to them from time to time from different portions of the country to determine whether or not they are good road materials.

Mr. FESS. Just last week I received a communication from a town in my own immediate vicinity, stating that they were about to rebuild the roads throughout the town, and making some inquiry about the material glutrin, saying that it had been used here about Washington, and wanting to know whether I could get any information about it. I thought it was a perfectly legitimate inquiry, so I took it up with the department and asked them whether they had any bulletins upon this matter. The chief of that bureau kindly stated that they not only had bulletins, but that he would write a letter giving specific information to the member of the council of this particular town. Now, while some people might think that is not the business of the Government, it seems to me that it is distinctively a legitimate realm of Government service for the Government to give this information.

Mr. LEVER. I agree with the gentleman most heartily.

Mr. FESS. And these roads about the city here are really the field laboratory by which the department determines whether this or other material is good or bad.

Mr. LEVER. That is very true, and without such investigation, of course the gentleman's inquiry would have been unanswered. There would have been no information to give.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BAILEY. I was very much interested in the statement of the chairman in regard to the county which had up a bonding proposition that failed. I wanted to know if the failure of that proposition was due in any degree to the hope that at some time the road would be built for the county, instead of the county having to build it for itself?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman, as to the road proposition to which I referred a moment ago, that the reason for the defeat of the bond issue involved a good many propositions, but not the one the gentleman suggests.

Mr. BAILEY. Not at all?

Mr. LEVER. No.

Mr. BAILEY. I just wanted to know, because I believe there are cases where the prospect of getting something for nothing would have that effect.

Mr. LEVER. In this case the county was going to put up the funds, of course.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. With pleasure.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I feel that this is a very important item in the bill. I come from a district that expends and has expended vast sums in road building. We were virtually pioneers in that work, and built many miles of macadam roads. Within a few years after they were built these roads began to deteriorate, and then additional sums were expended in rebuilding them. This was made necessary because we lacked the knowledge as to what was the best material. We used gravel, concrete, and macadam, with various kinds of binders.

It seems to me that in road building there are four things which ought to be taken into consideration: First, the weight of the traffic which goes over the road; second, the temperature; third, the rainfall; and, fourth, the accessibility of the material from which to make the road. When we built our first roads the traffic was comparatively light, but now, with heavy motor trucks, often weighing 7 or even 10 tons, it is necessary to build far heavier roads than formerly. My friend from Oregon, Mr. HAWLEY, suggests that the speed of traffic is a factor, and I agree with him that it is, and a very important one.

I desire to ask whether or not the department in Washington in experimental roads takes material from other parts of the country and makes the roads of the material from different States, with a view of ascertaining the best and cheapest material for each particular section.

Mr. LEVER. As I understand, any community which desires to have material tested, either chemically or physically, can send it to the department and they will have the tests made.

Mr. HICKS. Will they have a piece of road built?

Mr. LEVER. Not necessarily, but they have the physical and chemical tests, and the department will be able to give an accurate judgment as to whether it is good road material for that particular community.

Mr. HICKS. Has that information been availed of by different communities?

Mr. LEVER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield? I want to supplement what the chairman has stated. Two years ago when the department was building experimental roads one was built leading out of my town to the agricultural school. It has proven to be the most successful road that I ever saw built of gravel. The county has built about 150 miles of gravel road. A part of it was built before and a part since that time. The road completed since that time has given nearly twice as good service as that which was completed before, and the county has saved thousands of dollars by that one experimental road.

Mr. LEVER. The department has what is called a traffic census, through which it makes note of the amount of wear and tear that results to certain particular pieces of road material, and another kind of road material and another kind of road material, and through these investigations and the census they are enabled to accurately judge what is the best material for a given community.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerks read as follows:

For investigations of the best methods of road making, especially ordinary sand-clay and dirt roads, and the best kinds of road-making materials, and for furnishing expert advice on road building and maintenance, $142,780.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to say that under this particular paragraph I believe some excellent work is being done, especially so this year, by this bureau. Perhaps this year witnesses more activity throughout the country in what is called "good-road building" than in any year in our history. It is a recognized fact that 80 or 90 per cent of all the roads in the United States are dirt roads. Probably for a great many years, although the percentage will decrease, yet to the end dirt roads will be the principal roads over which the public will travel. These will include not only roads between cities, but between the States and between the oceans. It becomes an important problem not only to the States and communities but to the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Nebraska now see that it would be of some advantage to open up the waterways in order to get connected with the good roads of the country?

Mr. SLOAN. I do see that there is a good deal of relation, but the trouble is the gentleman from Pennsylvania insists on connecting the roads with the waterways, while our great difficulty is in disconnecting the water from the roadways. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman read one or two paragraphs subsequent to this where we find a great deal of water in the bill?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; the bill is a good deal like some of the industrial plants in the vicinity of the gentleman's home—very highly watered, I understand, especially since the war began.

I desire to say further that this bureau is doing an excellent work in cooperation with the State, county, and municipal highway authorities. A great deal of money is being expended on that work in the different States. There is a well-founded opinion that a good deal of the money is rather unwisely expended. It is important, if money be spent, that it be spent not only under the direction of engineers, but of engineers that will try to work out not only good roads but uniform roads. Uniformity can be better obtained through the engineering department of the United States than through any of the States.

In my own district there are 13,000 miles of public highway, practically all earth roads. This is all we can expect and all we desire. The bureau is at present engaged in cooperating with the authorities in several counties in my district constructing what they call ideal earth roads, giving the advice and direction that is important; so that once they have been made the counties will follow out that plan until the roads will be better and more uniform. That uniformity will extend throughout the State and from that to the whole country. This must prove of great advantage to interstate highway travel.

Mr. COX. I never was over the gentleman's territory, but do the roads in the gentleman's district get muddy in the wintertime?

Mr. SLOAN. Like all other roads, they become muddy when the snow melts and when there is a heavy rain. That is true, but if the roads are raised through the middle, are properly smoothed and sloped, and are worked at a proper time after rains or thaws with the King drag, they become hardened and are easily maintained. A very short time after the water has flowed away we have good, sound roads.

Mr. COX. They dry up quickly.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman believe in removing the mud from the roads in his own country?

Mr. SLOAN. No; we do not remove the mud in our country. I do not know how it is in Pennsylvania, but out West mud is made up of two elements, one is dirt or clay and the other is water. We do not remove the mud. We remove the water. [Laughter.] Out there it has a penchant for flowing off, however sluggish it may be in other parts of the country. We do not remove the mud, but we wait for the water to flow, just as eloquence is permitted to flow from the lips of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I have been waiting for a long time to have this admission from the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN]. Many times he has very eloquently expatiated upon this floor against the development of certain rivers and harbors of the country. Now, he indicates his entire willingness to have the roads of the country constructed so that they may be useful to the farmers of the country, by being led up to the waterways, in order that shipments of grain, and so forth, may pass on to the consumer.

Mr. MADDEN. He has even gone further than that. He is willing that the water should flow.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; he concedes that if we remove the water from the roads, we may, through the medium of the river and harbor bill, be permitted to remove the mud from the rivers.

Mr. SLOAN. I am in favor of that very largely, because our roads will "dry up," and that never occurs with some streams back East or with the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It never does, and that is the reason I wanted to hear from the gentleman. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the Chair and of the House while I resort to a method that is as old as the hills in reply to an adversary "worthy of one's steel." This morning in the dawn, thinking of the pleasantries the gentleman had made in his references to my great State and to the rivers of my country, I concluded to embalm him in verse. I have done so as calmly and as kindly as I can, for he is worthy of it.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I object to the reading of this verse until I know the gentleman is recognized as the poet laureate of this House or the official spring poet of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield my precious rhyme for a point of order in my time. [Laughter.] I would like the committee to be patient for a moment, as I hope my friend from Nebraska will be, because I wish to pay him a special tribute. This poem has no title:

My colleague from Nebraska is a very able man;
He can make about as fine a speech as anybody can.
He's a scholar on bugology, agronomy, and grain,
And he studied navigation—on a local railroad train.

When my colleague from Nebraska takes the center of the stage
Everybody stops to listen, from the Speaker to the page;
For they know "there's something doing," and they want to see the fun,
As my colleague from Nebraska puts the rivers on the run.

Oh, my colleague from Nebraska talks about the river "pork."
You can see Iowa titter; consternation in New York!
What a joke to spend our money on those sluggish little creeks,
When the dear old cows of Kansas can not sleep for cattle ticks!

Gargle rivers with our money! Make a roadway for a ship!
When our hogs are down with asthma and our pullets have the pip!
"Never!" quoth Nebraska's hero; "Never," echoes down the line.
"Never," while appropriations may be had to help our swine.

What's the use of transportation—on the water, anyway?
Spend the cash for irrigation, and we'll make our deserts pay.
Talk about your ships and harbors, that's an old New England fake.
What we want are prairie schooners like our Henry Ford can make.

[Laughter and applause.]

So my colleague from Nebraska keeps the galleries astir;
Every point is porcupinish as a bristling chestnut burr;
Every little fibrous plantlet, technological or plain,
Every drought-resistant croplet knows he does not speak in vain.

When at last the fight is over, and my colleague takes his seat,
Twenty thousand little buglets yell and stamp their little feet;
Twenty thousand experts echo "Swat the pork," and things like that,
While the waves "roll up like thunder" all along the roaring Platte.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, some days ago I entered a serious objection to the organization of the American Academy of Arts and Letters. If that organization, which has been completed, will only find a place for my friend MOORE as one of the 50 immortals I shall withdraw all objection and all prejudice. [Applause.] I know what it means now to go up against real preparedness. He coins this in the morning. A veritable "little early riser poet of the Delaware." I thought he could do it on his feet; but in answer to that I shall have to suggest what was said once of these spontaneous speeches by an Irish statesman, I think it was Richard Brinsley Sheridan. He said that his adversary "depended upon his imagination for his facts and upon his memory for his wit." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For conducting field experiments and various methods of road construction and maintenance, and investigations concerning various road materials and preparations; for investigating and developing equipment intended for the preparation and application of bituminous and other binders; for the purchase of materials and equipment; for the employment of assistants and labor; for the erection of buildings; such experimental work to be confined as nearly as possible to one point during the fiscal year, $60,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 68, line 20, after the word "preparations" insert the words "for investigating road approaches to railroads and waterway terminals."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as this does not affect the appropriation at all, but simply adds a new feature to the work of investigation by the Road Bureau, I hope the committee will in its wisdom see fit to accept it. The question of reaching the terminals is one of the most important to the farmer of this country—not only to the farmer but to the man who is selling the finished products to the farmer. It is important in the matter of fertilizer. I have had some experience in the matter of freight rates along the Atlantic seaboard, where we have been agitating for the opening up of the waterways about which my friend from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] and I have disputed pleasantly on one or two occasions; and I think the House ought seriously to consider whether, if we expend $600,000 accumulating and disseminating information with regard to roads, we ought not to see to it that some of it is applied to this very practical matter of assisting the farmers to get to the market through available terminals.

And when it comes to shipping things from the so-called market centers to the farmer, let me call this to the attention of the committee. Some time before the European war broke out, before the present abnormal conditions with regard to freight rates and railroad embargoes, and things of that kind, I made inquiry as to the cost of the shipment of a ton of fertilizer from the city of Philadelphia to a point in North Carolina—Wilmington, I think it was. I found that if the water route was used a ton of 2,200 pounds could be sent through from Philadelphia to Wilmington for $1.30, but if the railroad route was used a ton of 2,000 pounds would cost $4.80. Now, that is a very marked difference, and in the long run the farmer has to pay. He pays the freight. On the other hand, in shipments coming from the South to the North, the shipment of lumber, for instance, the difference between the inside and outside cost for 1,000 feet of lumber as between the North Carolina forests and a distributing point like Philadelphia was the difference between $2 a thousand feet and $3 a thousand feet.

Now, there is a difficulty with regard to the farmer or the shipper maintaining these rates. So far as the main points are concerned, competition prevails and can be successful, but if that ton of fertilizer going from Philadelphia to Wilmington for $1.30 per ton of 2,200 pounds was intended for a destination 20 miles or so inland from Wilmington and had to be hauled by rail, so far as the general charge to the farmer was concerned there would probably be no difference between the all-rail rate and the figures that would be put up to him, including the short haul by rail. Now, if the farmer can get to the waterway terminal by good roads, he has a method of competition, he has a means of communication, which would enable him to take advantage of the water rate between important terminals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope the committee can see fit to accept this amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania confers any greater authority on the Office of Roads than it now possesses; and, as I said heretofore this afternoon, of course the work of the Office of Roads in its investigations and demonstrations must of necessity look to the general purpose of connecting up the farmer, who has things to sell, with his markets, whether they be water fronts or whether they be railroad stations. And the entire work of the department is in that direction already, and I think this would only add superfluous language to the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's answer to my question a little while ago indicated that there was no specific direction to the office to take up this work of reaching terminals.

Mr. LEVER. No. I said this to the gentleman, namely, that there was no special project as such. I remember using the words "as such." There is no special project such as the gentleman has proposed, but the whole fundamental work of the office itself looks to that very thing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We are going to spend about $600,000 for the Road Office, and in addition to that I think $150,000 for information in regard to marketing crops. Nothing can be more important than giving the farmer a good market. It is important for those of us who live in the cities, because we want to get the advantage of cheaper rates and cheaper produce.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and I do not disagree on that. There is no bigger problem before the country in the distribution of farm products than that of better roads, because that is one of the elements that enters into the distribution of farm products. The only objection I have as chairman of the committee, and as an individual on the committee, is that we would simply be adding language to the bill which does not confer any greater authority than that now possessed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has pride in his bill; that is natural, and I do not want to interfere, but here is a suggestion he does not combat and which does not interfere with the appropriation at all and which would give specific direction to a bureau which ought to do this kind of work. I think the gentleman will concede that.

Mr. LEVER. I do not concede it would give any direction, because the department is doing already the very work the gentleman has in mind. My objection to it is that it adds to the bill unnecessary language.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it covers a point not already covered by the bill.

Mr. LEVER. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating and reporting upon the utilization of water in farm irrigation, including the best methods to apply in practice; the different kinds of power and appliances, and the development of equipment for farm irrigation; the flow of water in ditches, pipes, and other conduits; the duty, apportionment, and measurement of irrigation water; the customs, regulations, and laws affecting irrigation; for the purchase and installation of equipment for experimental purposes; for the giving of expert advice and assistance; for the preparation and illustration of reports and bulletins on irrigation; for the employment of assistants and labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for rent outside of the District of Columbia; and for supplies and all necessary expenses, $103,400.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the work which the Department of Agriculture is carrying on under this appropriation is highly important. One feature of that work has been carried on for a number of years in the State which I have the honor to represent, namely, a study of the customs, regulations, and laws affecting irrigation. We have not for any considerable time been an irrigation people. We inherited our water laws from those who laid down the rule of riparian rights. We had no practice or experience in the use of water for irrigation. We had no rule of appropriation. We had no customs relative to the practice of irrigation. These things we have had to develop. We have had many things to learn that other peoples knew very well a long time ago, for agriculture was perhaps first practiced on this earth on an extensive scale under irrigation.

It is highly important, therefore, that the work to which I refer should be continued. I regret to see that the appropriation is somewhat reduced, because I understood that the department questioned its ability under the appropriation to carry on this work, as it had hoped to carry it on, to completion.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman that there is no actual reduction. The reduction is only apparent, arising from the transfer of positions from the lump fund to the statutory roll.

Mr. MONDELL. I am very glad to know that, because the work to which I have reference is a very highly important work. I hope to see it continued with the necessary funds to make it thorough and complete.

Now, I desire to take advantage of this opportunity to refer for just a moment to a class of work carried on by the department that is entirely different and distinct from this irrigation work; in other words, the investigation and improvement of methods of crop production under subhumid, semiarid, or dry-land conditions. I want to pass for just a moment from irrigation investigations to dry-land investigations and dry-land demonstrations. At the time the appropriation for that work was under consideration I was unable to be in the House. I did not know at that time that during the hearings in the committee there was a considerable discussion of dry-farming development in our country. I think it important, in view of what was said in the discussions had at the hearings and the opinions expressed by members of the committee relative to dry-farming development in the West, that something should be said here in regard to it. I was very much surprised to notice that one member of the committee, interrogating the expert who has charge of the dry-farming investigation, asked him this question, "Is it not a fact that this dry farming is a delusion and a snare?" I am very much surprised that any member of the committee should entertain such erroneous views as to what has been accomplished under what is termed dry farming.

The West has developed some of the finest and most thorough and most capable experts that are known to agricultural science, in connection with dry farming, for dry farming is a real science, and a science which has been largely developed in our country in the past few years.

Something has been said during the discussion of the bill relative to the wheat production in the United States, and in regard to future opportunities for increase of production. I wonder if gentlemen have stopped to think that the opportunity for a large increase of wheat production in this country is to be found almost wholly in the semiarid regions?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, as time passes, as the land in the older portions of the country becomes more and more valuable, it finally reaches a price where the growing of cereals at the ordinary price, except in rotation with other crops, is not ordinarily profitable, at least not as profitable as other crops for which there is a ready market. Intensified farming on very rich land leads to other classes of production. So it is under irrigation. The irrigated lands finally become so valuable that they must be utilized almost wholly, except as they are utilized in rotation with other crops, for other production than cereals. So that our increase and growth along the line of rye and barley and wheat production, must come very largely in the future, almost wholly, I may say, from the lands which in years past were considered valuable only for stock ranges. During the hearing one member of the committee suggested that it would be better to leave these lands as range lands rather than to utilize them for wheat growing, when, as he said, so many of them produce only a small annual yield—he said 10 bushels of wheat to the acre. I wonder if the gentleman remembered—I am sure he did not—that under ordinary range conditions range lands produce at the most not above 50 cents per acre per annum? That is as much as we are able to secure in income from them.

The same land placed under the plow, if it produce only 10 bushels of wheat per annum, is from 10 to 20 times as productive as it was when used only for range purposes. But under scientific methods of dry farming we are growing on these dry lands, not 10 bushels of wheat per acre, but by means of thorough tillage and biennial cropping, or by the growing of two crops in three years and the conservation of the moisture, we are producing 20, 25, 30, and as high as 40 bushels of wheat per acre on these lands. Of course these higher yields are infrequent. They are not the ordinary yields; but any of those semiarid lands that can be utilized to advantage at all can under proper methods of moisture and soil and fertility conservation, be made to produce every other year, or two years out of three, on an average, 20 to 24 bushels of wheat per acre. And the cost of growing that wheat on those cheap lands, under the conditions under which it can be grown, is less per bushel than the growing of the same wheat anywhere else in America. That being the case, these lands will, as I have suggested, add very largely to our cereal production in the future. I think it can be truthfully said that of the 900,000,000 bushels of wheat produced last year, at least 100,000,000 bushels were grown on lands that 20 years ago were not considered of any use or value except as a stock range. In my opinion there are still at least 100,000,000 acres of land in the semiarid region in this country that have not been touched by the plow that can be utilized successfully in the growing of agricultural crops.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like about two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the time of the gentleman will be extended two minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. It is highly important that we should continue this development. It has not been a failure. It has been a marvelous success. Of course there are some people who are not successful anywhere, and dry farming does require attention and effort and some failures are inevitable.

It is also true that all the lands in a given region are not suitable or available for these purposes, and men make mistakes and go on the wrong land, and sometimes lose all they have; but the experiment must be made, and eventually we develop areas and regions that are valuable. In my State in the last 20 years we have established numerous agricultural communities—and that is also true of Colorado, true of the Dakotas, and true of Montana—communities that are permanently prosperous, on lands hitherto believed to be of value only for pasture. It is true that many of these communities had a hard struggle. It took them some time to learn the proper methods. It required constant effort and perseverance and self-sacrifice to obtain success there, just as it has in every other part of the Union. As a boy I remember northwestern Iowa, now rich and splendid, was considered by many a very, very poor place in which to make a living in agricultural pursuits. Now the land is worth $100 to $125 an acre. At a time that I can recall that conditions were not much more satisfactory there in many respects than they now are in some of these dry lands of the far West. No part of our history of development is finer than this work of conquering that semiarid territory and the conversion of the great range areas, so far as they may be utilized for this purpose, into farms, and filling with happy homes those areas where once roamed the buffalo and the Indian and later the cattle and the cowboy. [Applause.]

During the discussion before the committee, when there was evidenced a disposition to criticize some one for the alleged failure of the efforts to conquer the semiarid West, officials of the department hastened to assure the committee they had not encouraged people to go out there and engage in this development. To those who know this confession was not necessary, although one would think that the people who have been spending large sums of the people's money to study and develop dry-farming methods would have had a little more loyalty to their work and the region in which it is being carried on.

It is true those at the head of the dry-land experiment work of the Government have not encouraged people to go into the semiarid region and attempt the conquest of that section. I stand ready to exonerate them of any blame, if blame there be, of any part in the encouragement of that great and glorious movement which has already conquered millions of dry acres and will conquer millions more. That wonderful development of thorough and scientific agriculture, that inspiring conquest has been carried on with but little help, scant encouragement, and almost in spite of some of those who the Government has paid to point the way. I do not wish to be understood as suggesting that good work has not been done at the stations or in the field, on the contrary splendid work has been done and encouraging demonstrations have been made, but those responsible for the interpretation of these results have seemingly been so biased, so full of prejudice as to be unable or unwilling to admit, much less to fairly announce the facts thus demonstrated.

It is a most unfortunate situation when those in position of responsibility in a great work like this are at odds as to facts, at outs as to methods, and in an attitude of antagonism toward practically all the men who as scientists, experts, and practical demonstrators have for years been the leaders of the great dry-farming movement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating and reporting upon farm drainage and upon the drainage of swamp and other wet lands which may be made available for agricultural purposes; for preparing plans for the removal of surplus water by drainage, and for giving expert assistance, by advice or otherwise, in the drainage of such lands; for conducting field experiments and investigations concerning the construction and maintenance of farm-drainage work; for investigating and developing equipment intended for the construction and maintenance of farm-drainage structures; for the purchase of materials and equipment; and for preparing and illustrating reports and bulletins on drainage; and for the employment of assistants and labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for rent outside the District of Columbia, and for supplies and all necessary expenses, $94,720.

THE SUSAN B. ANTHONY AMENDMENT.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing some resolutions of constituents in my district relative to the Susan B. Anthony amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STADIUM IN POTOMAC PARK.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a bill introduced by my colleague Mr. HULBERT, with some comments thereon, in regard to the stadium in Potomac Park.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The department is doing some valuable work under this item. I desire to emphasize that in view of the fact that certain irrigation engineers have complained that the department was interfering with their business, that the experts of the department were furnishing the farmers with information and outlining methods of drainage when that work should be left to private enterprise.

I think it is true that the Federal Government should not interfere with private enterprise in this line or any other any more than it may be necessary in order to carry out the useful work the department is engaged in. The department engineers do not take the place of irrigation engineers in this development; but there is a highly important and valuable work which the department engineers can do for the farmers, and which they are doing and should continue to do. That is particularly true in irrigated regions where we are beginning to suffer from seepage and alkali, where farmers are having a hard time with their land, in localities where it is becoming water-logged and almost worthless. They have received valuable aid from the agents of the department in planning drainage systems, and I hope the work will be continued to be carried on in the future, as in the past, under this appropriation.

The problems of drainage in irrigated regions are difficult and peculiar. They require knowledge of and experience in this particular line of work. The engineers of the department, who are trained in this particular line of engineering, are capable of giving the farmers advice and information, plans and suggestions, that it is difficult for them to secure elsewhere.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. This item includes:

Preparing plans for the removal of surplus water by drainage and for giving expert assistance, by advice or otherwise, in the drainage of such lands.

The appropriation is $94,720. Will the gentleman inform us whether the preparation of plans and giving expert advice and assistance applies to individual cases? Can the individual farmer apply for plans and for assistance to drain his land and have it attended to by the Government under this appropriation?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; under certain conditions. The conditions would be that the work in cooperation with the farmer would be in the nature of a demonstration for the community around him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose I own 100 acres of land lying on the coast of New Jersey that happens to have swampy places in it, can I apply to the Department of Agriculture and under this appropriation have an expert sent there to prepare plans by which I may properly drain that swamp land?

Mr. LEVER. That could not be done indiscriminately. It could be done only under the conditions that I mentioned, namely, that the land was so located and the problems involved were of such nature as to make it a model for other work and a demonstration for the community or the entire county.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the department should decide to prepare plans and make a demonstration on my farm, it could only be done with the understanding that it would be done in such a way as to benefit the community?

Mr. LEVER. The work would be only incidental to the larger work of the department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would I have to pay anything?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman would have to pay all the costs of the drainage.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is, for the employment of the labor. But the item calls for the employment for labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; that is the usual language.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That means that the Government could employ labor to dig the trenches on my farm?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, no; that is never done. The only thing the Government would do would be to work out the plans and furnish the plans to the individual or the community, which is formed into a drainage district.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, to the extent to which the gentleman says this work may be done in individual cases by the Government I have no special fault to find, except that it illustrates one of the truths that is often denied here and elsewhere, that we do a great deal for the farmer in our national legislation. I am the farmer's friend and I want to see everything done for him that can be done. The farmer does not want for friends in Washington. A very vigilant committee of farmers' very particular friends take care of the farmer in a very particular way. I am rather glad to see it.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman, of course, knows that there are 6,000,000 farmers in the United States and that $94,000 would not go very far.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know that; but in this very bureau we are appropriating $600,000 of public money, coming in from all sources, for the specific purpose of aiding the farmer in individual matters. If the preparation of these plans and the demonstration which involves the digging of ditches and trenches to carry off surplus and stagnant water——

Mr. LEVER. Oh, the department does not do that latter part at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Evidently that is the purpose of the appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What do the plans provide for?

Mr. LEVER. The Government makes an investigation. It draws the plans and the specifications and turns those plans over to the community that forms itself into a drainage district or in circumstances which I have already described to an individual, and the community or the individual does the actual work, pays for the labor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well; it comes down to the individual after all.

Mr. LEVER. And not the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And I just wanted to call the attention of the individual to the fact that in these cases he is well provided for by Congress and has no special complaint against any other branch.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think the farmer is complaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general administrative expenses connected with the above-mentioned lines of investigations and experiments, $12,600.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Are there any salaries provided for in this $12,600?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; there are some salaries provided for.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Salaries for scientists or experts?

Mr. LEVER. Some. I will give the gentleman the details. In the city of Washington, one assistant director, $4,000; part of the time, temporary assistants, $2,500; estimated traveling expenses, $700; supplies and equipment, $5,000; miscellaneous expenses, $3,500.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How are those salaries determined?

Mr. LEVER. They are determined by the Secretary in collaboration with the chiefs of the different bureaus.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are the persons employed under an item like this certified by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. LEVER. They are.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is any discretion lodged in the Secretary to make appointments in a case of this kind?

Mr. LEVER. The Secretary under some conditions might make a temporary appointment pending a civil-service examination.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, I think the gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I asked the gentleman a question based on this very item, which is a very small one, although it brings out the entire question I am interested in. I want to know to what extent individuals may be appointed under these lump-sum appropriations by the Secretary apart from the civil service?

Mr. LEVER. I will answer the gentleman's question, and I think I answered it correctly a moment ago. The scientists of the Department of Agriculture are appointed through civil-service examination. There are instances and times when a temporary appointment is made pending an examination and certification from the Civil Service Commission when there is not an eligible on the civil-service list.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But having been appointed temporarily, the appointee may perfect himself while in the service for the civil-service examination, and in that way he obtains a permanent appointment?

Mr. LEVER. That is true, if he passes an examination and is certified in the regular way.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering, $599,700.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5221. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers sailors; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11471. An act to amend paragraphs 177 and 178 of an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, relating to the duty on sugar, molasses, and other articles.

JOHN E. JONES.

The SPEAKER. A bill for the relief of John E. Jones was sent to the Speaker as having been passed by the Senate. It has not been passed by the Senate. The Speaker signed it, but has since canceled his name.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SHOUSE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. On what subject?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. On the Agricultural appropriation bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. BARNHART. We could have gotten almost through with our bill to-morrow. I have nothing to say if the gentleman from Illinois insists on his objection, but I might say something if he will withhold it.

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. BARNHART. I wanted to explain to the House that we made excellent progress in the reading of the printing bill on last Thursday, and we have only one more day under Calendar Wednesday rule. I believe very many Members of this House are much interested in the passage of the bill. We have a caucus to-morrow evening, as I see by some notices which have been received, and there probably will be a motion made to rise earlier than this hour. If we could meet at 11 o'clock we could get that hour in addition to the regular afternoon, and it would help us so much that I apprehend we might get some arrangement then with the leaders of the House that we could finish the printing bill, to which the Printing Committee has given much time, and the House also. The gentleman from Illinois and myself worked on it 19 days two years ago; and owing to the fact that the House was generous this time, and thinking that we had thrashed it out, whipped it into shape, and made it a good bill, we read 56 pages last Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman can read 56 pages to-morrow, so far as I am concerned, and, if he can, I can see no reason why the House should not, by a two-thirds vote, practically by unanimous consent, give the gentleman a third day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. If I was not sick abed I would not.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 26, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for the relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries and shipwrecked American seamen in the Territory of Alaska, the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, the Panama Canal Zone, and the Philippine Islands for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1057); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 26, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Author of our being, Judge of all men, we come into Thy presence with a full assurance that Thou dost understand us altogether, that Thou dost read the secrets of our hearts. We would not dissemble nor cloak our sins. We call upon Thee with an open confession of sin and with a sense of unworthiness. We have come short of Thy glory. We come, we trust, humbly and earnestly desiring to find Thy favor and to receive Thy forgiveness. We pray for the inspiration of Thy spirit, that we may discharge the duties of this day. Look Thou upon us in the tenderness of a father's love. Take us by the hand and lead us wheresoever Thou wouldst have us go. May the result of the day's work be to the honor and glory of Thy name and to the further establishment of the great ideals of our national life. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DEAR SIR: As directed by the common council, I beg to call your attention to a resolution adopted by the legislative body of the city at the last session.

The resolution, which is attached herewith, is self-explanatory, I believe, but I beg to add that the matter is of great interest to the citizens of Detroit generally, and your assistance in making it possible for the city of Detroit to acquire this historic property for use as a city park will be needed and appreciated.

Yours, sincerely, RICHARD LINDSAY,
City Clerk.

Whereas there is in circulation a report that the United States Government will, on recommendation of the Secretary of War, abandon the military post familiarly known as Fort Wayne, now in the environs of our city; and

Whereas the addition of the ground and buildings located thereon would constitute a magnificent park and units for hospital purposes for our citizens generally: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the city clerk be, and is, instructed to communicate with the United States Senators representing the State of Michigan, together with the Congressmen, and especially our Representatives from the first and thirteenth congressional districts, requesting them to exert their best endeavors to acquire the said Fort Wayne grounds and buildings for the use and benefit of the citizens of Detroit.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to introduce a memorial from the officers of Grand Castle, Michigan Knights of Luther, of Ann Arbor, Mich., in opposition to the Fitzgerald postal bill and the Siegel postal bill. I should like to have it printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GRAND CASTLE, MICHIGAN KNIGHTS OF LUTHER,
Ann Arbor, Mich., March 27, 1916.

Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Grand Castle, Michigan Knights of Luther, in State convention assembled at Jackson, Mich., February 22, 1916, did instruct its executive committee to urge the Congressmen and Senators from the State of Michigan, to use every means in their power to defeat, either in committee or on the floors of Congress, the un-American Fitzgerald postal bill (H. R. 6468) and the Siegel postal bill (H. R. 491).

Free institutions depend on a free press. We believe in our free institutions, as do 80,000,000 of the American people, and we will not countenance any tampering with the free press. We count on you to be loyal to the highest interests of the great majority of your constituents and are carefully watching your action on the above bills.

Very respectfully, yours,

L. B. BISSELL,
Detroit, Mich.,
PERCY SNELL,
Cadillac, Mich.,
J. B. SAUNDERS,
Ann Arbor, Mich.,
Executive Committee.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I also have a resolution of the Association of Commerce of Grand Rapids, Mich., in favor of Federal aid for vocational education, and I should like to have it printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GRAND RAPIDS ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE,
Grand Rapids, Mich., April 19, 1916.

Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SMITH: At a joint meeting of the committee of one hundred of the Grand Rapids Association of Commerce and the Builders and Traders' Exchange of this city, held Wednesday noon, April 19, for the purpose of discussing the proposed bill relative to Federal aid for vocational education, the following resolution was unanimously adopted, and with instructions to convey this action to you, seeking your immediate support to this measure, viz:

"The committee of one hundred of the Grand Rapids Association of Commerce and the Builders and Traders' Exchange of Grand Rapids, in joint session this date for the purpose of considering referendum No. 14 from the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America regarding Federal aid for vocational education, heartily indorse the report of the special committee created by the National Chamber of Commerce favoring a Federal appropriation for the promotion of vocational education in the United States. To that end we invite the cordial support of the Senators of Michigan and the Congressmen from this district, urging that they align with this movement and give such immediate attention to the furtherance of the bill as may insure its passage."

In conjunction with the foregoing we submit this action to you and commend the same for your favorable consideration. We would appreciate an expression from you on this subject, and we are of the opinion that in voting on referendum No. 14 the membership of our association will be practically unanimous in acting in the affirmative regarding Federal aid for vocational education.

Yours, sincerely, W. K. PLUMB, Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have a communication from Local Union No. 97, National Brotherhood of Operative Potters, of Mount Clemens, Mich., which I think ought to be read. I ask unanimous consent that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the communication.

The Secretary read as follows:

NATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF OPERATIVE POTTERS,
Mount Clemens, Mich., March 29, 1916.

Whereas there is a movement on foot to have Congress increase the Army and Navy, thereby increasing the cost of living to the working class: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Local No. 97, National Brotherhood of Operative Potters, is opposed to any increase in the United States military organizations, and call upon our representatives in Congress to use their voice and vote against all bills calling for an increased military organization; further

Resolved, That we use all honorable means in our power to discourage the working class from enlisting; further

Resolved, That if necessary to prepare for war, that we recommend that all citizens who have an income of $10,000 a year be drafted and placed in the first line of defense; further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our representatives in Congress.

E. W. SOUTHERN, President.
[SEAL.] JAMES S. MYLER,
Recording Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The communication will lie on the table.

Mr. JAMES. I present resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of McCracken County, Ky., indorsing the foreign policy of the President. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS,
Paducah, Ky., April 21, 1916.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Inclosed you will please find copy of resolutions which were passed at a mass meeting of the citizens of McCracken County yesterday, indorsing the action of the Government in its foreign-relation policy, and which expresses the views of the citizens of McCracken County and—I feel no hesitancy in saying—the views of western Kentucky.

From the newspaper reports, and from our faith in you, I know you have already announced your position as being absolutely for the policies of the Government, but, in furtherance of the confidence we have in you, I have seen fit to call the people of McCracken County together for the purpose of an expression of their belief and the passage—the unanimous passage—of the resolutions inclosed to you expresses their sentiment more fully than in any other way.

Trusting that the policies of the Government will be crowned with success, and that we may be kept out of the threatened international complications now before us, but again assuring the Government that that portion of western Kentucky which I represent will stand back of it in whatever course it may pursue in the defense of the honor and integrity of the Government, even to the extent of personal sacrifice, I beg to remain,

Very truly, yours, ERNEST LACKEY, Mayor.

Whereas the President of the United States, the Hon. Woodrow Wilson, did, on the 19th day of April, 1916, deliver to the Congress of the United States a resumé of the relationship between the United States and the Imperial Government of Germany, thereby disclosing the real condition of affairs existing between the two nations, and by his utterances to said Congress depicted that situation to be one of grave import at this time, in view of the demands of this Government in the interests of humanity and in the upholding of those principles of international law and international intercourse, which have been recognized by all the nations of the earth in the years that have passed as applicable, right and just in their intercourse one with the other; and

Whereas in his wisdom, based upon his own interpretation of the affairs as they exist, and sustained by his Cabinet, after due and proper consideration, he deemed it expedient and wise to, at this time, issue a statement to the Imperial Government of Germany outlining to it the policy of the people of the United States, and demanding of it a compliance with those recognized laws of humanity; and

Whereas he has seen fit in such declaration to Congress to, in effect, issue to Germany an ultimatum, which means, if complied with by Germany, a peaceable continuance of the relationships with that country, but, if disregarded, a severance of the relations, which may or may not mean the necessity upon the part of this country enforcing such demands; and

Whereas we have implicit confidence in his wisdom, in his integrity, and in his patriotism, and in the honesty, integrity, and patriotism of those upon whom he has a right to, and does, rely for advice, for counsel and guidance: Be it therefore

Resolved by the people of McCracken County, Ky., That we heartily indorse, and enthusiastically commend, the action of our President in the position assumed by him in his utterances delivered to the Congress of this country, publicly and without reservations, implied or otherwise, on the 19th day of April, 1916; and be it further

Resolved, That we extend to our representatives in both branches of the Congress of the United States our declaration that we do concur in, indorse, and appreciate the stand taken by our President, and urge each Member of both branches of Congress to uphold his hands in this crisis of our Nation's history in every manner possible, to carry into effect the policies as enunciated by him, pledging our support to such policies absolutely. Be it further

Resolved, That we indulge the hope that the Imperial German Government may accede to the just demands of the President of the United States, in the hope that the friendly relations heretofore existing between the two great nations may continue. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES and the Hon. J. C. W. BECKHAM, Senators from Kentucky in the United States Senate, and to the Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY, our Representative in the lower House of Congress.

ERNEST LACKEY,
Chairman.
S. REED CAMPBELL,
W. HERNDON LACKEY,
Secretaries.

Mr. JAMES. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition signed by Alfred Reinhardt, president of the German-American Alliance, Newport, Ky., praying that the Government may continue at peace with the world. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram.]

COVINGTON, KY., April 24, 1916.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The eyes of all fair-minded people and your constituents who are against breaking off diplomatic relations with Germany are directed to your action in Congress. For humanity's sake and justice your constituents most earnestly urge you to oppose any and all attempts that may lead to such a break with Germany, the best friendly nation we have. On account of a mere technicality our country should not be degraded into a war.

Most respectfully, yours,

ALFRED REINHARDT,
President the German-American Alliance of Newport, Ky.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present certain communications in the nature of petitions, one of them dated April 22, 1916, from Ross G. Harrison, professor of comparative anatomy, Yale University. They all concern the refusal of the allies to permit Red Cross supplies to reach the central powers and further concern the proposed breach of the Geneva convention. I ask that these communications be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at length without reading.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW HAVEN, CONN., April 22, 1916.

Hon. L. Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I inclose a copy of an official circular of the American Red Cross and also a copy of a letter of protest which my wife, an active Red Cross worker, has sent to the members of the central committee.

The only publicity which this virtual nullification of the Geneva convention has received has been through the present efforts of myself and several friends, and this has been, of course, wholly inadequate. I therefore appeal to you not to let the matter pass unnoticed in Congress.

A most sinister phase of the situation is that, as president of the American Red Cross, the President of the United States must have known of the matter at the very time when he read his message to Congress on Wednesday last and constituted himself before the world as spokesman for humanity.

I can not believe that the American people will tolerate having their well-deserved reputation for fair play thus thrown to the winds or that they will stand for that particular kind of humanity and neutrality which sees one side only. Nor can I believe that they will permit themselves to be dragged into a futile and senseless war simply because the President has got himself into a dilemma by handling a complicated and far-reaching situation in an utterly one-sided and uncompromising way.

I urge you to throw the whole weight of your influence to divert the disaster of a country divided against itself, which is what our participation in the war on either side would mean, and to stand firmly against the President's policy which holds but one side to account.

Very respectfully, yours,

ROSS G. HARRISON,
Professor of Comparative Anatomy, Yale University.

AMERICAN RED CROSS OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The American Red Cross has received notification through the State Department of the decision of the British Government that Red Cross supplies destined to enemy countries will not be passed through the blockade established by the entente allies. An exception is made of supplies intended for the use of hospital units maintained by the American Red Cross in these countries, but as these have been all withdrawn the prohibition is in fact absolute.

In view of this fact not only is the further contribution of supplies to the Teutonic allies not practicable, but it becomes necessary to make other distribution of those now on hand at the receiving and shipping station of the American Red Cross, Bush Terminal, Brooklyn, N. Y.

It is proposed to ship these supplies, or such of them as may be appropriate for the purpose, to Siberia, to be distributed to German, Austro-Hungarian, and Turkish prisoners in the prison camps of that country. It is therefore requested that you authorize the Red Cross to make this disposition of them, or, if for any reason this becomes impossible, to use these supplies for military preparedness at home or for relief work in disasters in neutral countries. If neither of these dispositions is acceptable, please authorize their shipment, at your expense, to such address in this country as you may indicate.

Please sign the authority given below and return to the Receiving and Shipping Station, American Red Cross, Bush Terminal, Brooklyn, N. Y., in the inclosed envelope.

Very respectfully,

J. R. KEAN,
Colonel, Medical Corps, United States Army,
Director General of Military Relief.

PROTEST TO CENTRAL COMMITTEE AMERICAN RED CROSS.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., April 22, 1916.

SIR: I submit for your earnest consideration a copy of an official announcement of the American Red Cross. It states that the British Government refuses to pass Red Cross supplies hereafter from America to the central powers and indicates that the American Government has submitted to this decision without protest or publicity.

This, as you will recognize, is a nullification of the Geneva Convention. It strikes at the foundation of those principles of humanity in warfare of which the Red Cross has been the bulwark and for which the President now stands before the world as spokesman.

I wish to enter an earnest protest against an acquiescence by the American Red Cross in the action of the British Government and also against the policy of the American Government in concealing such important matters from the general public. I would lodge this protest particularly, because at this critical time allegations of inhumanity against the opponents of Great Britain are the basis of an ultimatum of which the natural outcome is war and for which the support of public opinion is sought.

As an active worker for the Red Cross, I urge, therefore, that this matter be given immediate reconsideration by the central committee and that the public be authoritatively informed of what has been done in order that public opinion may assert itself.

Very truly, yours,

IDA HARRISON,
For the New Haven Sewing Circles.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 10750. An act permitting the Mondak Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River in the State of Montana was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

GOOD ROADS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7617, commonly known as the good-roads bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sorry the Senator from Nebraska is not in the Chamber. I was going to suggest to him that if he would be satisfied with striking out "six months" and inserting "four months" I thought the committee would be willing to accept that modification. He stated the other day that he would agree to it. Since then, however, there has been a great deal of discussion on it, and I do not know what his attitude would be now. I suggest that the amendment be passed over for the present until the Senator from Nebraska returns to the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over, without objection. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I notice, on page 12, lines 13, 14, and 15, that the maximum amount which may be paid for the construction of a road is fixed at not to exceed $10,000 per mile. I think that is wise, although in some parts of the country it may cost more than that. But what I wish to inquire of the Senator is whether the minimum might not likewise well be fixed. Is the Senator sure that we will not get some dirt roads in the country under this bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. As to the first inquiry, I will say to the Senator the purpose is that the Government shall not appropriate more than $10,000 a mile on any road; but there is no reason why the State, county, and locality may not appropriate $20,000 if they desire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand; but what is troubling my mind is this: If the Government and the States are going jointly into the matter of building roads, we ought to have good roads.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no minimum fixed; and may we not find after a while, unless we fix a minimum amount, that some pretty cheap roads are being constructed that will not stand the wear and tear of the modern vehicles?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the committee and the Secretary of Agriculture discussed that matter very fully, and we did not quite see how we could fix a minimum. The conditions are so different in different portions of the country that we thought it would be very difficult to do that. For instance, there are sections of the country where a good road can be built for from $1,200 to $1,500 a mile, a sand and clay road, and they have proved to be very excellent. There are other sections where it will cost more, where they will build gravel roads; and in some others it will cost a great deal more if they undertake to build a surfaced road. The committee thought after investigating it that the best thing would be to leave the question to the State highway commission and the Secretary of Agriculture to pass upon it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator thinks it is safe in the hands of other officials I am not going to say another word, but I should very much dislike if, after we have appropriated this large sum of money and this good-roads movement is well in progress, we should find that very inferior roads are being built in some sections of the country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I quite agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have seen bills presented to Congress where, among other things, they provided for sand roads—dirt roads. I think we ought to get rid of dirt roads nowadays as far as possible. But if the Senator is satisfied that it is safely guarded I shall say nothing further.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only wish to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that there is a sand and clay road now made which is one of the very best roads that can be built. It is a road that is durable in many sections, where the land is not too hilly.

Mr. CLAPP. In some cases it lasts longer than these high-priced concrete roads for which vast sums are paid.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say that that is my experience. In North Carolina some of our best roads are what are known as sand-clay roads. They last longer.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a novel thought to me that dirt roads are better than more substantial roads.

Mr. OVERMAN. They last longer. They do not tear up like other roads.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think likely that is true.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say that in my county we spent $3,600 for what is known as a macadam road, and it is found that they are not as good as the sand roads, because the macadam roads are torn up by automobiles.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would not be the case if they were properly examined from time to time and repaired.

Mr. OVERMAN. They repair them, but it does not do any good. They are discarded for sand-clay roads. That is our experience. They are better than the macadam.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there are two or three Senators away who I know are very much interested in some features of the bill, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] has been called away on important business and is therefore unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. BECKHAM. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is absent on official business.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of death in his family. I desire that this announcement shall stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is unavoidably detained on public business.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I ask that both of these announcements shall stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I see that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is now in the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska, as his amendment to the amendment was temporarily passed over until he could be present, if he will not consent to an amendment striking out "six months" and inserting "four months"?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the first place, I wish to thank the Senator from Alabama for delaying the matter until I could be present. I was unavoidably detained this morning and came as soon as I could.

While I do not like the suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama nearly so well as I do the amendment to the amendment which I have proposed, yet, so far as I am concerned—and, of course, I can only speak for myself, for the amendment may be offered by some one else—I feel constrained, after talking with several Senators who have favored the amendment to the amendment, to accept the proposition of the Senator from Alabama. I am willing to do that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the modification now proposed of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment as now proposed to be modified.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Alabama moves to amend the committee amendment as follows: On page 12, line 25, before the word "months," to strike out "six" and to insert "four," so that it will read:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall withhold apportionment of funds to any State in which roads constructed under the provisions of this act have not, in his judgment, been properly maintained by the State, or any subdivision thereof, if within four months after he has given notice in writing to the State highway department such roads be not properly maintained by the State or any subdivision thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be agreed to without objection. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to further amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if there are no further amendments to be proposed to perfect the committee amendment——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will yield, I have another amendment to the amendment which I should like to offer, and to which I think the committee will agree.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. On page 12, line 24, I move to strike out the words "in his judgment." I do not think that will change the meaning of the bill, but it seems to me it would be much better that those words should be stricken out. It is not customary in legislation to insert phrases of that kind, as I understand, and such language certainly does not add anything to a law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 12, line 24, after the word "not," it is proposed to strike out the words "in his judgment."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to further amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no further amendment to offer, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the amendment suggested by the committee to the House bill is perfected, I wish to offer a substitute for the Senate amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further amendments to be proposed to the committee amendment?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on page 11, line 21, after the word "exceed," I move to strike out the word "fifty" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "thirty-three and one-third," so that the text will read:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 33⅓ per cent of the total estimated cost thereof.

Mr. President, several days ago this same subject matter was discussed somewhat at length in connection with an amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. When we recognize the fact that there are practically 2,300,000 miles of public highways in the United States—at least those are the figures furnished us by the committee in its report—I think we must all come to the conclusion that the burden of public-road improvement must be borne by the States or the local geographical subdivisions thereof.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, what did he say was the road mileage of the United States?

Mr. POMERENE. The figures given in the report show the road mileage to be 2,300,000. All who favor legislation of this kind are interested in the subject not only of good roads, but permanent good roads, and my thought is, the project being so large, the portion of this expense which should be borne by the Federal Government must be substantially less than that which is borne by the States or the subdivisions thereof. My belief is that the policy adopted by the Federal Government should be such that it will encourage public-road building to the utmost. If we make the proportion which may be expended by the Federal Government not to exceed one-third of the total cost, I believe more miles of public highway will be permanently improved by the State authorities than will be improved if we agree to pay not to exceed 50 per cent thereof, and it was with that thought in mind that I offered this amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator's amendment reduces the proportion to be paid by the Government from 50 per cent to 33⅓ per cent?

Mr. POMERENE. That is the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. May I say a word?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not at all sure that that is a wise amendment. After all, the whole amount comes from the taxpayers of the country. The 50 per cent which the Government will pay will come from the men, women, and children of the country who pay tribute to the Government through impost duties and other forms of taxation. So, after all, it is taking it out of one pocket and putting it into another. The cities, towns, and counties are very heavily taxed at the present time, not only in reference to good roads, but in reference to all other matters. The people of the country are looking with a feeling of certainty, as well as with some degree of trepidation, upon increased taxes in the near future. If such taxes must be levied, doubtless the people of the country will submit to them with good grace, as they always have done; but, nevertheless, they have considerable anxiety about that matter.

If this burden could be lifted from the people directly to the extent of 50 per cent, I think there would be less tendency for faultfinding on the part of the taxpayers of the country than there will be if we so arrange the bill that the Government will pay less than is to be exacted from the cities and municipalities. That is the thought running in my mind, and I think possibly the Senator will admit that there is some force in it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I recognize the fact that some Senators are imbued with that idea, and I am not here to say absolutely that they are wrong and I am right in the matter; but it must be borne in mind that the drafts upon the Federal Treasury are very great, too. I am satisfied in my own State, whether or not there is any Federal aid, we are going to have a system of good public highways. Our people have been bitten by the good-roads microbe, and they are appreciating now more than ever before the benefit to be derived from good roads. Many of the New England States have an excellent road system. Some of the States are rather further behind than either the New England States or my own State; but I am still of the opinion that the burden of this work must be borne by the local authorities, and I feel that we will be doing more for the cause of good roads if we reduce this amount to 33⅓ per cent than we will if we retain it at 50 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it is not to be supposed that all the good roads that are to be built will be those constructed under this form of cooperation between the Government and the States. The roads constructed under this bill, I trust, will be a very small part of the roads that are to be constructed, and constructed in the near future. It is rather a movement to give an example of and to afford an inspiration for good road building. The theory has been that when the Government takes part in a local enterprise, so far as that local enterprise goes, the expense shall be borne half by the Government and half by the locality; and I think it would be a great mistake in this instance if this bill were changed as the Senator from Ohio proposes. I feel sure that it in no sense means that the expenditures for good roads are to be only half and half, but that the good roads built under this bill will be an illustration of what good roads may accomplish and afford an example for road construction by adopting the best methods which may be possible.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Georgia that my thought concerning this bill has been just the opposite of the idea he has expressed. It seems to me that the tendency of the States will be not to build any good roads until they have arranged for the National Government to participate in their construction. That is only ordinary human nature. If a community finds that somebody else will pay 50 per cent of the cost of some improvement which they want they will endeavor so to arrange their matters that they will get that 50 per cent before they spend the money themselves. I know what has happened in States where the State itself has given aid to the construction of State highways so far as the respective activities of the State and the towns are concerned. The towns have stopped building roads; they have stopped making improvements until they can arrange that the State shall pay its proportion of the cost of the improvement.

It seems to me, if I understand this bill aright, that it is only the first step toward an enormous expenditure of money by the National Government for the construction of roads all over the United States. I expect that the instant this principle has been established the application of it will grow enormously. I think we shall have continual demands from all over the country to have this appropriation increased, and the tendency in the States will be to withhold and delay any improvement until such time as they can be sure that the National Government is going to participate in it. I really can not take the view the Senator from Georgia has expressed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if I agreed with the views of the Senator from Rhode Island and believed that within the next 20 years we would have no road development in my section, except that which came from the cooperation of the Federal Government and the States, the counties, and other subdivisions, I would vote against this bill without a moment's hesitation. I do not anticipate anything of the kind. I think it will be a stimulus to improve roads. You can only reach a very small portion of your roads—one in a county, a portion of one in a county—when they are developed in this way; but all of the balance of the people will be aroused and interested in the direction of additional good roads. I look to see these roads an example and an inspiration of good roads.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Georgia knows the enormously active lobby which is now advocating the passage of this bill, and which has been advocating it for some time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I do not know anything about any lobby. If the Senator does, he knows something I do not know. I have had no suggestion made to me through anybody outside.

Mr. LIPPITT. I can only say that I know how well informed the Senator is, and if he has not had his attention called to the tremendous amount of literature which is being distributed in this country in favor of national good roads——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That literature is in opposition to this bill.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have not happened to see any that was in opposition to it. Every two or three days I am receiving the most expensive maps, showing the proposed system of nationally aided good roads—maps which would mean the expenditure of an enormous amount of money for their production, and which are being circulated with the statement underneath that by the aid of the National Government the States are going to get these roads built largely without expense to themselves. There is no statement on those maps as to where the money is coming from that is to be expended for these roads. The implication is carried by these publications that it is going to be a free gift to each and every State from some unknown source; and from reading them I rather got the idea that the money was going to come something like the manna from heaven in the olden times—that the money just grew.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Did the Senator read this literature with any care?

Mr. LIPPITT. I looked over some of those maps.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Did he not observe that they were hostile to this bill, and hostile to this kind of road construction? Did he not recognize the fact that the literature was in opposition to this legislation?

Mr. LIPPITT. I understood that it was in favor of national aid to State roads.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A few great automobile highways.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not seen the literature to which the Senator refers. The only literature I have received has been literature advocating great national highways, boulevards, mainly for the use of automobiles. I am not opposed to national highways. I am not opposed to roads upon which automobiles can travel. I should like to see them all over the country. I should like to have our friends from Rhode Island and New York and Pennsylvania get in an automobile and come down to Alabama and see us, and we would make it delightful for them. There is no question about that.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to go with the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But it is a very different kind of roads that we seek to build under the provisions of this bill. We want to improve the country roads over which the mails are carried, and the country roads over which the farmers can send their products to market. That is the object of this bill—not to build great national highways and boulevards.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understand the subterfuge in this bill. The purpose, as described in the bill, is to aid the States in building roads over which the mail is being sent, or over which the mail might be sent; and, of course, when you include roads over which the mail might be sent, that practically includes every road.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator will remember that the Senator from Connecticut has had that expression, "might be sent," stricken out.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator will remember, I asked him a few minutes ago if he had a copy of the bill as amended. I was aware that several amendments had been suggested, but I did not recall exactly what they were. I really had in my mind the purpose of this bill as it was indicated in the bill at the start. I am also aware, as the Senator says, that there are different theories upon which this national aid to State roads may be established; but I think I am absolutely correct in saying that there is an enormous movement going on in this country which, from the way it is conducted, is manifestly very liberally financed. The purpose of it is to obtain national aid, money from the Treasury of the United States, to construct a purely local implement of commerce and trade and transportation.

I am also aware that some of the States, including my own, have already spent enormous amounts of money out of their own treasuries for the construction of such roads. I am aware that if this bill is put into operation the State of Rhode Island will have to pay something like $750,000, which will be a contribution from the taxable property of the people of Rhode Island to the construction of roads at distant points, where they probably never will have any opportunity of using them at all. They will be obliged to do that although they have constructed their own roads entirely at their own expense. In fact, the operation of this bill is taking away from the State of Rhode Island a source of taxation which they would like themselves to use for the construction of their own roads. They have already spent so much money on them that they are hesitating as to how much further they can go in that direction without imposing undue charges on the people; and now this movement comes along which is going to deprive them of something like three-quarters of a million dollars which they would like very much to spend on their own roads, and which is to be distributed in other parts of the country.

I realize that a large number of the States are going to receive large sums from the operation of this bill, from sources outside of their own borders, which they will have for the construction of these roads; and it seems to me the inevitable tendency of the States will be to find that it is a very good thing, and to come back for more.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, it seems to me, of course, that the line of argument advanced by the Senator from Rhode Island is applicable to the State of New Jersey. We have spent many millions of dollars in the matter of good roads. We are fortunate in the possession of a comparatively small State geographically, and a very compact settlement, and fortunate in being a wealthy State, and we have spent a very great deal of money on our roads. But, as I said the other day, I advocate this bill; and while I have had some criticism of my advocacy of it, I can not believe that I was elected a Senator from New Jersey or that the Senator from Rhode Island was elected a Senator from Rhode Island simply to look to the interests of our own States, and to look no further than our borders. I feel that we are here for a broader and a bigger purpose, to do that which shall enhance the general welfare and benefit of the whole country. I can understand that our good roads in New Jersey would amount to but little if we had a barrier placed at the State line, and were not permitted to extend over into Pennsylvania and across into New York, and ultimately, mayhap, over into Rhode Island.

So I believe that it is an unwise policy, and it is an unfortunate argument for us to argue simply because we have them, and because we, through the blessings of a Divine Providence, and mayhap fortunate circumstances and surroundings, may have acquired a little more wealth than some of the more sparsely settled communities, that we should be satisfied with ourselves and shut ourselves up in our own shell and say, "To the devil with the hindmost." I do not believe that should be the policy of a Representative or a Senator, for I believe it is not a statesmanlike policy.

Of course, the matter of roads affects us more than directly. It affects us indirectly as well. If Rhode Island is improved, hence the next State is improved, Connecticut is more or less improved, and we catch the drippings of the wealth that comes to us. You can not construct a great public highway system selfishly. We were about the first in this country to start out with a good roads system. We have spent many millions of dollars on roadways. We have seen direct results from it. It has multiplied the value of our acres. It has made homes in the country desirable, which we are all arguing for. We are all seeking to do something that shall prevent the congestion in the great cities and shall cause people to seek rural homes. We have solved the problem very largely, though we have 10,000 miles more to improve. Not only has it directly affected us but it has affected the communities all around us; and for us to stand out in this way, with this idea advanced by the Senator, it seems to me would be most unfortunate.

I feel that the Senator is decidedly unfortunate when he refers to the documents or the literature that have come to us as being a lobby. That is not my idea of a lobby. I had an idea—it may be a mistaken one; I have never had my buttons pulled off by a lobbyist since I have been here—but I had an idea that a lobbyist was a genial, suave, glib-tongued fellow who would gather me in the corners of yonder corridor and tell me that there was "something in it for me." I have had none of that sort of thing. I have had no uncanny methods or unreasonable methods or unjustifiable methods practiced on me. I, in common with the Senator from Rhode Island, have received document after document, map after map, giving me a portrayal of the ramifications of the road system of the country; and I say that I am thankful to the authors, whoever they were—and I do not know who they were—for having sent me such documents. I have gained from them an idea of the roads through Rhode Island, the roads through Georgia and Alabama and South Carolina and Kentucky, if you choose, which I never would have gained otherwise, for I am not one of those blest citizens who happen to own a five-thousand-dollar automobile and can go practically and see these localities. I have taken these lines and delineations that have been presented on these maps. There has been nothing uncanny in that. They have been sent quite broadcast. I have gained from them wisdom and knowledge; and if that be called lobbyism, then Godspeed lobbyism! I do not care how much may come of it.

I am in favor of this bill because I believe that the ramifications of a great road system can never come in this country without Government aid; and I believe that the people of the State of New Jersey, even with all that they have spent, will willingly bear their share in order that they may aid Mississippi, and that they may aid Rhode Island and Pennsylvania and the Southern States, if you choose.

I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I did not bring up the question of lobbying on this bill, if the movement may be so described, because I objected to it. I do not. I thoroughly agree with the Senator that it is the privilege and the duty of American citizens who are interested in any project, whether it is good roads or something else, to have their views presented before the Members of Congress and to take all legitimate means to do so. I do not sympathize in the slightest degree with the criticism which has been frequently levied in this body in regard to what has been called, as a convenient name for it, lobbying. I think it is a proper movement, and that without it we should be carrying on a great part of our business in ignorance of the facts.

What I brought the matter up for was because the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] had made the remark that he did not think this appropriation would mean that the States were going to rely in the future upon national aid. Now, he may be correct; I do not know; but it seems to me that this is simply the entering wedge for an enormously expensive expenditure by the Government of the United States. I believe that the very remarks which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] has just made in favor of this movement indicate the great lengths to which it will ultimately go. I think it is only reasonable and proper that in the consideration of this initial movement we should have in our minds the probable extent and the probable result of it; and I think it is eminently proper that I should call to the attention of the Senate the effects which it will have on my own community and that I should present those facts in such a way that they will realize exactly what it means to us.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio will not prevail. It occurs to me that there has been no question that has been more intelligently urged by the people of the United States than has the one referring to good roads. In practically all of the States, at least in most of them, they have commissions which have made a very careful and a very thorough study of this subject. They are asking that this legislation be enacted. They have a right to ask for it.

The Federal Government is directly charged, under the Constitution, with the construction and maintenance of post roads. That language is more clear than is the language under which the Government proceeds with the development and improvement of rivers and harbors. It is true, of course, that under the river and harbor provision only a few States, comparatively, get the appropriations, but those appropriations are made for the benefit of commerce. The appropriations here are proposed for the benefit of post roads, in which all of the people are interested. Now, most of these State organizations, practically all of them, have decided that the half-and-half proposition was a practicable and an equitable one. That is arbitrary, of course. We could decide on paying one-third, possibly, as well as one-half; it would make no difference as to new mileage; but all of the arguments, all of the propositions which have been considered by the States have been based upon this 50 per cent division.

I agree with the Senator from Georgia that national aid is not going to prevent the building of roads. The movement is on. I confess that I have hesitated sometimes about starting this matter—not that we have not a right to do it, but because it might ultimately lead to very enormous expenditures on the part of the Government. I have also thought that possibly this was not a good time to begin. The Government is incurring unusual expenses; the Treasury is embarrassed. But the sentiment for Federal aid is abroad in the land. Nothing is more clearly settled on the part of the people than the question of Government aid for good roads.

I believe the bill of the Senate committee as here presented is the best under all the circumstances which has been conceived and brought to the attention of either House. It means good roads, in my judgment. I do not believe that the money will be squandered. The experimental period for building roads, as to material and method of construction, has passed. It has cost a good deal for the States to learn how to build roads, but to-day that question is practically settled. The Secretary of Agriculture will be surrounded by experts who understand the situation.

We are in reality, as the Senator from New Hampshire has said, spending the people's money. Whether it is taken from the individual States or a part from the Federal Government, it all belongs to all the States. Therefore, inasmuch as this plan has been worked out, inasmuch as it has become the settled conviction of the States that this is the proper proportion, it seems to me that it would be wise to follow the recommendation of the committee and adopt the bill as presented by it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I sincerely trust that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio may be adopted. It is true, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] have said, that the States will build a great deal of road, regardless of Federal assistance; that the roads built in the State with Federal assistance will be small in comparison with the roads the States will build on their own account. At the same time, it seems to me that those very facts constitute a good and valid argument why the amendment of the Senator from Ohio should be adopted. It means, if it is adopted, that under this bill, if it becomes a law, there will be one-third more mileage of road constructed than though it were not adopted.

I would not want to make any Federal contribution so small that the State would not take advantage of the Federal statute and provide the necessary supervisory machinery to get Federal aid, but when we fix a proportion that will bring the States in to get this aid we ought to fix it at just as small an amount of Federal contribution as will have that effect. Nobody denies but that one-third is amply sufficient to accomplish that. As the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] says, it spreads the appropriation out a good deal wider and further.

It does not affect, Senators must remember, the amount of Federal contribution. That will be just the same. If this amendment prevails, instead of applying a Federal contribution over a road, say, 9 miles in length, it will add a third to it. The fact that the States are going to build roads in addition to Federal-aided roads, as the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Georgia say, is a convincing proof that they will take advantage of the Federal statute if the proportion is fixed at 33⅓ per cent of the Federal contribution.

I offered an amendment the other day making the per cent 25 instead of 50, and we debated that at length. It seemed to me that that amendment ought to have been adopted, but the Senate in its wisdom thought otherwise and voted it down.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. With all due deference to the Senator, I do not understand the logic of his reasoning when he supposes that the States will build more roads if they receive only 33⅓ per cent contributions from the Government than they will if they receive 50 per cent. It does not seem reasonable on the face of it. If you increase the contribution, it would seem to me that they would build more roads; that the more money they receive the more they will build. If by reducing the appropriation from 50 per cent to 33⅓ per cent and by doing so get more roads, why do you not cut it down to about 10 per cent and secure still more roads?

Mr. NORRIS. I answered that argument the other day when the Senator was not here, but I will answer the suggestion he made now, and I will convince him that I am right. Let us take an actual case. Suppose that as an actual contribution to the State of Oregon under this bill after it becomes a law the State is apportioned $200,000. The bill as it stands now provides that the State of Oregon must put in $200,000, and that the $400,000 will be used to build roads in Oregon. That is the Federal contribution on the 50 per cent basis.

If the amendment of the Senator from Ohio prevails, then the State of Oregon will get the same $200,000. It does not change the amount that the State gets. But instead of the State of Oregon being compelled to put up $200,000 to meet that $200,000, it will have to put up one-third more, and with that they will construct a road that is one-third longer.

Mr. LANE. That is all right, but I do not think it will appeal to the practical people of Oregon that they will get more at 33⅓ per cent than if it were 50 per cent or 60 per cent or 70 per cent. They would like it much better if you would put it all in.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. LANE. The people of Oregon are building on the half-and-half principle harbors and other improvements. They are quite used to that system, and they put up more than any other State in the Union in proportion to their population and the amount of improvements carried on in the way of harbors. If you cut it to 33⅓ per cent I do not think they will look upon it as an extra inducement to build roads. In fact, I think you will get more miles of road if you keep it at 50 per cent. The argument is a little erratic.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Just a moment. It can not be possibe that we will get more roads built if we let it remain at 50 per cent instead of 33⅓ per cent, unless you assume that the State will not take advantage of the Federal statute. If the State takes advantage of the Federal statute, then, with this amendment of the Senator from Ohio, it follows, just as the night follows the day, it is mathematically true that there will be one-third more roads constructed under Federal supervision than though the amendment were defeated. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to know by what process of reasoning the Senator from Nebraska concludes that 33⅓ per cent is as much as 50 per cent and that the State will get just as much money from an appropriation of 33⅓ per cent as it would from an appropriation of 50 per cent?

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator contend that if the amendment of the Senator from Ohio prevails the amount of money that goes to the State will be cut down?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator contends that it would be cut from 50 per cent to 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has not examined the amendment or the bill where the amendment applies. It has nothing whatever to do with the Federal contribution paid to the States. If the Senator will examine the bill he will find that it can not be otherwise. If it is as he states, then the Senator from Ohio will be willing to withdraw his amendment. But the bill provides that a certain appropriation, $5,000,000 for the first year, shall be divided up between the States on a certain proportion, one third according to population, one third according to the geographical division of the State, and the other third of it in proportion to the roads that are already in existence in the State compared with the roads all over the country. So it is definitely determined just to a cent how much each State will get. But the proposal also provides that when the Federal Government contributes something to the State it will contribute only 50 per cent. That is, if it puts in $100,000 the State must put in $100,000. The same amount goes in every case. You can take any State in the Union and tell now from the statistics already in the record just to a cent what each State in the Union will get.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. The only question is whether we shall compel the State to build one-third more road in order to get its contribution or whether we shall leave it as it is in the bill. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Putting it down to a practical proposition, under the present bill the Government pays for one mile of road provided the State pays for another mile.

Mr. NORRIS. That is right.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then you have 2 miles.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Under this amendment the Government will pay for 1 mile provided the State pays for 2 miles.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. McCUMBER. And you will have 3 miles instead of 2.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is the effect of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the sum and substance of it.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. BANKHEAD addressed the Chair.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be absolutely true if the Government was going to provide one-half of the money to enable the State to build all the roads the State desired to build, or, in other words, if the State had a desire to build a thousand miles of road and the Government of the United States would pay half of the expense. Then the statement of the Senator from Nebraska would be absolutely true. But that is not the case under this bill. For the first year there is $5,000,000 appropriated. The State of Utah gets under the apportionment only $57,950. The State of Nebraska gets only $110,700.

Mr. NORRIS. Nobody disputes that. Everyone knows that that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, if the State of Nebraska was going to build roads to the value of only $220,000 during the year, then the statement would be absolutely true. But the State of Nebraska is going to spend more money than that in building roads. The State of Utah is going to use more money than she will get by three or four times the amount. Therefore, it makes no difference in the amount appropriated under the bill as to the amount of roads that she will build, and no difference whether the Government pays one-third or one-half, the amount of appropriation will be exactly the same.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me take up the Senator's objection that far. Everyone has said that the States are going to build more roads than the bill provides shall have Federal aid. There is no one who has denied that. But the fact that the State of Utah is going to get a certain amount of money under the bill is not changed to a farthing by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. It will spread that money out over a road that is one-third longer than though the amendment were not adopted. So the effect will be to get more Federal-aided roads in the State than though the amendment were not adopted. That is true, mathematically. There is not any possibility of a successful contradiction of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I would rather have a State-controlled road, if the State has to pay for it, than a Federal-controlled road in the State.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator feels that way, then we ought to vote against the bill entirely and not have any Federal aid.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, the argument reminds me of the elderly maiden lady who kept a boarding house, who stated "that she sat pensively by the kitchen window stretching beefsteak for supper." Of course it would go further, but there was less beefsteak for the individual boarder. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. There will be exactly the same amount of beefsteak. That is not changed by this amendment. The beefsteak to the very ounce will remain the same, but there will be a longer slice of beefsteak than though the amendment were not adopted. Its form will be changed. In other words, there will be more Government-aided roads in every State of the Union by one-third if this amendment is adopted than though it were not adopted. Now, why should not that be the case? It seems to me that we are representing here the Federal Government. The contribution of the Federal Government in making roads in a State is liberal. It seems to me if we contribute 33⅓ per cent it is a very liberal contribution. It is arbitrary, no matter what figure you put it on, and no man can say exactly what will always be just. We necessarily have to agree upon an arbitrary figure, but the use of the road as an interstate proposition will not be, in my judgment, on the average one-tenth as much as the use of the road for a local, State, or county proposition. Therefore we ought to contribute, it seems to me, from the Federal Government something in proportion to the value of the road as an interstate proposition. Therefore it appears to me that the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when the Senator from Nebraska offered his amendment to reduce the amount provided by the Government of the United States for the building of roads from 50 per cent to 25 per cent I opposed that amendment and gave my reasons for my opposition. Those reasons are exactly the same as I would advance to-day in opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. It seems so simple to me that I can not conceive how there can be any misunderstanding as to the result. The bill, if it becomes a law, will provide an appropriation for the first year of $5,000,000 of Federal aid for building roads in the different States. That $5,000,000 is apportioned to the different States based upon the population of the State, the area of the State, and the number of miles of rural-delivery and star-service routes. The apportionment is made upon those three heads.

Mr. President, I will not take the time of the Senate to name the amount of appropriations in each State under that apportionment, but it is so small that it will build in my own State 4 miles of road. In the State of Massachusetts, I think, it would build 7 miles of road. So I might name all the States, and the result would be in the same proportion.

Mr. POMERENE. Does not the Senator from Utah refer to the small amount which is carried by the bill for the first year? Does not the Senator realize that this is just the beginning of a system of road improvement, and that the policy which is adopted now is going to be more or less permanent in character? In view of the fact that there are so many thousands of miles of roads to be built, and in view of the further fact that the Senator concedes that the greater portion of this road building is going to be done by the State authorities themselves, or by the authorities of the smaller geographical divisions thereof, is not that a reason why, if we determine that the Federal Government shall appropriate only $5,000,000, it should be so distributed and so expended as to result in the building of the largest possible number of miles of highway?

Mr. SMOOT. The very argument that the Senator makes is the very thing that I am trying to contend against. There is no question but that the money apportioned to each of the States, if they take advantage of it at all, will be exactly the same whether it is one-third or whether it is one-half. Nobody denies that.

This is the proposition, Mr. President: Every mile of road that is built in the State in which the Government appropriates money for the building is virtually under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture. If the State takes advantage of this law, there is no question but that it will get the full apportionment, and there is no question that the apportionment will not be one-tenth of what any one State will build. So it will make no difference whatever if the Government provides 50 per cent of the cost of the road within the appropriation, for the amount of the appropriation will build only a certain number of miles of road. If the Government pays only one-third of the cost, the amount of money received by the State will not affect the number of miles of road the State will build. The State of Utah has to provide for building not only the 4 miles of road or the 7 miles of road in Massachusetts provided for under this bill, but many times the number of miles named. Therefore it makes no difference at all, Mr. President, as to what percentage of the cost the Government pays, providing the appropriation is limited as the bill provides. But the 50 per cent basis has this advantage: When the State provides the money for the building of additional roads, the State will control the roads built entirely by it; and when the Government of the United States makes a part payment upon their construction, the Secretary of Agriculture will virtually control them. It is wrong in principle, and I can not see but that it is as plain a proposition as a, b, c.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are times when the people of the country take some interest in the proceedings of the Congress of the United States and when they refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I think this debate will be read by the people of the country largely, and I ask the Senator from Utah if he will not include in his remarks the table showing the amount which will be distributed to each State under this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be glad to do so, and I now ask consent, Mr. President, that the apportionment of the appropriation carried by the Senate committee bill on the basis as named by me, be inserted in the RECORD, without reading, as a part of my remarks.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator from Utah refer to the table accompanying the report of the committee on the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I had reference to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission to insert the table referred to by the Senator from Utah will be granted. The Chair hears none.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Utah will permit me just one remark—I have not taken much time and do not intend to do so in this debate—I want to say to the friends of the bill that, if the Federal appropriation is reduced, I think we are going to be confronted with the proposition that a great many States will refuse to accept this law which States might otherwise accept it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. The provision which was included in the Post Office appropriation bill for $500,000 seven years ago, was apportioned among the States, providing for a one-third payment by the Government, and a great many States refused to take their apportionment on account of the small proportion which was given. That action satisfied me that a great many States, if we appropriate but one-third, will not avail themselves of the law.

In addition to that, I should like to say that the subcommittee which prepared this bill discussed and considered the matter very carefully whether this proportion should be one-third or one-fourth or one-half and then inserted "not exceeding one-half." A great many roads that are expected to be improved under this legislation are roads which go through poor communities, and in most of the States roads do not have State aid, but have local aid. Very frequently there is a part of a road which is good and then you will come to points where it is very bad; places where there is a length of 5 or 10 miles of road which is very bad. That occurs because the community is very poorly off, taxes can not be raised, and the State law does not permit the road to be improved. Consequently the entire road is no better than the poorest link in it. We thought if we framed the legislation to read "not exceeding one-half" it would be more effective, because it would enable the Federal Government to aid the places where there are small links of road which are so bad that they ruin the entire road. The contribution is not compelled to be one-third. If any State wants it to be one-third, it makes application for one-third, or if the application be for one-tenth, one-tenth may be allowed under this bill. I think it would be a mistake to fix the amount at "not exceeding one-third."

The committee has discussed that matter fully and examined the conditions in the various States, and I think it would seriously hurt the bill if the amount should be reduced from one-half.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in that connection I wish to call the Senator's attention to a situation in road building. Roads outside of the limits of small towns, both county and State, are generally found to be better than the roads of said towns. We find that it is impossible for the small town to keep the roads in a condition they ought to be kept or to construct proper roads in the first place. I believe that situation is found in small towns all over the United States. The best constructed roads in the United States are those built and controlled by the counties and State, because of the fact that the counties and the State can raise sufficient money to build first-class roads in the first instance, whereas in the little towns, with but a limited amount of property on which to raise taxes, it is an impossibility for them to construct such roads as should be constructed.

I sincerely trust, Mr. President, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] will not be adopted.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the Senator from Utah takes his seat—I do this with great timidity, because I know the Senator's power when he is dealing with figures, for I have seen him figure percentages too often to feel any confidence in asking him a question—I wish to state that the point which troubles me is this: Under this bill a State can only get the Government apportionment by building an equal amount of road with that constructed by the Government. It is quite true that most of the States—perhaps all of the States—will build more roads in a year than the Government apportionment may demand; but suppose a case; suppose we build a good road in Massachusetts and our allotment is $76,000. In round numbers, that is 7½ miles of road at the price which our State roads cost us. Now, suppose we build no more roads after the apportionment has been made except what are necessary to get our apportionment, we should have to build, as I understand, under this bill 7½ miles of road; we should have to build an equal amount with that built by the Government in order to get the apportionment.

Mr. SWANSON. The States would have to either build or repair the roads.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, that is worse than ever.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that is worse than ever.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The bill does not say "repair."

Mr. SWANSON. To keep in repair. As I understand the bill, if you have a macadam road that has absolutely run down, which is in real bad shape, you can improve that road up to a certain condition if you will agree to maintain it after that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. To rebuild it?

Mr. SWANSON. To rebuild it.

Mr. LODGE. That is equivalent to the same thing as building. We have to either rebuild or to build the road. I do not mean we have to build a new road, but to build our part of it. This confines it to doing-over old roads, as a matter of fact, but the State will have to spend an equal amount with the Government. Now, if you make it one-third, you have to build 15 miles of road.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. That is the whole proposition with me—that if you make it a third for the United States, then you compel the State to build 2 miles for 1, instead of 1 mile for 1.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator does not question that?

Mr. SMOOT. Not in the least.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad to find that I was not mistaken. The Senator's proposition is that it is all idle what ratio we put in the bill, because every State will build a good deal more than its allotment will be under this proposed law.

Mr. SMOOT. That is my position.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know how true that is, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can get some idea of the correctness of my statement by simply referring again to the figures to which he himself has referred; that is, those affecting the State of Massachusetts with her area, her population, and the length of her roads. Under the apportionment of $5,000,000 Massachusetts will get $76,000. That means, as the Senator says, 7½ miles of road for the Government and 7½ miles of road for the State, or, in other words, 15 miles of road for the first year.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask if it is the Senator's understanding of the bill that it will require an equal number of miles of road to be built by the State and by the National Government?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. Is not this the provision——

Mr. SMOOT. That is, a certain amount of money must be contributed by the State; I did not mean to say "miles of road."

Mr. STERLING. A project is submitted by the highway commission of the State for the building of a certain road. The proposition is not that the Government and the State shall build an equal number of miles of road, but the Government will contribute 50 per cent of the amount required for that project. It is not contemplated, as I understand, that the Government shall double the number of miles of road constructed by the State.

Mr. SMOOT. It is virtually the same thing, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. It is not quite the same thing. If the Senator will allow me a further suggestion, I conceive this to be the situation—it will be the situation in many of the States, at any rate: The highway commission will select a particular stretch of road in the building of which they will say, "We should like Federal aid, to the extent of 50 per cent." They will submit that project to the Secretary of Agriculture for his approval. That will leave them money to devote to the building of other roads than this particular project. That is the proposition, I think, involved in the bill—not that the State shall build one-half of the road and an equal number of miles of road be built by the Federal Government, but that both will contribute one-half to one certain project.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the language, Mr. President, of the amendment reported by the committee to the House bill:

> If the Secretary of Agriculture approve the plans, specifications, and estimates, he shall notify the State highway department and immediately certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; that is it.

Mr. SMOOT. That means that if the plans and specifications for building 15 miles of road, we will say, or 100 miles, or whatever it may be, are approved, and if the cost of that project is not more than double the amount of the State's apportionment, the Secretary of the Treasury extends the Government's credit for half of the amount, and the State is to pay the other half, but it must be devoted to work on that project, not for building roads on the part of the State in some other county or in some other part of the State. The money has to be expended on that particular project which has been approved; otherwise the State can not get one cent of the apportionment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to make a suggestion, I do not claim to understand this bill very well; but my impression is that the Government, before it contributes anything, requires the State to contribute an equal amount at least. Suppose the State engineer of the State road authority, whatever it is, concludes to build 50 miles of road, and the Government's contribution would not build, say, 10 miles of it. On the showing by the State that it has not only equaled the Government's contribution but has sufficient funds itself to complete the project, does the Senator feel that the State, under the bill, would be prevented from building 50 miles of road, even though the Government's contribution was adequate only to build 10 miles of the road?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the provisions of the bill are such that after the Secretary of Agriculture has approved the plans and specifications for a particular project the Government controls only the length of the road that falls within the apportionment made under this bill to the State. If a certain project requires the full amount of a State's apportionment, it has to be devoted to that one project. If a certain project does not call for the full amount, then the Government could contribute to two projects or three projects, but each project must be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture and the plans and the specifications must be submitted to and approved by him before the work is undertaken by the State. After the plans and specifications are approved and after certification is made to the Secretary of the Treasury he then gives to the State the credit for one-half of the amount, but the money must be expended upon that particular project and no other.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that we ought, at least, if we are going to provide any aid at all from the Government, make the amount to be contributed by the Government 50 per cent, particularly when the Government has absolute control of the road constructed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, does it not also occur to the Senator that, inasmuch as the Government has to supervise that part of the road which it helps to construct under this apportionment, the shorter the mileage it has to look after, the better it will be for the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the better it will be for the Government, and the better it will be for the State, as I have said before.

Mr. President, I do not want to be misunderstood about this subject. I do not think the method provided by this bill is the proper method for the Government to pursue in aiding the building of roads in States. I have already presented, and will offer just as soon as I have an opportunity to do so; that is, when the amendment reported by the committee is perfected, what is known as the Bourne bill as a substitute. I am not going to discuss it at this time, but will offer it as a substitute for the pending amendment reported by the committee. I hope the Senate will give attention to the provisions of the amendment which I shall offer. It completely solves the road question, in my opinion, and it does not call for a dollar from the Treasury of the United States, but it does provide that the Government of the United States lend its credit to the States; and that credit being greater than the credit of the States interest will be lower, the difference in the rate of interest in 50 years will pay all the expense of building roads in the States, and the Treasury of the United States will not be called upon to pay one dollar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if it is his intention to offer his amendment after the pending amendment is disposed of?

Mr. SMOOT. I expect to offer it immediately after the pending amendment is disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. I will wait until that amendment is offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, I ask that——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he intends to offer the Bourne bill as a substitute for the pending measure?

Mr. SMOOT. That is my intention.

Mr. POMERENE. I have another amendment which I desire to offer to the bill as reported by the committee, if I may do so at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will withhold for the present the amendment I intend to offer.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on page 11, line 13, after the word "require" and before the period, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 13, after the word "require" and before the period, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve only such projects as may be permanent in character, and the expenditure of funds hereby authorized shall be applied only to such improvements.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Secretary to read the text as it will read if the amendment be adopted.

The Secretary read as follows:

If the Secretary of Agriculture approve a project, the State highway department shall furnish to him such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as he may require: Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve only such projects as may be permanent in character, and the expenditure of funds hereby authorized shall be applied only to such improvements.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this matter was discussed somewhat at length the other day, and I do not know that I can add very much to what was then said. I suggested at that time that I thought a wise policy would require the Government to limit Federal aid to permanently improved highways. Of course, when this thought is suggested, necessarily it may appear that there are various kinds of road material in the several parts of the country and various characters of highways, and that we ought not to place any improper limitation upon the authority which is given to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The committee that reports this bill has seen fit to provide $5,000,000 of Federal aid the first year, $10,000,000 the second, $15,000,000 the third, $20,000,000 the fourth, and $25,000,000 the fifth year. That, of itself, is convincing proof that there must be a limit upon the character and extent of the improvements in which we must participate. Under the language of this bill, if a State highway department presents a plan, no matter what the character of the improvement, and it meets the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, then the conditions precedent are complied with, and this money can be expended upon the project thus approved. It may be for the building of a brick road, it may be for the building of a macadam road, it may be for the graveling of a highway, or it may be simply to fill a series of mud holes in some unfrequented section of the country, and in the nature of mere temporary repairs.

That is my objection to the bill as it is reported to the Senate. I recognize the fact that these roads must be improved; but the burden of repairs must be borne, under any system that we can devise now, by the State and local authorities.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What do I understand the Senator to mean by the words "permanent in character"?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the question is a very pertinent one. I do not know that I can specifically define those words. I have used language which, it seemed to me, would convey to the Secretary of Agriculture the thought that this money was to be expended in improvements other than those of a mere temporary character. For instance, those of us who are familiar with the construction of roads in the rural districts know that the local authorities get out in the spring and perhaps throw the earth up into the center of the highway and make gutters along the sides, and that lasts probably for the season, and the next season the same program is to be followed out again.

I do not think the Federal Government ought to undertake the building of a road of that kind. What we are interested in is, first, permanently improved highways, and, secondly, the greatest possible amount of mileage of that kind.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. I suggest that the language used in the Senator's amendment, "permanent in character," necessarily means relatively permanent in character, because nothing is permanent in any final, critical sense.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator's suggestion is a very good one.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio further yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me just a minute. We all recognize that even in Massachusetts, where they have a splendid system of highways—and I am sure they would class them generally as permanent—they are nevertheless required to make constant repairs, as will be the case with any system of road building we may adopt, because there is not any kind of a highway that can permanently resist the elements and the constant travel. So that the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma is a very wise one. The phrase means something that is relatively permanent.

I recognize the fact that what might be a relatively permanent highway in the State of Michigan might not be relatively permanent in character in the State of Mississippi or in the State of Florida, and that we must give a great deal of latitude to the Secretary of Agriculture; otherwise we will be doing an injustice toward certain localities, and I would not have that done for one moment. I do feel, however, that we would be going a long distance if we were to attempt to say that in certain localities we will make these temporary improvements. Why, ordinarily, in merely plowing up the gutters and scraping the earth into the center, as we do in many sections of the State of Ohio, I dare say that from $20 to $25 a year would pay for that character of improvements, but they are only temporary in character; and if we agree to give Federal aid for improvements of that character, the people living in the vicinity would lose interest, and they would never have a permanent system of highways, but they would be content to go along in the same shiftless kind of a way, allowing the Federal Government to pay one-half of this temporary expense. There can be no question, under the phraseology of this bill as reported by the committee, that the Secretary of Agriculture would be within his full powers if he saw fit to devote this money exclusively to temporary road improving of the kind I have indicated.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. STERLING. Under the definition of what is permanent in character given by the Senator from Ohio, in which he speaks of the brick road, the macadamized road, the gravel road, and so forth, I fear he would exclude from the operation of this bill many States of the Union. Take it in my own State, for example, as well as in the neighboring State of North Dakota, and I think the same is true largely in Nebraska and in Iowa, it is often very difficult to get material out of which to build a permanent road, according to the Senator's definition of what constitutes a permanent road.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether they do not have, in certain sections of the State, material which they use in making what I am pleased to call a road of a permanent character?

Mr. STERLING. Very little of it; and I will say that in the State of South Dakota that is in a very remote section of the State. Perhaps in the Black Hills region of the State of South Dakota some road-building material can be obtained, but outside of that I think there is very little.

Let me say to the Senator that there is science in the building of the good dirt road, as we term it. Great progress has been made within the last few years in that respect; and there are whole stretches of roads in our State for the building of which Government aid would be most acceptable. It is often a hardship upon the people of the community, a burdensome tax, to construct the roads in the first place, and to keep them in repair afterwards, even though they be dirt roads.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have no doubt the Secretary of Agriculture, in trying to provide equitably under this authority for the different States, would have due regard to the character of the highways and the materials in use in those several States; and I can hardly conceive that there would be any State in this Union which could not get its proportion of the funds under this law and under the amendment, as I have proposed it.

Mr. STERLING. And for that very reason, Mr. President, I see no necessity for the use of the term "permanent in character" in this amendment. If the Secretary of Agriculture will take into consideration the conditions existing in different States, he will say, with reference to Massachusetts for example: "Considering the material you have at hand, the kind of roads you build there, and can build, you should macadamize or build of a particular material"; and he will take into consideration our conditions in the Northwest, and say: "Since other than dirt, as a material for building roads, can not be procured without excessive cost, you will be allowed to formulate your project and submit for approval here one which contemplates the building of the best dirt roads."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. Surely.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator from South Dakota if it is not a fact that the native sod of South Dakota makes the best road of any material that the people of that State have found?

Mr. STERLING. No; I will not say that it makes the best road of any material that they have found. I think perhaps in certain localities recently, under the impetus of the good-roads movement, they have, at considerable expense, procured gravel and used it in the construction of a few roads.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason why I asked the question was that I have heard, in the discussion on the side among Senators, the statement made that the very best roads and the most permanent roads they had in North Dakota and South Dakota were the roads build on the natural sod; that they never wanted it plowed up; they wanted it as a base. Now, I may be mistaken, or the person making the statement may have been mistaken.

Mr. STERLING. So far as taking the sod as the basis of the road is concerned, I do not think that can be true.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it could not be when I heard it. That is the reason why I made the inquiry.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. The very best and the most reliable roads we have in the State of North Dakota and all over that State are those that have never been worked in the slightest degree, where we still retain the old sod. No kind of traffic ever seems to cut through that sod; but, of course, there are dips here and there where the road has to be made, and it is necessary in many instances to throw up the road to the center. But if we could retain it and get the drainage the old sod is better than any road that was ever made in the State.

Mr. STERLING. That will apply, I think—and I think the Senator from North Dakota will agree with me—to roads on the highland only, where there never is any bad road at all, where water never settles; but this applies only to very limited parts of the State.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether that applies to the State of South Dakota as well?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, we have that; yes; where there is no need at all for any road building.

Mr. POMERENE. Then I am quite sure that if my amendment is adopted it will not prejudice the rights of the citizens of the good State of South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I fear it would, Mr. President, because there, throughout most of the country, no such condition prevails.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, every road engineer in this country, every man who has any reputation at all at stake, understands perfectly well what is meant by a permanent road. It means brick, macadam, or concrete, or material of that kind. You could not find a road engineer, and I do not think you could find a Secretary of Agriculture who had sense enough to sit in his seat in the department, who would say that anything below that could be construed as a permanent road.

There are large sections of the country that can not build roads of that character. No engineer would say that a sand and clay road, which answers every purpose in sections where they can be properly built, was a road permanent in construction; and if this amendment is adopted I predict now that not more than one-half, and perhaps not more than one-third, of the States in the Union will ever take advantage of it or build a mile of road under it.

The bill carefully describes the character of roads to be built. It provides, in the first place, that the State authorities, the State highway commission, shall select the routes on which the roads are to be built. They shall make the plans and the specifications and the estimate of cost. When that has been done, they submit that to the Secretary of Agriculture for his approval. I am free to confess, Mr. President, that in preparing this bill we tried to steer as far away from the Federal Government as we could; but we recognized, and I think every Senator on the floor recognizes, that if the Federal Government is called upon to put up half the money, it ought to have something to say about the character of the roads that are to be built. With the veto power, you might say, of the Secretary of Agriculture as to the character of the road, we ought to have some confidence and trust in the State authorities; and when they have agreed upon the location, the construction, and the cost, it seems to me that Senators ought to be willing to trust that matter to them.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the Senator has unlimited faith in these officials—and I have great faith in them, too—why does he go to the trouble in this legislation of providing that the plans and the specifications shall be prepared and submitted to this scrutiny? Why not just leave the whole thing to these different officials, and turn over the money bodily, in the faith that it will be expended so as to get one hundred cents of return for every dollar of Federal money that is put into it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the answer to that question is so obvious that I shall not consume the time of the Senate in answering it. I am willing to leave that to their own good sense and judgment.

The Senator from Ohio is distressed for fear that the State highway commission, owing their position, their authority, and their responsibility to their several States, and that the Secretary of Agriculture, in his high place, will consent to the expenditure of money under the provisions of the bill to fill up mudholes somewhere. I can not understand why the Senator from Ohio every time he gets on the floor insists that his fear is this money will be spent somewhere in filling mudholes along some road.

Mr. POMERENE. We had the assurance of the Senator from Alabama the other day that he did not expect to have any of this money expended in that way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not.

Mr. POMERENE. If that be true, then there is not any reason why there should not be some inhibition in the bill against that practice.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The objection I have to the amendment is what I have stated. It makes it impossible and impracticable to operate the bill. I would not say that that is the purpose of it; I do not think it is; but what I fear is that the Senator from Ohio has not considered all the provisions of the bill.

I observe that the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived, Mr. President.

RURAL CREDITS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2986.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to provide for the investment of postal savings deposits, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. JAMES. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency is, on page 33, after line 16, to insert:

> Taxes or assessments not paid when due, and paid by the mortgagee, shall become a part of the mortgage debt and shall bear simple interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I think I have some conception of the importance of the pending measure, and I think I can speak for one Member of this body who knows his lack of qualifications to discuss it in detail. We have in Ohio one of the ablest bankers in the State who has made a study of rural credits a very special matter. I refer to ex-Gov. Myron T. Herrick, who also served his country with great credit to himself as ambassador to France. During his stay in Europe Col. Herrick in the time that he had at his command made a very thorough and a very sincere study of the practice and system of rural credits in Europe. I know that he is very earnestly in favor of some plan of rural credits.

Out of the abundance of his knowledge Col. Herrick has contributed to the New York Sun a criticism of the pending measure. I do not venture to offer his opinion as my own, but I believe it will be helpful to the Members of the Senate if I trespass upon the time of this body to read somewhat from the contribution of Col. Herrick to the Sun. It is a criticism not only of a very eminent and able banker but it is the criticism of one who is very deeply and sincerely interested in this proposition.

I may say for myself before entering upon the reading, that I am not opposed to a practical measure which does not go too far in fixing upon the Government a function that is paternally socialistic. I am trying to learn from Members of this body the real reason, however, for pressing a measure of this kind. I will not assume to say that conditions in Ohio are altogether like those of other States in the Union, but I believe I state an absolute truth when I say that there is no more need for a measure of this kind for the agriculturalists of the State of Ohio than for the Government to step in and take charge of all our industrial and productive affairs in that State.

I know something about the banking business in what is termed an interior county seat, and I know from personal contact with the problem that the average Ohio farmer can secure money more readily than any other person in the State, and he can secure it on less credit than any man in a mercantile or manufacturing enterprise. The rates of interest are not high. I doubt if there is a loan made in the State of Ohio at more than 6 per cent interest, and it can be made for a short or long time, to suit the convenience of the customer.

I only speak of this in passing, because to those of us in Ohio there seems to be no occasion for the passage of such a measure. However, I wanted to present to the Senate the very valuable suggestions of the distinguished banker who has written to the New York Sun somewhat as follows——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Before the Senator proceeds, I wish to ask him if it is not a fact that they have a system of farm building and loan associations in Ohio that have proven very successful so far?

Mr. HARDING. We have a great building and loan system in Ohio. I have never known it designated particularly as a farm building and loan association. Ohio has millions upon millions on deposit in its building and loan societies, and they belong very largely to farmers of the State. As a matter of fact, our building and loan system in Ohio permits loans on collateral security.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was under the impression that in Ohio they have one form of association adapted particularly to farmers.

Mr. HARDING. No; I think not.

Quoting from Col. Herrick:

> The Hollis bill is a defective, useless, and dangerous measure. It is full of flaws, inconsistencies, loopholes, jokers, and meaningless verbiage, besides lacking indispensable clauses, while it flagrantly violates basic principles by substituting the credit of Government for the credit of the land and by clothing land-credit institutions with savings-bank powers and allowing them to pyramid on their credit and encumber their assets with liabilities through bond issues.
>
> In almost every section of the bill there is error on some important point or in respect to minor details, and its general plan is rendered utterly vicious by two monster objects, which are an unjustifiable use of the cash and credit of the United States Government for a special class of private individuals and the creation (too soon after the postal banks) of another Government savings-bank system, absolutely unnecessary and fraught with grave dangers because of wrongful combination with long-term operations. The bill is so bad and faulty that it would not have the ghost of a chance in Congress were it not for the fact that a presidential campaign is near.
> The bill includes in its plan such incompatible elements as Federal and private land banks, cooperative associations, so called, and various kinds of mortgaging institutions, whether organized under National or State laws. The latter, however, by the adroit wording of an apparently insignificant clause, must have capital stocks. This deprives life insurance companies, mutual savings banks, and building and loan associations (which are without capital stock) of the tax exemptions, privileges, and benefits of the system. The obvious purpose of this joker is, of course, to place these greatest of mortgaging concerns at a disadvantage as competitors with the new Government institutions to be formed.
> This complicated and disorderly system would be, in fact, a bureau of the Treasury Department, supervised and directed by a board consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury and four other appointees of the President and Senate of the United States, and possessing both executive and judicial powers, with the right to regulate interest rates under a prescribed maximum, to take away charters granted by it, and to dissolve the land banks and associations without intervention of the courts. No appeal would lie against any of its acts, its authority being autocratic and supreme, subject only to the general control of Congress.
> The provisions relating to private land banks and mortgage institutions organized under State laws and existing national laws are apparently an afterthought, inserted perhaps as a sop to bankers and mortgage men. They are imperfectly worded, however, and have tangled up the proposed system so badly that they satisfy nobody. Their effect would be to confuse Government intervention with private enterprise, and to allow companies conducted for gain to enjoy tax exemptions and to operate with free or cheap money supplied by the United States. This defect ought to be sufficient in itself to defeat the bill.

The 12 Federal land banks for which the bill provides would be but the start of this State-aided and Government-controlled long-term mortgaging and savings-bank system. The bureau could establish as many more such banks as it deemed advisable. These banks shall each have exclusive districts and capital stocks of at least $500,000 apiece, capable of indefinite increase. The United States shall appoint the first directors and all the appraisers and registrars. If ordered by the bureau the United States must supply the minimum capital stocks and $6,000,000 a year. The United States may require the banks to serve as its depositories and financial agents.

The bonds shall be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States. They shall be prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, and they may be issued only upon the approval of the bureau and when countersigned by its executive officer and secured by mortgages valuated by public appraisers, selected by public functionaries and trusteed with public registrars. The bonds shall be lawful investment for public and fiduciary funds, for deposits of the postal banks and for funds of the Federal Reserve System, and may be used as security for short-term paper discountable through that system.

The associations for which the bill provides can be formed only by the permission of the bureau and of the Federal land bank of the district. The incorporators must be applicants for loans from such bank, and tender mortgages aggregating at least $20,000 executed and recorded in its favor. Although designated as cooperative, the associations are not cooperative, for the reason that their directors and officers may be nonmembers, that their loans can not be made except with the consent of public functionaries, that the profits of the system to which they belong may be distributed among outsiders, and that their dissolution can not be effected at the will of the members. The associations would be simply adjuncts for acquiring mortgages and savings from farmers for transmission to the Federal land banks. After a certain number of associations shall have been formed in a district they may join with the United States in electing the directors of the Federal land bank. No other stockholders in such bank shall be entitled to vote.

Manifestly this is far from being a land-credit system. Resting upon the good faith and honor of the United States, it is machinery for utilizing the cash and the credit of the Government and for doling out public funds and granting special favors to a particular class of private individuals. Its purposes are so restricted that its facilities would be useless to the great majority of the farmers. Nobody believes that the establishment of such Federal land banks would be constitutional. The framers admit the unconstitutionality by departing from a true land-credit aim and by empowering such banks to be depositories and financial agents of the United States and components of a Govenrment savings-bank system and by making the bonds the credit instruments of the United States Government.

Senator HOLLIS promises that these clauses would be a dead letter. But this legerdemain renders the proposed system doubly dangerous and unjust, because, while lulling the taxpayers into a false feeling of security, it would make the United States the guarantor in fact of the deposits, savings, shares, and bonds of the system. Investors would not bother themselves about the mortgages or borrowers. They would look to the United States Government for the return of their money, with every logical and legal right to do so, and all land-credit features of the system would disappear.

Congress and the people have failed to grasp the full significance of this Hollis bill and the appalling extent of the State aid to be granted and the liabilities to be incurred under it by the United States. Misled into believing that the proposed system is cooperative and would be managed by the farmers at their own risk and expense, and deceived by assurances that only 12 Federal land banks are to be established, that the shares of the United States may be withdrawn, and that only $6,000,000 are to be advanced a year out of the United States Treasury, they have closed their eyes to the fact that a use of Government cash and Government credit is contemplated for private purposes on a scale never attempted in any other country.

The tax exemptions to be accorded are unparalleled. Every Federal land bank and every association, its capital stock, shares, reserves, surplus, and income, together with the bonds of the Federal land banks and the mortgages of the private land banks, shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, except taxes on real estate. The exemption of mortgages when used as security for bonds is not objectionable, since it would prevent double taxation.

But to exempt bonds, shares, and deposits without limiting the amount in the hands or name of one person, as in the Hollis bill, can not be justified, because it would relieve from taxation the wealth of those who are not the intended beneficiaries of the system and simply shift the inevitable burden of taxes to other kinds of real and personal property. The object of this total tax exemption is, of course, to divert funds from existing savings banks and building and loan associations and, if possible, to put these private mutual and cooperative concerns out of business.

The $6,000,000 of 2 per cent money which the bill calls for would be a very minor part of the eventual investment of the United States in the proposed system. The Secretary of the Treasury could deposit unlimited sums at the same low interest rate in the Federal land banks. The bureau could establish hundreds of Federal land banks, if it chose, and compel the United States to supply the minimum capital stocks of all by subscribing to shares yielding no dividends. And this would but open the way for still further outlays, by reason of certain remarkable clauses which would deprive the Federal land banks of most of the cash profits and require the United States to stand good for practically all the losses of the associations and to put $1 into the system for every $20 of loans made.

This astounding result would come from the peculiar and impracticable arrangement whereby an association, if it need money for current expenses, may borrow the same from its Federal land bank, to be paid back only from dividends belonging to the association. Again, the associations must subscribe for shares in their Federal land bank up to 5 per cent of any funds obtained from it for making loans to their members. The associations shall, in their turn, require subscriptions for their own shares by borrowers up to a like percentage of their loans.

Then comes the joker, which is that the borrowers could compel the Federal land banks to advance them the money necessary for buying their obligatory shares in the associations and for meeting all the costs of the loans. The United States would, of course, take this burden upon itself, because private investors would not be so benevolently inclined as to tolerate the use of their funds by farmers for buying shares and meeting deficits in the associations of an experimental system.

In this roundabout and absurd way the profits, reserves, and surpluses of the Federal land banks would be consumed in creating the system and meeting the costs and losses of its business. The United States would have to supply all the initial share capital of the associations, as well as the capital stocks of the land banks, while any individual member, however humble he be in private life, could force the United States to put up $1 for every $20 of loans made through the system.

This places the capstone on this State aided and centrally controlled Government system. The possible drain on public resources is incalculable. Senator HOLLIS, in keeping with his designs, has very properly taken the lock off the doors of the United States Treasury and backed the tax exempted credit instruments by the mutual liability of all the land banks and the guaranty of the United States Government, in order to supply the never ending and continually increasing demand for funds. However, if State aid must be granted it would be far better for Congress to appropriate fixed annual sums for giving bonuses to rural landowners than to involve the credit of the United States indefinitely through the indirect, cumbersome, and expensive way proposed by the Hollis bill.

In order to allay alarm Senator HOLLIS assures the public that the connection of the United States with the proposed system would be only temporary. But a fair interpretation of the bill constrains us to construe these assurances in a strictly Pickwickian sense. True, there is a clause providing for the retirement of the United States as a stockholder in the Federal land banks, but it is nullified by other clauses.

The retirement is to begin when the holdings of other parties amount to $500,000, but only one-fourth of new subscriptions are to be used for the purpose. The $500,000 would probably come from the obligatory shares of borrowers, and so represent the initial $10,000,000 of loans. Such shares must be pledged until the loans be fully paid; this could not be less than 5 years and might be 36 years. The capital stock must be maintained, with surplus, at one-twentieth at least of the bonds in circulation, while no bonds could be recalled before 10 years from date.

In the face of these inconsistencies and of enormous liabilities piled up in the system the Government's retirement becomes a remote and shadowy right which could hardly be exercised with honor. The Government's connection as a stockholder, however, is a comparatively insignificant matter. It is the establishment and participation in the management of the system, together with the governmental quality given to the credit instruments, which would make the United States responsible for the obligations, whether a stockholder or not.

The savings-bank features of the proposed system result from the following clauses: Deposits of any amount may be received by a Federal land bank from the holder of one share of its capital stock. The shares shall be $5 apiece, withdrawable under rules prescribed by the bureau, and may be held without limit as to number by any individual, firm, association, corporation, or the Government of the United States or of a State. Deposits of any amount for transmission to its Federal land bank may be received by an association from anybody, member or outsider. The shares of an association are also withdrawable, and only $5 apiece, and may be issued without limit as to number to any member. Because of the withdrawal right, the shares are simply time-deposit certificates. The deposits received may consist of current funds—that is, be checked out in cash of demand.

Thus the Hollis bill plans to give to this long-term mortgaging system not only direct aid from Government but to finance it with short-time and even demand deposits coming from public and private sources. The Secretary of the Treasury could deposit in the Federal land banks all the cash which the United States had on hand. States and private concerns and individuals could deposit in such banks all their funds and relieve them from every kind of taxation. There is no foretelling the amount that might be attracted by this total tax exemption and the promise of Federal functionaries to pay high interest rates. In his report Senator Hollis revels in the dream of a never-ending flow of savings and deposits. Exulting over the enormous possible supply, he says:

"It includes the ordinary savings of the school-teacher, clerk, minister, and wage earner; the proceeds of life insurance in the hands of widows and other beneficiaries; funds belonging to estates, minors, and wards in chancery in the hands of executors, guardians, and trustees; funds of insurance companies, benevolent orders, and societies of various kinds; endowments of colleges, hospitals, museums, and other institutions; and assets to be invested by receivers, courts, and Governments."

The aggregate of these has a value exceeding that of all farm property, and its annual income is greater than that of agriculture, while it represents more people than there are farmers in the United States. Much of this vast wealth is already lent to farmers or invested for the benefit of agriculture. And perhaps there is not one intelligent borrower from these conservative, considerate, and respectable lenders who would not say that the terms and interest rate on his loan are fair and reasonable. Moreover, the owners of this wealth are content, although normally its average return is under 4 per cent a year. Justice and wisdom require that these facts be carefully weighed and the parties most interested be consulted before legislating changes.

But Senator HOLLIS has not consulted even the farmers. Many of the granges view him with suspicion, and rightfully so, because all that he offers a farmer is a loan up to 45 per cent of the value of a small farm for one of four specific purposes, under an agreement that would prevent him from making prepayments for five years; that might oblige him to live upon and cultivate the mortgaged property and not to sell it or obtain any more money on it for 36 years; and that would impose double or unlimited liability on him personally for all loans made to other borrowers. The cooperative building and loan associations and the mutual and other kinds of savings banks, now having 14,915,104 members and $6,355,413,915 of the wealth that the Senator dreams of absorbing, are not friendly, because they realize that their very existence would be jeopardized by the total tax exemptions and Government guaranties of 5 per cent for any sums, large or small, in his new institutions.

For a like reason opposition is spreading among the fraternal orders and life insurance companies, with their millions of members and assets. The American Federation of Labor also passed resolutions contrary to the Hollis plans, evidently because it believes that if Government bounties are to be distributed they should be enjoyed by the industrial workman as well as by the tiller of the soil.

Depositors and investors are not evincing any keen desire to substitute their present holdings by bonds unrecallable for 10 years and by shares which must stand good for the losses of innumerable associations. Farmers do not like the idea of immobilizing 5 per cent of their loans in such shares and of having their taxes increased in order to finance the Senator's grand back-to-the-land movement. So complaints are arising on all sides against the Hollis bill.

The fact is Senator HOLLIS has shot beyond his land-credit mark and become a social reformer, moral uplifter, and an agrarian of the old Populist sort. His benevolence and enthusiasm have colored his vision in respect to economics and finance. He is not trying to mobilize land values; he is trying to subsidize the farmers. In framing a bill for this purpose he has copied clauses in European laws enacted for the lowest and most ignorant peasants and then added other clauses which violate basic principles by an attempt to combine cooperative associations with joint-stock companies and to use savings and deposits in long-term operations through a system aided and controlled by Government.

The scheme is so impracticable and the benefits offered to the farmers are so slight that the question may be seriously asked if the creation of Government banks for savings and deposits is not now the main object of the bill. Some foreign nations, with centralizing and socialistic tendencies, have supplied the financial needs of state in part by establishing such institutions and restricting their investments to Government stock and bonds. The program of the present Democratic administration embraces enterprises of a private nature to be done by the United States Government. The more funds the Government can bring under its control the more readily these enterprises can be undertaken. The Hollis bill points the way.

MYRON T. HERRICK.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, April 21.

[The Sun, Monday, April 24, 1916.]

I want to repeat that I have read these criticisms of this distinguished banker and this earnest student of the question of rural credits, because I think they are a very valuable contribution to the discussion of the pending measure.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the first argument advanced by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] against the pending bill is in the form of a query, asking what reason there is for pressing a bill of this nature. The reason is found in the three national platforms of the campaign of 1912—the Democratic, the Republican, and the Progressive—all declaring in favor of a rural-credits bill. This bill is in response to the promise that was then made and in response to the needs that made those pledges necessary.

I have no quarrel with anyone who thinks that a bill of this kind is not needed. Anyone who thinks it is not needed ought to vote against it. I believe, however, that nine-tenths of the Members of the Senate believe that the bill is needed.

The letter that is signed by Gov. Herrick—and I have not the least idea that he wrote it—is one that has become very familiar to me, because it has been sent to me in one shape or another every two or three weeks for the last year. Gov. Herrick takes the very conservative, "standpat" attitude on this subject. He thinks that the National Government ought not to interfere in any way in the banking business. He himself is the head of the Society for Savings in Ohio, the largest savings bank in the State and the largest loaner to farmers. Doubtless Gov. Herrick prefers not to be interfered with in his savings-bank business, and with that I do not quarrel.

Mr. DILLINGHAM and Mr. HARDING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield, first, to the Senator from Vermont, and then I will yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I simply wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether either of the political platforms to which he refers indorsed this plan of Government aid; and, if so, which one?

Mr. HOLLIS. In the first place, this is not a "plan of Government aid." The bill has been more severely attacked because it is not a Government-aid plan than because it is so. It has been attacked on both sides; and, as I have tried to explain to the Senate, it gives Government aid in the sense of establishing a system and furnishing the initial capital, but later withdrawing the initial capital after the system shall have been built up.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I think I ought to say to the Senator from New Hampshire, who suggests the selfish interest of Col. Herrick in this matter, that the Cleveland Society for Savings, which is the largest institution of its kind in the world, is distinctly a mutual institution, in which there is no private stockholder and no selfish interest to be served.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am very well aware of that; but no doubt Gov. Herrick, if he is fit to be the head of that institution, wants it to flourish, and he would be very sorry to see any part of its business taken away from it. I do not think that is selfish; I think it is moderate self-protection.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is it not a fact that Gov. Herrick has formulated a rural credits bill that has been printed as a public document and that he has written a whole volume upon that subject explaining it? I think probably every Senator has received a copy of his work on rural credits. I simply ask that question to meet the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire that Col. Herrick was selfish in the matter and probably did not wish any character of rural-credits legislation.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I am very glad, indeed, to answer the Senator. Mr. Herrick did not write such a book as the distinguished Senator from North Dakota suggests. That book was written by a young man named Ingalls, a son of the late Senator Ingalls. His name is Ralph Ingalls. His name appears with that of Gov. Herrick as coauthor. I have no doubt he wrote substantially all the book and that Gov. Herrick lent his name to it.

As to a rural-credits bill having been drafted by Gov. Herrick, that is the first I have ever heard of it. If such a bill has been prepared, I have no doubt it was drawn by this same Mr. Ralph Ingalls.

Ever since the joint committees of the Senate started this proposition Gov. Herrick has been bombarding them with communications. I have received at least half a dozen from him, with the request that I reply and criticize. The fact is that he is opposed to the Government going into the mortgage business itself or giving franchises to any banks to go into the business. He believes that the rural-credit business should be handled by the States, and he gives his reasons for so believing.

The letter which was just read by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] is practically the same letter that was introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in the RECORD of yesterday. It is all found there. It contains rather a hysterical attack on the pending bill, a great deal of misinformation, a tremendous amount of misinterpretation, and some sound advice. In the first place, he says there are incompatible private banks and cooperative associations. That has been fully explained to the Senate. All over Europe private banks exist side by side with cooperative banks. Each fulfills its own special mission; each is successful. They compete with each other. In framing this bill the joint committee felt that it would be presumptuous to try to impose on all parts of the country any one of the systems. The committee has, therefore, provided that there may be joint-stock banks, cooperative associations with a limited liability, and cooperative associations with an unlimited liability. If we had provided any one system, Gov. Herrick would doubtless have attacked it and said that we ought to have provided the other two. When anyone is opposed to a measure it is easy enough to get up an argument that sounds convincing. Whether or not it is convincing, however, depends largely upon the intelligence and information of those to whom it is addressed.

Gov. Herrick speaks of "jokers," and points out two provisions that he calls "jokers." The first one that he calls a "joker" is the tax exemption. There is no joke about that. It is put right in the bill flatly; attention has been called to it in the report of the committee; I have called attention to it on the floor of the Senate; and there is no "joker" about it. A man is either in favor of exempting a farmer of taxation on mortgages or on bonds, or he is not. Each one will have to decide that for himself. It is a very fashionable way, if you want to ridicule anything nowadays, to call it a "joker"; but that does not fit this particular case.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, does the bill which the Senator from New Hampshire has reported exempt the farmer from taxation, or does it exempt the man who owns the mortgage or the mortgage-loan bond from taxation, which may not be held by the farmer?

Mr. HOLLIS. It is the mortgage itself and the bond itself. As I explained the other day, experience shows that where the farmer borrows money on his farm and the mortgage is taxed, the farmer has to pay enough more interest on his mortgage to pay that tax. Any economist will admit that. Here we have the land which must pay its taxation locally; we have the mortgage; and we also have the farm-loan bond. If the farm-loan bond is taxed and the mortgage is taxed, the farmer will have to pay those taxes in addition to the tax on his land, which would be triple taxation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Is it not true, in line with the suggestion of the Senator, that in most of the States farm mortgages are exempt from taxation?

Mr. HOLLIS. It is so in many States. In my own State any mortgage on land owned in New Hampshire is exempt if the rate is 5 per cent or under. The result of that is that all money loaned on mortgage in New Hampshire is at 5 per cent, and I think that is generally the case, but I can not say accurately, because I have not examined the laws of all the States.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that it is true entirely throughout the country; but I know that a great many of the States exempt such mortgages upon the theory that the tax can finally be transferred back and charged to the farmer.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I regret to say that what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] says is generally true; it does not apply to the State of Ohio. Unfortunately, in that State we have had for years double taxation. All our property, real, personal, and intangible, is taxable according to a uniform rule under the constitution. We have tried repeatedly to get rid of it, but up to today we have not succeeded. So if a $10,000 farm has upon it an $8,000 mortgage, under the constitution of the State of Ohio, the farm pays a tax according to its real value in money, and the mortgage must be returned for taxation; so that in that instance there would be taxes paid upon $18,000.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. HARDING. It will only add information on the subject to say, in addition to what my colleague has just related, that in Ohio we tax all our municipal bonds, and we have repeatedly submitted to the people of the State a proposition to exempt such bonds from taxation, but the rural vote in particular is unalterably against such a proposition.

Mr. POMERENE. Perhaps I should add to what my colleague has just said that we did some years ago adopt an amendment making municipal bonds nontaxable, but within three or four years thereafter another amendment was submitted under which that provision was rescinded, and they are now taxable, as my colleague says.

Mr. HARDING. And, in addition, two later attempts to exempt them have failed.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that is true.

Mr. HOLLIS. If such is the state of the law in Ohio——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. Just a moment. If such is the state of the law in Ohio, that the bonds will be taxed, the mortgages will be taxed, and the farmer's land will be taxed, so that the farmer will pay triple taxation, I venture the prediction that under this system, if the bill is passed, the land banks would do a very substantial business at lower rates than now exist in Ohio.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it not true that under the plan of this bill the only way in which the farmer gets the benefit of the exemption of the bonds and other securities from taxation is through the assumption that the interest on capital will be reduced by the amount of the exemption?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. What does the Senator think of the present situation? There are some States in which capital, moneys, and credits are not taxed at all. There are other States in which there is a definite tax much lower than the ordinary rate of taxation laid upon moneys and credits. If, therefore, we get our capital from a State where it is exempt from taxation, why should we not get it at a lower rate of interest than when we get it from a State that imposes a tax upon it; and is the Senator at all sure that the exemption from taxation will be reflected in the rate of interest which the farmer pays for his loan?

Mr. HOLLIS. I am absolutely sure of it, and every economist who has written on the subject will so state. That has been the result in my own experience. I know that in New Hampshire, when mortgage loans were exempt from taxation, when the rate of interest was not more than 5 per cent, the rates dropped on such mortgage loans to 5 per cent almost at once.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is not my conclusion from the study I have given to the subject. If we had a uniform rule throughout the United States in regard to the matter, the conclusion might follow, or it might not, depending upon the demand for money; but, with no uniformity respecting the taxation of capital, I question very much whether the result would follow.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Senator from Kansas will pardon me, I should like first to answer the Senator from Iowa.

Uniformity under this plan would extend over the United States, because all mortgages and all bonds under this system would be exempt from all taxation. Therefore, in States where there was that exemption from taxation on the mortgages and the bonds, the farmers would already be getting the benefit of the low rate of interest. Possibly in such States the land banks established under this system would not be able to much underbid the local banks, but in States——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Senator will pardon me—but in States where there was a triple taxation imposed, I think the banks organized under this system could hardly fail to give a considerably lower rate of interest than the local banks now give.

I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I was suggesting, if the Senator will allow me, that in Iowa, for instance, if we borrow money from one who lives in a State that exempts credits from taxation we do not get the benefit of that exemption.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is true.

Mr. CUMMINS. And, inasmuch as I assume that this system is not intended to be a substitute for all the loaning instrumentalities, I doubt whether our farmers would get any benefit from the exemption under this system.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator is mistaken in one particular, if I correctly understand him. He says that if the owner of capital lives in a State outside of Iowa which exempts money loaned at interest from taxation, and that owner should loan his money in Iowa, Iowa would not get the benefit of it. I think Iowa certainly would, because if the man did not have to pay taxes at home he could certainly afford to loan his money at a lower rate in Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the fallacy of the whole argument. The man who has a mortgage that he is not compelled to pay taxes upon will not give the borrower the benefit of that exemption from taxation if he can loan his money at a greater rate of interest; and he can loan his money at a greater rate of interest if his rival loaners who must pay taxes charge a higher rate of interest. No man who has money loans it at any lower rate of interest than he is compelled so to do under the laws of competition, I think.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is true; but the level rises or falls, according to the tendency of money. If money is in plentiful supply at a cheap rate, the rate will go down; if money is scarce, the rate will go up. Now, if there are enough men who have money tax exempt to lend, the rate will inevitably fall; if there are very few, they will not affect the market. That all depends on how great is the supply. Under the present bill we expect to have the supply plentiful enough so that it will lower the interest rate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question.

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask if the residence of the owner of the mortgage does not control the question of taxation? For instance, in a State like Kansas loans are made practically by loaning companies. They sell the mortgages; and if a mortgage is purchased by a man in the State, he pays taxes on it in the State; but if the mortgage is sold to a man in Ohio or in Massachusetts or in any other State, no taxes are paid on the mortgage in Kansas, and it depends upon the law of his own State whether or not he pays a tax on it there.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is perfectly true. That is what I said in response to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon an interruption, as shedding some light upon this, we had some experience in Mississippi. Money was being loaned at 8, 9, and 10 per cent. The legislature finally, in order to encourage capital to come into the State, passed a law exempting from taxes all loans at 6 per cent or under 6 per cent. Nearly every long-time loan in the State of Mississippi since then has been reduced to 6 per cent; in fact, when a 6 per cent untaxed loan comes to vie with an 8 per cent taxed loan, if you take the taxes into consideration, it is better for the lender to lend at 6 per cent; he gets more net revenue. A great many people who were loaning at even 9 and 10 per cent were willing to accept the lower rate, because they do not have to pay taxes, and because they do not have to be bothered with the tax collector, with making out returns, and all that sort of thing. I think in all public legislation less attention is paid than the matter really deserves to the desire of men not to be bothered with having to make out statements for taxing purposes. At any rate, the fact in my State has been that nearly every long-time loan in the State has been reduced to 6 per cent.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I have discussed one so-called "joker" which has been suggested by Gov. Herrick, and I now desire to discuss another one.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds to that, upon the matter of taxation of mortgages I should like to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Under the provisions of the bill no mortgage can draw a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent. Therefore, no matter whether or not the mortgages and the bonds are taxable in the hands of the purchasers, you could not make that react against the mortgagor, because he can not be required to pay more than 6 per cent.

Mr. HOLLIS. But if you can not get the money in the first place from a long-term investor at 5 per cent, you would not be able to make any loans, because you could not get money to loan. Unless we can borrow the money on farm-loan bonds at 5 per cent, we can not borrow any, and therefore we will have none to loan to the farmer.

Now, the other "joker" that is suggested——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before the Senator proceeds to another branch of the subject, I should like to ask him a question about the taxing feature. I agree with the Senator that, generally speaking, at any rate it is unwise to impose taxes upon farm mortgages, or, indeed, upon any kind of mortgages, because I think that generally the amount of the tax is shifted to the borrower, and it really amounts to double taxation; but I wanted to ask the Senator whether or not he felt quite sure that Congress has the power to exempt from State and municipal taxation within the State mortgages which are of course a species of property? I suppose the theory upon which the Senator proceeds is that the mortgages taken by the land banks would be regarded as instrumentalities of the Government; but, if the Senator has thought about that, I should very much like to have his view as to the power of the General Government to declare to be a governmental instrumentality a thing which is essentially private property and which the State, when that species of property is held by a private citizen, can tax.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, that question was settled in 1819 in an opinion by Chief Justice Marshall, which is familiar to the Senator, the case of McCulloch v. The State of Maryland (4 Wheat., 316). In that case there was involved the right of the State of Maryland to insist that notes issued by a branch of the United States Bank should be on stamped paper. The State of Maryland undertook to collect a penalty for failure to use stamped paper for that purpose, but the Supreme Court of the United States, in a long opinion by Chief Justice Marshall, decided that the Government had a right to incorporate a bank; that it had a right to exempt the bank from taxation; and that it had a right to exempt its instrumentalities from taxation. I think that opinion covers the point fully. That case is the authority under which the present national-bank act is sustained in the case of Van Allen against The Assessors, in Third Wallace, 573.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It has been quite a long time since I have had occasion to examine the case which deals with the United States bank legislation. My recollection, however, is that the Supreme Court of the United States held that the State was powerless to tax the franchise of the bank, but that it had the power to tax its property.

Mr. HOLLIS. It was just the other way. It was powerless to tax the instrumentality issued by the bank, to wit, the bank note. That was directly involved; but I would rather not argue that now. At some other time I shall be very glad to argue the question with the Senator, and I will have the authorities here; but if he will examine the McCulloch case, I think he will see that it is exactly parallel with the case at issue. I should like very much to finish my reply to the Senator from Ohio.

The second "joker" suggested by Gov. Herrick is that the borrower is allowed to borrow enough from the land bank to pay for his shares and to pay the expense of placing his loan. That would include the expense of examining the title and drawing the papers. There, again, if you want to stigmatize something, you call it a "joker" or a "pork-barrel" measure; and Gov. Herrick has availed himself of that privilege. But there is no "joker" about that. Here is the situation:

In order to have a successful mortgage-bank system, it is necessary to have a guarantee fund to take up the slack of the bad loans. If you just loan the money on the mortgages, and then put up the mortgages as security for an issue of farm-loan bonds, some day there will appear a bad mortgage and you will not have anything to take that out of, because you have all your mortgages up to support the loan, and when one drops out you are just so much short.

Now, it is recognized all over this country and in Europe that in a land-mortgage system you should have a guaranty fund of 5 per cent. You may call it capital. We do in this instance. In this case we have to have a 5 per cent capital, 5 per cent on the amount of our mortgages, 5 per cent on the amount of our bonds. The Government starts out the 12 banks with a capital of $500,000 each, but that would not be enough to support mortgages and bonds of over $6,000,000 each. Therefore we must have some way of getting additional capital in order to impose an issue of bonds upon it. The only way to do that under a cooperative system, as this is, is to get it from the borrower himself.

The first bill, which was drawn two years ago, provided that the stock of the local associations should come from private contributors. Under that bill we had to call on private investors at three points: First, to subscribe to the stock of the farm-loan associations; second, to subscribe to the stock of the land banks; and, third, to buy the farm-loan bonds. If we did that and were successful—and it is very doubtful whether the investors would subscribe for these three different classes—but if we were successful, that meant that we would have to turn the control of the system over to those who invested their money, because men will not invest their money in something where they do not control the votes.

Therefore in the present bill we have avoided that. We get from the Government the original capital, and then we sell the bonds to the investors so as to get more money to loan, but we have the borrower himself furnish his own guaranty fund. If he wants to borrow $2,000, he must take stock in the loan association to the amount of 5 per cent, or $100. We think that is useful, because it gives somewhat of an index to the character of the man. The man who can not produce $100 in order to borrow $2,000 probably is not a desirable man to have in a cooperative system.

In the second place, by requiring him to take stock we secure his interest in the success of the system; we get him interested to make it a success, and we also get him to watch other borrowers and see that cheap men, men who are not likely to pay, do not come in. But when you say to a man, "We will loan you 50 per cent of the value of your farm," and then require him to put up $100, 5 per cent of the amount he borrows, toward the guarantee fund, it is rather rough not to allow him to borrow that $100 additional; and under this bill we do. If he wants to borrow $2,000, if he will send us the $100 to give us an index that he is a man who can command $100 locally, then we will permit him to borrow $2,100, and he can pay back the $100 he has had to borrow out of it.

It did not seem to us that that was a "joker." It would be a very helpful thing to a farmer who needed to borrow. In the same way we have provided that he might borrow whatever expense he had to pay to get the loan made; that is, for looking up the title and having the papers drawn; and it did not seem to us that we were doing anything out of the way in that regard.

But I am encouraged at this sort of criticism. When a man of Gov. Herrick's standing and experience can not find anything more serious to say against the bill than that it contains two "jokers" of this character, it shows that the bill must be pretty tolerably sound, or he would not waste an 11-inch shell in going after such small game.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to make an inquiry.

In a land-bank district of the kind referred to by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], or some of the other States where funds are capable of being found at a very fair rate, say 5 per cent, and applications are readily filled, does the Senator think that in such districts—which shall comprise States, if I understand the bill correctly, without breaking the boundary lines of States—a land bank would be organized beyond the minimum amount of capital? Or would it, if organized with the minimum amount, be subscribed by private individuals as an investment?

Mr. HOLLIS. I myself do not believe that private individuals will subscribe anything. If I had my way I would not permit them to do so. I would have the Government put up the $500,000 and then have it paid back as the capital increased from the borrowers. But the bill provides that the districts shall be apportioned in accordance with the farm-loan needs of the country. Now, take a State like Iowa—that is admirably served; take a State like Ohio—that is admirably served. I should think their farm-loan needs were not very great. I should think that one land bank could cover that whole great section where the rates are so low, and that would leave more banks in the parts of the country South and West where the rates are high and where they are more needed. That is my own feeling about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I make a further inquiry?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the event that the minimum capital for a land bank in a district of the kind just referred to would be $500,000 and would be paid by the Government—which might be assumed for the purposes of my inquiry——

Mr. HOLLIS. I think so.

Mr. SHERMAN. In another district, say a district composed of Alabama and Mississippi, the capital stock of a land bank in that district would be solely within the discretion of the farm-loan board here at Washington, would it not?

Mr. HOLLIS. Does the Senator mean the limit?

Mr. SHERMAN. It might be $500,000, or it might be much in excess of that?

Mr. HOLLIS. That would depend entirely on whether farmers borrow money. Every time a farmer borrows money 5 per cent would be added to the capital. That is true.

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose only a comparative small number of shares were subscribed by private individuals. In that event the Government would subscribe, and the Treasury here would furnish the remainder of the capital stock in that district. In that event, in the latter district named, the Government would in reality furnish the funds for the loans.

Mr. HOLLIS. They would in the first instance; but when the subscriptions from the borrowers, the 5 per cent of the face of the loans, amount to $500,000, then, beginning at that time, 25 per cent of all further subscriptions is paid over to the Government until the Government gets it all back. If the system is a success, the Government ought to get it all back in two or three years.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will make a further inquiry. It depends, then, upon the success of the investment, does it not?

Mr. HOLLIS. Absolutely. It depends on how many loans the farmers want on good land.

Mr. SHERMAN. And in order to obtain further funds it would be necessary to deposit the mortgages and, under the provisions of the bill, to issue what we commonly call another line of debenture bonds based on the mortgages?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. In that event the land bank in the first district I had in mind would stand responsible for every bond in Alabama, would it not?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Because, when the bonds are once issued, the land banks of all the 12 districts are not only jointly but severally responsible for them.

Mr. HOLLIS. Not severally; jointly.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is, if the assets of 11 of the district banks were exhausted, and the twelfth bank had assets enough to pay it, it would take all of its assets to pay the bond issue.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is what I call "jointly." There is a difference between "severally" and "jointly," as the Senator well knows. They would not be severally liable; they would be jointly liable for the principal of the bonds.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does not the Senator think that that fact alone, in all agricultural districts where land values have arrived at a settled state, such as Iowa, Illinois, a large part of Missouri, and similar parts of the Union, would deter private individuals from embarking in a land bank by subscribing for stock—the fact that their resources, so devoted to that purpose, would stand good for the bonds issued upon the underlying mortgages in every land bank in the country?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; I do not think so. I think they would be deterred from the fact that they were asked to invest without having any voting power. I have already explained that; but in those districts where the land is not so valuable the interest rate charged would undoubtedly be high enough to make up for that extra risk. That is why we have divided the country up into districts instead of having it all one great district. We feared that if we had it all one great district the interest rate would be fixed at the highest rate of interest which was required to be paid, say, in the weakest portion; and, therefore, we thought it should be cut up into sections so that the risks would be substantially the same in each section, and the rate of interest over a particular district should be substantially the same.

Mr. SHERMAN. Another inquiry, Mr. President, and then I will close.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am very glad to answer questions if I can.

Mr. SHERMAN. Therefore appropriations made by the agency of this bill, to be drawn from the Treasury, in a Government undertaking, are depended upon to lower the rates of interest on these investments. Is that correct?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not want to subscribe to its being a Government undertaking. It is a Government undertaking so far as establishing the system is concerned, but that is merely for the start, and we have provided that the capital advanced shall be returned. If it is a success, it will be returned, but the Government is helping all over the country. That is the reply; and in those sections where they need it most they will get the most help. That is inevitable.

Mr. SHERMAN. And in that event, where we are now getting 5 per cent money and no complaints, we contribute by taxes or otherwise to the just rates in the second district that I have supposed as an illustration?

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator is now using the very admirable argument which the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] made on the good-roads bill the other day. I do not think it is entirely justified, because the great vice of the mortgages in Illinois, as the Senator knows, is that they are not on long term; they are not on amortized payments; the farmer is not encouraged to pay them off. He has to renew every little while. Every time he has to renew there are new papers to be made out, new commissions to pay, and he still has the same old debt owing. Under this system the chief merit is the amortization loan feature, which will compel the farmer to pay off the principal of his loan, almost insensibly, 1 or 2 per cent a year. That is what we hope will be established in this country, and I believe the State of Illinois will be very, very much benefited by it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, that is what I am trying to ascertain. In certain areas—I do not refer to my own State, but to many surrounding States where real estate values are substantially the same—there is little or no complaint about the cost of renewing the loan, the preparation of papers, the examination of titles or the extension of abstracts. In such States, where there are no complaints, where loans are now made running from 5 to 15 years, if desired—I know of loans now, in business enterprises in which I have been interested myself, having been made for 15 years with an option to pay any sum at any time, providing the borrower makes it out of the land—in areas of the United States where loans are in that condition and where 5 per cent money is accessible at all times upon a 50 per cent margin of security, what advantage would it be to have such a bill as this?

Mr. HOLLIS. I have just tried to explain that to the Senator. If I did not convince him at the first attempt, I probably could not at the second. I say that the amortized-loan feature alone ought to be enough to induce the farmers of Illinois to go into it, so that they will get their loan paid off a little at a time by paying a small amount each year.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have just stated, Mr. President—possibly I did not make myself clear——

Mr. HOLLIS. Oh, if the Senator eliminates all the advantages, of course there will be no advantages; but I have sketched the advantages that I think will follow. If the Senator eliminates them one after another, I shall finally be left without any. But I can not think that even in Illinois the farmers are so fortunate now in the way their loans are made that they can not be helped under this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Vast sums of life insurance money are loaned in the States I have referred to where there are privileges of prepayment at annual intervals. There are some loans of this kind made from private sources, and it is the universal rule in what we call the corn belt to give the prepayment privilege at any time if the borrower makes it out of the land. I know personally of many millions of dollars loaned at 5 per cent, with the prepayment privilege to the farmer, to be made at any time, providing he makes it out of the land. It is a better prepayment privilege than in the case of any building loan on city property. I am trying to ascertain if, to people living in such areas of the United States, there is any inducement whatever to support or to ask us to support the bill with the idea that any benefits will come to that population?

Mr. HOLLIS. I am giving the Senator my private opinion—that they will, and the great party to which he belongs thought that, on the whole, such benefits would result, and declared in favor of a rural-credits measure. Now, it may be that the State of Illinois does not want it, and it may be that they would secede from the Republican Party on that proposition, but I believe the Republican Party all over the United States wants it, just as the Democratic Party all over the United States wants it, and I am trying to get the best possible bill for national application that we can get. It will not help them as much in Illinois as it will in some States where the rate is higher, but I think it will help substantially, for the reasons I have already explained. If the Senator does not believe it will, he naturally will not vote for the bill, but I hope there will be enough who will vote for it to pass it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator just one or two questions.

What inducement is there in this bill for the private citizen who has capital of his own to invest to inaugurate this system and to start one of these banks?

Mr. HOLLIS. There are bankers in South Dakota who have been to see me and who say that they want to operate one of the joint-stock banks as provided for in the bill. There are bankers in Indiana who want to do it. The mortgage bankers of Chicago have sent circulars asking to have certain things put in the bill so that they can come in.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not asking so much as to who wishes to do it. I want to know the inducement that the bill holds out to them so that I may understand it; and all of my questions will be for the purpose of getting a better understanding of the bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. Just the same inducement that there is for the private capitalist to organize a national bank instead of a State bank. Some capitalists think there is enough advantage in having a national bank to come in under the national system with the extra restrictions that there are. Now, we think it will be an inducement to a capitalist who wishes to engage in the mortgage business to organize one of the joint-stock banks in order to be under the national system of land banks; and, moreover, I think they will do it in order to get tax exemption of the mortgages and bonds that they issue.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, Mr. President, when any man goes into any kind of a business he goes into that business for the profit there is in it. If I understand this bill correctly, all the profits must lie between what the farmer pays on his mortgage and what the bond draws.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. And that spread can not be more than 1 per cent.

Mr. HOLLIS. Not 1 per cent on the capital, because the banker can issue fifteen times the amount of his capital in bonds; so he will get 1 per cent on fifteen times his capital, which ought to be enough.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is 1 per cent upon the mortgages that are given under this bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then he must make all of his expenses; he must build his bank building; he must pay all of the charges connected with the business——

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not see why the Senator says he must build a bank building. We have 12 Federal reserve banks in this country, enormous institutions, and not one of them has built a bank building. They have very modest quarters.

Mr. McCUMBER. If they do not build it, they will have to rent it, I presume.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Which is practically the same thing.

Mr. HOLLIS. But the Senator's argument the other day was that these banks which we provided would spend all their $500,000 capital in building a bank building. I wanted him to see that that is not probable.

Mr. McCUMBER. The point I want to get at is the real inducement, and the methods by which the parties operating the banks are to receive their profit. If I understand the Senator correctly, that profit must come out of the difference between the 4 per cent which the bonds will draw and the 5 per cent which the mortgage will pay.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is absolutely accurate.

Mr. McCUMBER. And if the number of mortgages and the amount handled were not sufficient to pay the expenses between those two, then the inevitable result would be that that bank would soon have to go out of business, would it not?

Mr. HOLLIS. There is no doubt of it. I will say, further, that in Europe these banks conduct their business on a margin of one-third of 1 per cent on the mortgages and pay dividends.

Mr. McCUMBER. They probably could do it if they had a great quantity of them. The officers of these banks are to be selected through the farming organizations, are they not?

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Senator will pardon me, we have been talking about the private joint-stock banks, which are separate institutions. Now, the Senator is proceeding to talk about the cooperative banks, which are very different. One is called the joint-stock land bank and the other the Federal land bank. We are now talking about the Federal land bank.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am speaking now of the Federal land bank.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; I want that clear.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Federal land-bank officers are selected through the loan organizations, are they not?

Mr. HOLLIS. Two of them are appointed by the farm-loan board and three of them are elected by the farm-loan associations.

Mr. McCUMBER. My own opinion is that with the many officers and the salaries and the immense machinery there will not be enough to cover the overhead expenses that will be provided; but that is a mere matter of opinion.

Mr. HOLLIS. Right there, let me say that the Senator has said that, but I can enumerate to him what they are and show him that they are very slight. To begin with, there is the farm-loan board. If it is established as the bill provides there will be four of them paid $10,000 each. That is paid by the Government. Each of these great land banks, with an initial capital of $500,000, has only five directors, and that is all the bill provides.

Mr. McCUMBER. And what are the directors paid?

Mr. HOLLIS. The compensation of the directors of the land bank is subject to the approval of the farm-loan board. Their compensation must come out of the 1 per cent. Now, you can not run any bank anywhere without paying for banking brains. I believe it will cost something to run these banks. If they are not well paid they will not be well run, and they will not make any money. But you might as well ask me how the Standard Oil Co., or any other concern, can make money when it pays its officers liberal salaries. Take the banks in New York: Some of those great banks in New York pay $100,000 salaries, and the men earn them. I do not know what it will cost, or how much they will pay. They will pay just as much as they have to pay to get efficient service, and I hope they will get very efficient service and pay very well for it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is all there is to the Senator's criticism that this system is loaded down with highly paid officials. That is all there is to it; and if that is the best criticism there is of the bill, I feel very much reassured.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say to the Senator that my own judgment is that if it can be made a profitable business to the organizers of the bank, you can get men to go into it that have the brains and the capacity to run the institutions; but you will not get them to devote their talents to the purpose unless there is a profit that justifies the exercise of those talents.

Mr. HOLLIS. That amount of profit is found in Europe at one-third of 1 per cent, and I believe we can find it at 1 per cent margin in this country. I may be wrong. If we can not, we shall never know it until we try it.

Mr. McCUMBER. After the Government is entirely eliminated, the stock then will be owned by the loaning associations, will it not?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is true.

Mr. McCUMBER. When the stock is owned by the loaning associations, they, of course, will have the management of the bank?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; the Government will still have two of the five directors, and they will still be under the farm-loan board.

Mr. McCUMBER. Although the Government may own none of the stock, the Government can still exercise its control as to who shall be directors?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly; just like the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. McCUMBER. Must the directors be stockholders?

Mr. HOLLIS. It is not necessary; no.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Government may employ them anywhere it sees fit?

Mr. HOLLIS. Why, the Government will do exactly as the Government does with the Federal reserve banks now. There are nine directors for every Federal reserve bank. Six of those are elected by the member banks and three are appointed by the Federal Reserve Board. It works out splendidly. We get the very best men all over the country to do that work practically for nothing. They consider it an honor to be connected with one of these Federal reserve banks. There is a great push by first-class men to get the appointments.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope the Senator's optimism is justified.

Mr. HOLLIS. It is not optimism; it is facts. I am stating facts now. I am not dealing in speculation at all. I am stating just what has occurred under a system that the other side of this Chamber attacked much more viciously than they are attacking this.

Mr. McCUMBER. As I understand, the Senator wishes to discuss this matter further——

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; but I am not particular. I expect to have to answer a great many questions. I am on tap at any time.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will wait until the Senator has finished, and then I will consider the matter to some extent.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is not this stock also open to private subscription?

Mr. HOLLIS. The stock is open to private subscription. If I had my way, I would not have permitted it, however. I do not think anyone will subscribe, because any individual who does subscribe has no vote. I think the Government will take substantially the whole of it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. After the Government stock has been retired, private parties, firms, or corporations will still have the privilege, as well as the farm-loan association?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; that is true; and one of the criticisms made by Gov. Herrick is, because we permit the Federal land banks to receive deposits from stockholders, that private individuals may subscribe, and thereby get the right to deposit money with the land banks. I hope they will do it, and deposit a great deal, because if they do they can not get one cent of interest, and the bill so provides. If Gov. Herrick wrote the letter that is over his signature, and if he has read the bill, it was very unfair of Gov. Herrick not to state that these depositors could not draw any interest; and anyone who knows that they can not get interest would know that they would not deposit. I hope they will. If they do, they will solve the whole problem. We will get their deposits for nothing, and we will loan them to the farmers cheaply, too.

He also says there is no appeal from the farm-loan board. There is no appeal from the Federal Reserve Board. There is no appeal from any one of these various boards, from license commissioners, railroad commissioners, and so forth. You have to have final judgment somewhere; and it is not necessary, every time you want to get a loan, to go to the Supreme Court of the United States. There will not be any disposition on the part of the farm-loan board to crowd anybody or to rob anybody or to discriminate against anybody. As soon as they do the one who is hurt will howl, and his howl will be heard all over the country. The idea of having an appeal provided from the farm-loan board arises from a hypocritical attitude toward the system from one who is an enemy of it.

He says that this is an instrument for turning the public funds over to the farmer. Anyone who heard the letter read by the Senator from Ohio to-day would think that this bill provided for making a loan of Government money to the farmer; but that is not so. We do not propose to loan Government money to farmers at all, but to get long-term investors to buy our bonds based on mortgages as collateral and then loan the money to the farmers.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am greatly interested in the Senator's last statement. Does the Senator think that Government credit will be used instead of Government money?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; I know it will not, and that is the next point I will come to. Gov. Herrick says the Government guarantees these bonds. It does nothing of the kind. There is no Government guaranty anywhere in the bill, and that is one of the things farmers complain of. They say the Government should get behind this business and it ought to guarantee the bonds. If I had my way it would do it, because I believe personally that is a proper Government function. I think the majority of the Members of this body are against that. Therefore, this is what is provided. I will have to lay a foundation before I come to the point. As the Senator well knows, under the national banking act every national bank is now a Government depositary. Whenever there is a panic or trouble in any particular locality the Secretary of the Treasury loans Government money to the bank in order to help out. That has been done in all parts of the country. It was done right here in Washington. It averted a great panic in Washington about two years ago. But the Secretary of the Treasury can not deposit Government funds for temporary use without requiring security, Government bonds or otherwise. That is what the national-bank act provides. Now, I borrowed that for this bill, and I take the full responsibility for it. It is from the national-bank act, and it provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may on the application of the farm-loan board loan temporarily to the Federal land banks not to exceed $6,000,000 in any one year, taking Government bonds or other good security of twice the value of the deposit, with interest at 2 per cent. That is all the Government aid there is in it. It is limited to $6,000,000 in any one year. It must be loaned to land banks on the security of bonds or other security satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury. That is all the Government aid there is here. I wish it were more. I wish I could get more, but I believe that is as much as I can get.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield further to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield further.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there is no Government credit used or Government money beyond the sum stated——

Mr. HOLLIS. And the original contribution of capital. I have stated that several times.

Mr. SHERMAN. It might be subscribed by the Government in an indefinite amount under the order of the farm-loan board.

Mr. HOLLIS. No.

Mr. SHERMAN. What would be the limit?

Mr. HOLLIS. I think it would be possible only to have $500,000 for each bank. It has never occurred to me that the farm-loan board would authorize more than the 12 banks originally established.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me put this query to the Senator: Suppose in the second district, which I gave a moment ago, of Alabama and Mississippi, to illustrate, the minimum capital of the loan bank in that district would be fixed at $500,000. There is no maximum in the bill as written, and does not the farm-loan board have the right or the power to fix the capital stock in the district of Illinois and Iowa, for instance, at $10,000,000? Is there anything in the bill to prevent that?

Mr. HOLLIS. Nothing.

Mr. SHERMAN. In that event the whole $10,000,000, or $9,500,000 of it, at least, I think under the bill could be properly transferred to the first district supposed and loaned there.

Mr. HOLLIS. There is no power in the bill which permits the transfer of capital from one district to another as there is in the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not directly; but let me make a further inquiry. The capital stock to be fixed in the land bank of the district is in the discretion of the board; that is, the central governing board has unlimited power in that particular.

Mr. HOLLIS. That will be controlled by the amount of loans that are taken in the other districts. After the first $500,000 is subscribed, then all the other increases come from the 5 per cent received from the borrowers. That is automatic. It rises with additional needs and it falls with them. That is not fixed by the farm-loan board. It is fixed by the needs of the borrowers. But assume that it is large, and I think it will be large in all the districts.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me assume that in the one instance money is a little more difficult of procurement and the rates are higher, could not mortgages be written on application made under the provisions of the bill through the national farm-loan association, say, in the sum of $10,000,000, to have some concrete illustration?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; probably several hundred million dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then the money would be raised as soon as those loans are made by issuing bonds in the sum of $10,000,000, which would be a charge on all the 12 districts of the United States, including all the country.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is perfectly true. If we assume that we have but one great land bank to cover the whole country, as we would have a perfect right to do, and it has been urged by many people, then the different sections of the country would have to take their chances with all the other sections just as they do under the bill. The Government sets them up in business and requires that there shall be a universal guaranty all around as a return for that. It is perfectly true, as the Senator says, that a rich district might be called on to pay for a poor district; but the bank in the rich district may be badly managed and the bank in the poor district may be called on to make up for its deficiency. It is reciprocal.

Mr. SHERMAN. In other words, let me inquire, in the older States of the Union and some of the Mississippi Valley States north land values have been reaching toward their present condition for more than 100 years. Agricultural development has gone there during that time. In effect does not the bill transfer a portion of our land values or our accumulations through the power of taxation and make an involuntary loan so far as we pay direct taxes——

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not think so.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me complete it—to the area where the land values have not yet reached the level in the northern Mississippi Valley country that I have supposed?

Mr. HOLLIS. We are dealing now with the question of the liability of one bank to another. On that point, before one district can be called on to answer for the default of another, first, the capital, reserve, and earnings of the one land bank must be exhausted; second, all the mortgages that have been put up as the basis for bonds must be exhausted; third, all the individual liabilities of farm-loan associations must be exhausted; all the reserves and the capital of the farm-loan associations must be exhausted; and if the banks are properly run and properly supervised, there is no chance for a failure such as the Senator indicates. If it does come, the Senator is perfectly right that wherever it comes the people who have loaned to that section on farm-loan bonds will be allowed to go on other sections that come in and get the benefit of the system. There is no doubt about that. I do not try to conceal it. I want the Senate to understand it. I do not believe that you can make such a national system unless you have a broad insurance.

Mr. SHERMAN. If what the Senator says is likely to be worked out in practice both by the borrower and by the investing public, will the Senator explain why such an investment can not now be sold on the market at a fair rate?

Mr. HOLLIS. Very easily. In the first place, they are not Government supervised. In the second place, they do not have this broad Government insurance that I have outlined. In the third place, there has never been in this country any cooperative system with the individual liability of the cooperating borrowers. Those are the three brief answers. The pending bill is to provide a system to give these facilities to the farmers on farm loans just as we have given them to the merchants and manufacturers through the national banks. To accomplish this result we recommend the system.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. CLAPP addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield first to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to make a suggestion to the Senators in view of one or two of the questions propounded by the Senator from Illinois. Land values are not dependent upon the age of the sections of the Union. There are many older sections where land values are less than in some of the newer sections. I think I am safe in saying that in such States as my own, in Idaho, Utah, and adjoining States land values are in places as high if not higher than they are in the generally rich section of the Mississippi Valley. So far, therefore, as the transfer of values in the operation of this bill is concerned, if it becomes a law, there is an equation growing out of the desirability of different sections as to differing soils and crops. That would certainly equalize conditions and in any event make the question of the transfer of land values comparatively unimportant in the operation of the bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. If I understood the Senator a moment ago, the resources of both the banks and the cooperative association are involved in the payment of the loan made by either. Is that correct?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; not as I think the Senator understands it. The private joint-stock banks are organized for profit, and their capital, which is not exempt from taxation, stands entirely by itself. There is under the supervision of the farm-loan board a cooperative system of 12 land banks with their subsidiary associations.

Mr. CLAPP. I so understood it, but I think if the Senator will look at his remarks later he will see that possibly they bear the other construction.

Mr. HOLLIS. Very likely. It is very easy to confuse two characters of banks and to use the wrong word.

The point raised by Gov. Herrick's article that there will be numerous land banks formed I hardly believe is candid, but if anyone has a fear that there will be more than 12 I personally should not have the least objection to having the number limited to 12. That was one of the question which was up under the Federal reserve act, and we finally fixed on not more than 12, and 12 were organized. I have not the remotest idea that there ever will be more than 12 or any less than 12. They very soon settle into their environment and the connections formed are solidified, so that it is disadvantageous to give up the bank with its connections and start another. But if that criticism is made in good faith and anyone wants to offer an amendment that the number be limited to 12, I shall be very glad indeed, so far as I am concerned, to have it adopted.

Another suggestion by Gov. Herrick is that the capital is advanced by the Government and will not be returned. If these banks do a substantial business, it will run into the hundreds of millions. As soon as a bank has loaned ten million it will have a new capital of $500,000. When it increases its loans further, then 25 per cent of the new subscription will be returned to the Government. It will all be returned when the land bank has loaned $50,000,000. I should suppose the country will be divided into 12 districts, so that $50,000,000 may be loaned in each within two or three years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Fifty million dollars by all?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; $50,000,000 by each one. When you consider that the farm loans already existing in this country are four and a half or five billion dollars, and we need only to have 1 per cent of the amount taken out on each land bank, it seems very probable that the limit will soon be reached.

These points which have been submitted in a broadside through Gov. Herrick's letter will doubtless be raised seriatim later in the debate by various Senators, and as they come up one by one I shall be very glad to give my answer to them, such as it may be.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am one of those who favor a rural-credits system. I am in hopes that we may be able to establish a workable one. I have given this matter considerable consideration, and of one thing I have become satisfied, and that is that we can not inaugurate any system that will give substantial benefit to the agricultural class without entering to some extent into the field of paternalism. I wish that we could avoid it, but I am satisfied that it is impossible. I have therefore drawn a substitute for the bill offered by the committee, a substitute that is simple, that is workable, that will certainly prove to be a success. It can not be otherwise.

The bill that has been introduced by the committee is paternalistic in all its tendencies. The substitute which I will offer does not avoid that criticism. The bill as it is proposed requires the Government to invest $6,000,000 in a business that may be profitable or it may not be profitable, according to the operation of the banks and the conditions. If it is a success, the Government may get its money back. If it is not a success, it is the Government that loses, and we who pay the taxes, of course, pay for that loss. The Government is establishing the institutions; the Government is creating the corporations; the Government is officering the corporations and conducting the business for a class of American citizens. Now, to do that and to accomplish the ends that are sought, the committee has reported what they admit is a very complex and a very cumbersome bill. To my mind it is so top-heavy that it will not be workable.

The committee has attempted to formulate a bill that will reach the diverse conditions in the several sections of the United States and apply with approximate justice to all. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] has shown how it must fail to work justly to every section. I shall submit a substitute that will apply justly, because it will not require the Government to expend any money whatever except for a few additional clerks in the bureau which will be created.

Let us suppose this condition: Suppose the Government Treasury would buy up $100,000 worth of mortgages this year; that the Government would take those mortgages, bearing 4½ per cent interest, payable in 5 or 10 years, the interest payable annually; that the Government would then issue its debentures, bearing 4 per cent interest, payable in 20 years, with privilege of redeeming in 10 years if it was found that the demand of the country did not justify the continuation of this system. Then it sells those bonds bearing 4 per cent interest. The Government then has immediately received the money back that it paid for the mortgages it purchased.

Now, next year we will suppose that the Government takes another hundred thousand dollars and sells another hundred thousand dollars of debentures. This continues for 20 years, the Government selling the debentures just to the amount of the mortgages that it takes. The Government becomes the owner of the mortgages. They therefore would not be taxable.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. The Government in selling its own bonds can provide that they will not be taxable. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am following the statement of the Senator, and I wish to make an inquiry. Are those 4 per cent debenture bonds the obligation of the Government or simply secured by the undivided profits?

Mr. McCUMBER. They are the absolute obligation of the Government, and the mortgage securities which are owned by the Government are held as the basis of the bonds. Therefore, the Government has a dollar for every dollar it issues, and it has a security valuation equivalent to $2 upon every dollar of the mortgage which it takes.

Now, you will see that by following that system the Government puts itself in the position of a factor who has the property in his own hands and guarantees the payment of it. The Government would receive one-half of 1 per cent upon the mortgages to cover its expenses.

Under such a system as that there could be no question of any difference in the rates between any one section of the country and another. The rates would be 4½ per cent to the farmer, no more, no less. The farmer could pay off the mortgage under the provisions of the bill which I have offered at the end of 5 years, if he saw fit to pay it, or he could allow it to run the 10 years.

Now, here is a simple, easy proposition, unquestionably workable, because the moment the Government issues an untaxable bond for 4 per cent there will be any quantity of capital ready to take up those 4 per cent bonds of the Government. Then I provide that those 4 per cent bonds may be used in Federal banks for the issuance of currency, absolutely as good a security as it is possible to obtain, because it is the Government security itself.

Under the bill which I offer as a substitute the Government does not have to build a single other bank building. It does not have any of these overhead expenses. It utilizes the national banks of the country now in existence. It utilizes every State bank or trust company in the United States that is willing to act as the agent of the Government. It has its officials already in these banks in every town and village in the United States. It brings the farmer to his own home bank to do his business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Suppose the banks should decline to perform this service?

Mr. McCUMBER. There are generally two or three banks in every little town of 400 inhabitants in my State, and if one should decline there will be others that would accept. I can not imagine that a bank would decline to act if it wanted to have the business of the farmer, because the moment that the bank declines to act for this customer the customer goes to another bank and the first bank has lost that customer. That fact would assure an agency in every town in the agricultural sections of the United States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What provision would the Senator make for the examination of title?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will explain that.

Mr. CLAPP. Just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me. I think at this time some Senators may not be familiar with the proposed substitute. Making it clearer as to the willingness of the banks to act, it is not supposed that the banks take any responsibility except that of carrying, and surely where they did not have any responsibility imposed upon them they would be very glad to perform the mere duty of comparing papers and examining them for the compensation that is provided. I suggest to the Senator that to those who had not read his substitute the question as to whether the bank would act or not might involve the thought that the bank itself was assuming a responsibility for these debts.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; all that the bank is responsible for is good faith. Let me just apply it to the practical method of doing business. Suppose I want to make a loan upon a farm in my State. Of course under the provisions of this bill I could not have the advantage of it, and I could not have the advantage of it under the provisions of the substitute which I have offered, because I am not living upon the farm and I am not doing the farming myself, except through tenants and hired help. But suppose I was an actual farmer, doing business as such, and I wanted to borrow $5,000 upon a section of land. I would go to the bank in my own town. The probabilities are that that bank would be the agent for the Travelers' Insurance Co. or some other loan agency which loans a great amount of money in my State. As a farmer, I would go to that bank and tell the banker I wanted to make a real estate loan of $5,000. He would draw up an application for me to sign. That application would describe my land; it would show how many acres are under cultivation, what was the assessed value of the land, what land of that character was worth, the number of horses and cattle and sheep and hogs and farm machinery that I would have, the number of boys I might have upon the farm who could help me in operating it. After I had answered 40 or 50 of those questions which are in the application blank, that banker, if he did not already know my land—and the chances are a thousand to one that he would know all about it in an agricultural section of the country—would pass his judgment upon its value. He would then draw the mortgage for me, phone to an abstract office and have my abstract continued to date, or I would send over my own abstract, possibly, or phone and have a new abstract made. He would pass judgment upon my title. In addition to my own statement in my application, I would probably have the statement of two of my neighbors signed to it verifying what I had said in reference to it, verifying my answers to the many questions in that application. He would then take those and, in all probability, he would advance me the money on them. He would not even wait until he had received the money from the Travelers' Insurance Co. He would send the papers on, with a draft accompanying them. I would have my money the very day that I went into the bank to borrow; there would be no red tape about it. It may be he would charge $5 or $10 for drawing the papers; but ordinarily he would make no charge, as his fee would be paid—1 or one-half per cent—from the Travelers' Insurance Co. for acting as its agent.

Why not utilize that same system here? What objection is there to it, except the objection, which I admit is valid, as to those who believe that the Government itself ought not to do any kind of business for the benefit of any class of its citizenship? That is a valid objection to those who have that belief; but those who believe in this bill can certainly have no qualms of conscience concerning the paternalistic effect of it. It is the difference between an unworkable bill and a workable bill.

After I have dealt with the bank the coupons will be sent by the Travelers' Insurance Co. to that bank for collection. If I am a little late in my harvest the bank will advance me the money. When I sell my grain I will deposit the proceeds of the sale in that bank. I am doing business all the time with a Government agency already created and with no expense whatever attached to it.

Now, I am going to consider a few of the provisions of this bill to demonstrate, if I can, what a complex, heavy, expensive piece of machinery it is. The bill reported in a certain way duplicates the Federal Banking System. We start out with 12 of these regional land banks. We first have a Federal farm-loan board, and we pay its members each $10,000 a year. There are four of them, so their salaries amount to $40,000 annually.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota some days ago analyzed his substitute for the pending bill, but I think now, as we are getting nearer to a conclusion of the matter, there is more interest in his substitute. Though it may be plain to all, I think while the Senator suggested, after describing the manner of this loan on the part of the bank acting as an agent of the Travelers' Insurance Co., he would make the bank the agent for the Government instead of the agent for the company; at that point it would make it plainer if the Senator had suggested that the security taken by the bank, instead of being sent to the Travelers' Insurance Co., should be sent to Washington, the authorities at the Treasury here honoring the draft, thus making at that particular point a complete analysis of that transaction.

Mr. McCUMBER. Exactly the same. The Travelers' Insurance Co. would then sell either its bonds or its mortgages; and, in order to secure money at a cheap rate, the Travelers' Insurance Co. would probably guarantee those mortgages in the hands of the purchaser. That is what the Government, in effect, would do. Its guaranty, however, would be in the form of a long-term debenture.

I want to see whether or not this proposed bill will be an expensive affair. We start out with the Federal loan board, composed of four members, having a term of eight years, with a salary of $10,000 each. That is the initial cost. Then, this board is to have supervision over a bureau. The number of employees in that bureau is absolutely unlimited—no one knows how many there will be—but we may get some kind of an idea of the number that will be required when we take the statistics and show therefrom that there are estimated to be over $5,000,000,000 of farm loans in the United States. If this system is going to be workable at all, if it would be adopted all over the country, it would require enough clerical force to handle the business to take care of four or five billion dollars worth of mortgages. The force is unlimited.

Then, again, they are to appoint one registrar in each district. There are only 12 of them; but those are 12 more employees. We will suppose that they will probably be paid $5,000 a year each; so the cost for their salaries would be $60,000.

Then, we are to appoint as many land-bank appraisers as may be necessary. Let us stop and think of that. Remember, that under the provisions of the bill the land-bank appraiser must go out, examine, and pass judgment upon every piece of land involved. If this legislation is a success, you certainly would need as many as one land appraiser in each congressional district, would you not? You certainly would require three of them in my State, and it would keep them mighty busy traveling in order to cover the State: First, to examine one piece of land down in the southwest corner, and then to travel 400 miles to examine another piece of land in the northeastern corner of the State. So you can be certain that there will be needed at least 435 appraisers.

In addition to those 435 appraisers, you are also to have another number of assistant appraisers. All of their expenses must be paid out of this system; they will have to hire teams; they will have to hire automobiles; they will have to travel by rail in order to get out to this land and to examine it. By the time a piece of land has been examined for the purpose of passing judgment on it by that one appraiser of loans you will have enough expenses to make 1 or 2 per cent upon the amount of mortgage which the average farmer would be desirous of making.

You have land-bank appraisers to be paid by the banks. Then, the farm-loan board must employ attorneys, experts, assistants, and laborers, and again their number is absolutely unlimited. The probabilities are the compensation paid will be the usual amount paid for Government employees, because the very system itself is inaugurated, it seems to me, for the purpose of finding places for your political friends without going to the Civil Service Commission, and after you have found those fine places for them, then they will be covered under the civil-service rules by the order of the President.

Nor do we stop there. The bill then provides for five directors for each land bank. That would make, at least, 60 in number, and if they have a salary of $5,000 a year apiece, that would be $300,000 for their salaries.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that, on page 47, the bill provides that the loan committee shall examine the land and all three members must sign the report, and it also imposes the condition that after the mortgage comes in the Federal land bank shall send out one or more of the appraisers to examine the land.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; it has to be looked after carefully, doubly appraised, and so forth.

Now, again, these land banks are authorized to employ as many attorneys, experts, and assistants as are necessary, and to fix their compensation. Here, again, the number of employees is absolutely unlimited. There is not a Senator here who does not know that the Government generally requires about three men to do as much work as would be done by one man in any kind of private employment; in other words, it will cost about two or three times as much as it would if a private individual was operating his own bank.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, I think we will all agree that there ought not to be more attorneys or employees than are absolutely necessary to properly manage this system or any system which may be adopted. What limitations would the Senator from North Dakota suggest in that behalf? If there is likelihood of this provision being abused, what limitation would the Senator place upon it?

Mr. McCUMBER. I would not suggest any limitation; I am simply attempting to point out that it will require very expensive machinery to carry this bill into effect.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, the Senator from North Dakota realizes that as no one can anticipate how many of these different farm-loan associations may be formed, it would be next to impossible to say that either 1 or 2 or 10 or 20 would be sufficient. I realize the fact that if you get a venal board, or a board that is incompetent or does not pay any attention to the business, there might be some abuse along the line that the Senator indicates if there are not any checks imposed upon them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does not the Senator from Ohio also realize that whenever the Government attempts to operate any kind of business it employs a great many more persons to conduct that business than would be employed by a private individual conducting the same business?

Mr. POMERENE. Well, there is great force in that; and that would apply equally to the number of Senators who are in this Chamber. The business might be conducted with one-half the number of Senators; but we have a system, which prevails. I recognize the general truth of the statement that is made that public business is somewhat more expensive in certain lines and in certain departments than is private business, and that it is more expensive than it ought to be.

Mr. McCUMBER. Whatever these expenses may be, the Senator agrees with me that the expenses would be considerably in excess of what they would be to perform the same functions under private management.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President, I do not concede that. I say that it may so happen; but I am not conceding in advance that this board would be reckless or extravagant.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not saying it would be; but I say generally that would be so.

Mr. POMERENE. As a general proposition, I think it is true that it is more expensive to have a given amount of service rendered by a given department of the Government than it would be where the men at the head of the department are not handicapped by having forced upon them certain employees who may have no adaptability whatsoever for the work which they are trying to perform.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, I do not see that there is any difference between the opinion of the Senator and myself. We agree upon the fact that ordinarily it costs the Government more to do business than it would cost a private individual.

Mr. POMERENE. My thought was this——

Mr. McCUMBER. And if it costs more ordinarily, the chances are that it will cost more in the operation of this business.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from North Dakota is criticizing this particular bill because of a weakness which he discovers in it. I think anybody would concede that there is a possibility that there may be some difficulty along that line. For my own information, not only as a Senator but as a member of the committee, if the Senator from North Dakota has any suggestion to make which will reduce to a minimum the possibility of extravagance along this line, I should be very glad to hear it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have poorly expressed myself if——

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. One moment. I have poorly expressed myself if I have not made the Senator from Ohio understand that, if we use the present facilities of the Government through its banks, with officers already established and already paid by the banks, we shall save all of this expense, which must in the end either be paid by the farmer in greater interest or which must be paid by the taxpayer; and the farmer is one of the taxpayers. Now I yield to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

Mr. POMERENE. I simply want to suggest, if I may——

Mr. CLAPP. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. That that involves the other question of the wisdom or the unwisdom of combining this system of rural credits with the Federal banking system, and I think it is a pretty serious proposition as to whether or not the two should be combined, because they are so essentially different.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I rose before the Senator from North Dakota had completed his statement simply to ask him if my understanding is not correct that his objection on account of the expense, or, if I may use the word, the "extravagance" involved in the committee bill, would not be remedied automatically by entirely eliminating it; but before I could ask the question he had already answered it.

Mr. McCUMBER. The amendment which I shall offer as a substitute does away with all of the banks, their officers and appointees, and heavy expenses.

I have not yet gotten through with the question of expenses. Each loan association must have directors and other officers, and the salaries and expenses of the loan associations are to be paid out of the general funds of the association. Those expenses will have to be paid. I can imagine that if farmers in my State enter into a farm-loan association along about the month of January, they will not hold their meetings in the streets; they will require some place in which to hold their meetings. They will either have to hire halls and pay for them or else buildings will have to be erected for the purpose of housing their records and their officers and conducting their business. That must all be paid for by the borrower or else it must be paid for as a loss to the Government.

Again, let us stop and think of the size of the districts. If only 12 districts are provided for the United States, and the bank of each district, if it handles its proportionate share of farm mortgages, must handle about $500,000,000 worth of farm mortgages, provided there are between $5,000,000,000 and $6,000,000,000 of such mortgages in the United States. To do that character and volume of business there must be quite an army of employees.

Now, suppose a bank were to be located in the city of Minneapolis for a district running to the Pacific Ocean through the western section of the country. It would have to be a bank of some considerable magnitude, and it would require a building compatible with the importance of such an institution as that. I can not imagine the possibility of constructing such a bank building in any one of our great cities that would cost less than $500,000, and that would take, for the building alone, all of its capital stock. Suppose, however, they did not wish to erect a building. Very well, they would have to pay rent on the equivalent of a building that would cost about that much, and they would have to use so much of their capital invested in order to get the money to pay the rent.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has the Senator considered, or would he pursue the speculation into, the very large field it would open for appropriations for public buildings? There is quite a large field at present in that direction; and does the Senator think it ought to be enlarged?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not. If the Government owns all the stock, it must provide the building. We have had no argument at all along this line, and no explanation of this feature has been given; some one must furnish the bank a building; the Government must either construct a building or rent one, or else the bank must take its capital stock to build it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I understand from the Senator's argument that his objection is that the districts are too large to attend to this business?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes and no. The system is wrong. If you make the districts smaller, you add to the expense; if you leave them as they are, the bank will be so far away from the borrower doing business with the bank that it will be necessary to have a great class of middlemen between the farmer and the bank and a great amount of red-tapism that would disgust any farmer in the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course if the system is wrong it ought to fail; if it is right, it ought not to be defeated because it requires either large districts or large bank buildings. My recollection is that when the Federal reserve act was before the Senate the Senator then favored the Hitchcock plan, which provided for only four, or perhaps five, districts in the United States. The business, of course, connected with the commercial banks is infinitely more complex, more involved, and more extensive than the business required under a plain mortgage system, so that I do not quite understand how, in this instance, the provision for 12 districts makes each district too large, when it was thought by the Senator and others that under a provision for four or five districts in the Federal reserve act the district would not be too large.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not made any comment upon whether the districts are too large or too small. I insist that the system is wrong and you can not make it right by increasing or decreasing the number of banks.

Mr. POMERENE. Perhaps I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. One of the purposes of this bill is to bring the farmer who wants to borrow just as closely as possible to the individual who has the money to loan, and to cut out all unnecessary expenses that the farmer is now paying to get money through a somewhat complex system.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator understand that the farmer would have to go to the central bank in order to get his loan?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; the farmer has first got to deal with an agent in his own section—or, rather, the first thing he has to do is to organize a community of debtors.

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the first thing he has got to do. Then those debtors must appoint an agent; then that agent will operate through the land bank; the land bank will operate through the central board; and the central board will be the connecting link between the Treasury of the United States and the several banks, and also, to some extent, indirectly the connecting link between the loaner and the system.

Now, let us consider just for a moment whether or not the difference of 1 per cent will in all probability take care of all of this expense. There are expenses of buildings, of traveling, of an army of registrars, special land appraisers, attorneys, experts, assistants, land-bank directors, presidents, vice presidents, secretaries, land-bank officials, and of all the vast machinery which will have to be paid out of 1 per cent of the business.

The expenses of the Federal Reserve Board last year were $216,000; the salaries of its employees last year were $108,650; and the salaries of the examiners who examined the banks in the Federal Reserve System were $396,000. The expenses of the Federal reserve banks last year were $1,490,729, and the estimated expenses for the same banks for this year are $1,611,000. Remember that one of the heavy items of the expense in our banking system is the bank examiners. Under the system proposed by this bill there must be an immense number of appraisers who will have to travel over the country and examine the lands on which the mortgages are to be made.

I want to call attention to one or two of the statements made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] in his address the other day. He said:

> In Europe mortgages run for as long a term as 75 or 80 years. I think there are some amortization payments of only a quarter of 1 per cent a year, which would enable the borrower to pay out in something under a hundred years. It is in order to encourage the farmer not only to get his money at a low rate and to use it for productive purposes, but at some time to pay off his loan that this system is devised.

Mr. President, I may not know the farmers of this country very well, but any system that is devised to allow a farmer to buy a farm and pay off his mortgage in 70 or 80 years will not be taken advantage of by many farmers in this country.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I have no doubt the Senator means to be entirely fair about this matter, and I presume he knows perfectly well that under the pending bill a loan can not run for more than 36 years. What I said the other day applied to the European system; and the committee has discarded the idea of so long a term.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. I am inclined to think that, if you would take any farmer and show him a piece of land and tell him that if by working 36 years he could earn enough to pay for that piece of land, he would decline your offer.

Mr. HOLLIS. He is not obliged to do that if he does not want to do so.

Mr. McCUMBER. He would not want to buy a farm when it would require him 36 long years of toil—two-thirds of his working life—to pay for it.

Mr. HOLLIS. He is not obliged to borrow for 36 years. He can fix his own time after five years. But, of course, he would have to pay more each year if he wanted to pay out earlier.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am simply taking issue with the Senator by stating that, if this bill is devised to meet the demands of farmers who want even 36 years to pay for their loans, I do not think there are many farmers who would wish to take advantage of it. Most of the farmers that I know anything about, when they buy a piece of land, expect to pay for it in ten or a dozen years at least, as any merchant who goes into business expects ordinarily to have his stock clear in that many years.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, does the Senator understand that most merchants pay for their stock and for all the capital they use after the expiration of any period of years? Does not the Senator know that nearly all merchants are continually borrowing money to be used in their business as capital?

Mr. McCUMBER. I know that a great many are doing so, because doing business on a large scale it is cheaper to do business with other men's money than it is to furnish your own or to do it only in the limited way in which you would have to do it if you had to depend upon your own capital. A mercantile business grows; a farm does not increase in acreage. In a very few years the merchant is supposed to have the original value of his stock of goods clear.

Again, the Senator says:

> The Government under this bill will advance to a land bank money if it gets in temporary difficulty, just as it advances the money to commercial banks that get into difficulty by placing Government deposits in certain localities.

I had hoped, Mr. President, that we had outlived that system which has been adopted by the Treasury Department for a number of years to back up speculations in Wall Street and other places, and that we would not have to use it anywhere in the United States. The Senator undoubtedly has some suspicion about the success of this bank, and therefore he very cautiously provides that the Government may come to its rescue if it finds itself in straits. I should hope for a system that would be so sound, so certain, that it would not be necessary to have a provision in the bill which would provide for difficulties in which the Government would be called upon to help out.

Again, he says:

> The Government gets no dividends and no interest at all on the money that it employs for this purpose.

Mr. President, every dollar that the Government puts into this business it has to draw out of some one's pocket, and the chances are 10 to 1 that that some one is also paying interest upon money that he is borrowing; and thus you provide that you can tax certain of the people to furnish money for a private enterprise which you say can make money out of this 1 per cent. You tax me and you tax yourself to furnish the money to give to John Doe to operate a bank.

Mr. President, I am inclined to think that if the vote of the people of my States, all of them agricultural, could be had as to whether they would accept from the United States a gift of money for use with no interest, they would not have the cheek to do it; and yet you are providing in this bill that they shall furnish at least a portion of the money that will go into this enterprise without any charges whatever, and if the Government loses the people that furnish the money lose in the enterprise. If it is a good, paying enterprise, the private individuals who constitute the directors or those owning the stock will have the benefit of it. That is scarcely just to the people.

Again, the Senator says:

His—

That means the appraiser's—

services are paid for by the land banks, for he performs an official function, and he goes to every piece of land and examines it himself and passes upon it.

Suppose, now, that you were to send examiners to every farm in the United States that has a mortgage on it where the farmer desires to renew that mortgage. Have you stopped to contemplate what it would cost? Why, it is almost beyond computation. The expense necessarily would be enormous. Some one must pay that expense. If the Government pays it all, then the Government has to pay millions upon millions of dollars for these expenses. If the borrower pays them, it must add to his interest rates.

Again, the Senator says:

The Government exempts from the income-tax law and from all Federal, State, and local taxes the capital stock of the Federal land banks—not of the joint-stock land banks—and the mortgages and the bonds.

I have some doubts myself about this bill being so carefully drawn that it can make that provision constitutional. I doubt if under the real purposes, at least, of this bill—purposes that are not hidden in any way—the Government of the United States can prevent the State of North Dakota from levying a tax upon mortgages within its jurisdiction or upon bonds within its jurisdiction, other than the bonds of the Government itself; and in this instance they will not be Government bonds.

Mr. President, I have an amendment which I should like to offer at this time, or at least to have read at this time, and I can ask for a vote upon it later. If there be no objection, I should like to have it read at this time.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I think amendments are not in order at this time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, I appreciate that the Senator's position is correct.

Mr. HOLLIS. I wish to finish the reading of the bill for committee amendments first. Of course, the Senator can offer the amendment, but it would not be advisable to vote on it as late in the afternoon as this; so I will ask the Senator to present it at some other time.

Mr. McCUMBER. That will be entirely agreeable; but I wish to describe it just for a moment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds to discuss his own bill or amendment I should like to ask his opinion on this question; and I ask it purely for information, because I have been unable to reach a satisfactory conclusion myself:

Suppose that the system were in effect, 12 land banks had been established, and in the aggregate they had loaned, we will say, $1,200,000,000. The profit, or the difference between the rate of interest on the bonds and the rate of interest on the mortgages, would aggregate $10,200,000. What would be the expense of operating the system when it had reached the extent I have described?

I should like to know something about how much it would cost to do this work for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the 1 per cent would be sufficient to cover it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I can point out the pathway, at least, through which the Senator will be able to form some kind of a conjecture, and that is all that we can possibly do.

If the banks were doing a billion dollars' worth of business a year, and there were about $5,000,000,000 worth of mortgages, they would be doing a business that would cover at least one-fifth of all the mortgages in the United States during a year; and, assuming that those mortgages and renewals ran about five years—and they run from two to five, but give a five-year average—that would necessitate an examination of one-fifth of all the farms in the United States that have mortgages upon them. That would necessitate sending men from some part of the United States—we will suppose from one of the 12 central banks—to the land in question; and, as I stated, I can not conceive that it would be possible for four or five hundred men to do it. If you take 500 men—and probably you will need a thousand of them, in my opinion—if you take a thousand, and pay but $1,000 a year to each, there would be $1,000,000 that it would cost to cover that. I do not know how much it would cost; but I believe that if you carry out that appraisement idea and send men to appraise and visit and inspect the land on which the loan is to be made, pay their salaries and traveling expenses and all other expenses of the system, the spread of 1 per cent will not cover them.

Now, turning to my amendment:

Section 1 creates a bureau, to be known as the bureau of farm mortgages, in the Treasury Department. In that respect it is the same as the bill under contemplation.

Second, it makes an appropriation for advances until Government debentures are sold to cover the advances; that is all. If the Government would lose anything, it would lose the interest upon the money that it had advanced until it could sell the bonds that would cover the mortgages.

Third, the proceeds of the debentures are used for the purchase of other mortgages. A million dollars would certainly be all that it would be necessary for the Government ever to advance before it sold its debentures, and probably $100,000 would be sufficient.

Section 4 provides that every national bank or State bank coming under the provisions of the act is a governmental agency.

Section 6 provides that the farmer can borrow for any purpose. He is not limited. Under the provisions of this bill he can only borrow for the purpose of buying a farm, paying up an indebtedness on a farm or purchasing farm implements. Now, as long as the security is not above 50 per cent of the value of the land, why not allow the farmer to borrow the money for whatever purpose he sees fit to use it? It is the security that you must look to in every instance. If he happened to run in debt to the doctor because of some serious operation on his wife or a member of his family, why not allow him to borrow the money to pay for that, if he saw fit to do it? Why limit it to these few purposes? Again, suppose a farmer borrows for the purpose of buying farm machinery and other things of that kind, and he fails to do so, what are you going to do about it? The chances are, I think, that you would not attempt to enforce the mortgage and foreclose it as long as he kept up his interest. So, under the provisions of the bill, that is left in reality to the honor and integrity of the man borrowing.

Again, under the provisions of my bill the mortgage is to run for 10 years, with the privilege of paying it in 5 years; but I really believe it would be safe if it provided that it might be paid on any interest-paying date after three years. I believe there would be enough of a demand to keep mortgages coming in all the time, and due at different times, so that the farmer could pay if off whenever he saw fit.

May I ask the Senator a question here, as I am not certain about one feature of the bill under consideration?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does it provide for annual or semiannual interest?

Mr. HOLLIS. Semiannual interest.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us apply that to all of the Northwestern States. I think that is a provision, above all, that should not be in the bill, and my reason for that statement is this:

In every farming community where they have only one crop in a season the farmer pays the interest on his mortgages at the time he has his crop ready for market. If a farmer in my State should have to pay interest on a mortgage in June, he either would have had to keep that interest idle from the fall, or else he would have to pay interest on that interest until the next fall; and in the end, with your semiannual interest and your penalty of 8 per cent, which I think you have provided, you will have the farmer paying as much as or more than he would if he got the money from some loaning agency.

Under the provisions of my bill the mortgage can not carry a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. That mortgage will be accompanied by an abstract, an application, an appraisement of neighbors, and an appraisement by the banker himself; and in addition to this, to make it doubly secure, it will be the duty of the bank examiner, who generally goes to the banks two or three times a year, to report upon it.

In an agricultural community, in order to pass upon bank paper, our present bank examiner must know the value of the lands in that section. Therefore, under this system the Government would require him, in addition to his usual duties, to report upon the general value of lands in the vicinity of the banks which he examines, so the Government would have the assessment value, all of the facts that would be contained in the application verified by the farmer and by two of his neighbors; it would have the estimate and the report made by the banker himself, who would be held responsible if he did not act in good faith in giving the values; and under this system it would be impossible to impose upon the Government unless all of these officers were negligent in their duty.

The banker would be entitled to charge 1 per cent. If a farmer was borrowing $500, he would pay $5 to the banker for drawing his mortgage, examining his abstract, and conducting the business for him. If the mortgage was for $1,000, he would receive $10. That is probably the same amount that he would pay an attorney for doing the same kind of business.

Again, section 7 provides that when the Government receives a million dollars of mortgages it shall issue bonds or debentures, payable in 20 years, bearing 4 per cent interest, payable annually—not semiannually—so that the payments may be made at the same time that the farmer pays his interest; and the debentures that would be used in the Northern States would undoubtedly be so dated, as a rule, that they would mature in the fall of the year. Then these debentures would be sold for their face value. I know there was some criticism in the other Chamber upon that provision because it did not allow the Government to get a bonus if it could get it; but the object of this bill is to help out the small investor. It is not for profit. It is not to furnish the big banks with a means of loaning their surplus. It is simply to bring the investor—the widow, the trust estate—to the farmer, where the one can loan a small amount of money to the other. The debentures can not be for more than $500 nor less than $100; and the bill provides that the Government shall give preference in the sale of the debentures to the small investor, and if they are all taken up they will go into the hands of those people who must depend on some one else to keep their little capital invested.

Section 7 provides that the commissioner has the right of a mortgage under the laws of the State wherein the land is situated.

Section 9 provides for the payment of taxes, and for foreclosure of mortgage, or sale in lieu of foreclosure. That authorizes the commissioner to foreclose under the laws of the State wherein the land is situated; or, if he sees fit, and can secure the amount due, he may sell the mortgage instead of foreclosing it.

Section 10 provides that the bonds may be purchased and sold by Federal reserve banks under the provisions of sections 13 and 14 of the Federal reserve act. This hitches up the whole system to the present banking system of the United States, and I think would answer any objection as to its constitutionality.

Section 12 provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make all needful rules for carrying into effect the provisions of the act.

Now, just a word on why this system which is proposed for the United States—a system that has followed European customs—will not be applicable in America.

First, we must remember that farmers do not live in communities in the United States. In Europe they do. In Europe, if you take any one of those communities, you will find that through marriages and intermarriages the people in that community are about all related to each other. They are uncles and cousins and brothers and sisters and aunts, and brothers-in-law, and so forth, and each one knows all about the business of the other and knows his responsibility; and the entire community undoubtedly, where they have to buy land at such enormous prices that it takes them a lifetime to pay for it, are willing to act together and to protect the interest that belongs to the entire relationship in that community. That is not the nature or condition of the American farmer. He lives by himself. In our part of the country he lives on quite a good-sized farm, often several miles from his nearest neighbor. He does his business in his own way, and scarcely knows his neighbor, except when he talks to him over the telephone. Those conditions require entirely different kinds of systems in order that they may be a success.

Why, from the arguments that have been made here one would think that the farmers of the United States were properly described in these "Squash Center" articles in the comic supplements. As a matter of fact, the farmers of America are not sitting around a grocery store on barrels and discussing things. They are at their own homes, reading their papers, reading their magazines, and attending to their own business.

Again, the farmer wishes to conduct all his business independently of his neighbors. The matter of the cooperative creameries, and so forth, has been mentioned here. A creamery is part of the farmer's business, and he understands the general working of it. It is right at his very door. He may be willing to go in with a number of other farmers and take chances on that creamery. I think in a great many instances in my State, where they have proven a failure, you could not induce him to go into one of those schemes again. He prefers, ordinarily, to let some one else run the creamery, and he will sell him his cream and his milk. Well, then, if he even sometimes suspicions those institutions and does not like to incur responsibilities for their conduct, what hope have you to get him to enter into an agreement to take care of all the mortgages in the State of North Dakota and become a party to all of the liabilities connected with such an extensive and complex system the workings of which he can not hope to fully understand? If he is a good, sensible farmer, I do not think he would like to take that chance. He is averse to any liability other than his own.

Again, lands in the old country are held for life, and they pass from heir to heir. Now, as a matter of fact, in our part of the country a farmer will sell his farm about as readily as he will sell a horse or a colt or a steer. Whenever he thinks he can promote his welfare by doing so he will sell it, and he does not want it tied up by any 36-year mortgage, nor does he want it tied up in a system of liability for all of the debts, not only of his neighborhood but throughout his State.

As a rule, the farmers of the Northwest are opposed to long-term mortgages. The shorter the farmer can have the term of his mortgage the better it suits him. He would prefer borrowing from one year to the other; and if he is sensible he knows he would be better off to pay 7 per cent, with a right to pay any part of it in one year, and to pay his interest annually, than he would to tie it up for a number of years at 6 per cent and pay his interest semiannually. So I do not think that system would appeal to him.

Again, when a farmer under this bill wants a loan he has first to submit the question to all this community of debtors and they are to pass judgment on it. Then he puts the matter in the hands of the agent. He then must deal with a bank that may be a thousand miles from where he is located. Then the bank must send out an appraiser and examine that land after the application has been received. Do you know of any farmer in North Dakota, or South Dakota, or Iowa, or Minnesota who would go to that trouble to secure a loan when he can go to his bank and get money about as cheaply as he would get it under this provision, and get it the very day he wishes it, because, as I have said, the bank will generally advance money for its customers?

Again, there would be no conflict with the local banks. Under the provision which I have in my substitute there are banks enough in the country to do all the business, to take care of all the farm loans. All that a farmer is interested in is that he shall get his interest at the lowest possible rate, and through the system of these banks without any of these overhead expenses you can bring the farmer of the West into communication with the money loaner of the East.

The bill under consideration, Mr. President, assumes that it will not invite consideration from good business men. It assumes that the good business men will not go into the business; and, therefore, in order to force the system upon the Government, whether there is a demand for it or not, it provides for the creation of this board, and the board must then create these banks, without first knowing whether there will be use for them, without knowing whether they will be a success or not. Inasmuch as it assumes, as stated by one of the authors of the bill, that no private person would enter into it in the first instance, it compels the Government to take every dollar of the stock issued by that bank. Then if it fails because no one wishes to go into the business, you have a bank building that may have been built at an expense of $500,000 or you have entered into a 10 or 15 year lease for $20,000 or $30,000 a year for a great bank, and you have no business for it. But it is the Government's money; and, of course, it does not make so much difference. I admit frankly that this substitute is somewhat paternalistic; but you must either cross over the paternalistic line or else you will not get the kind of rural-credits bill that will suit the farmers in the entire United States, and without it, in my candid judgment, you will not secure a bill that will operate successfully. I used to be a little more afraid of the paternalistic idea than I am now. I am getting rather used to it here during the time I have been in Congress. When I find that the Government is building railroads over in Alaska for three or four thousand white people in the whole section, when I find that it is guaranteeing the bonds of a railway built in the Philippine Islands, when I find thousands of other instances where the Government is financing different institutions, I can see no serious objection to its becoming the guarantor of paper that is backed by property twice the value of the paper.

Now, under the proposed system the Government will risk the loss of its entire capital. Under my system it can not lose a cent. Why? Because land as capital can not blow away. You can not lose that capital. That land has a definite and stated value. Business may be valuable or it may not; but the land, if it is productive land, will always have a value; and what is more important, as population grows, and as acres can not grow, in the United States the acres will become more and more valuable. Therefore there is no chance of loss on the part of the Government, and there can be no possibility that this substitute will not operate successfully.

It will give the farmer 4½ per cent money. It will give the money lender of the East who has but a few dollars to lend 4 per cent interest, and without being taxed upon the bonds held by the individual.

Mr. President, as I have stated before, the two parties agreed that they would give the farmers relief in a rural-credits bill. All right; make that promise good, but give them real relief. They did not ask that you should put upon the statute books something which you call a rural-credits bill, which they can not use and will not use, and which, in my opinion, will not be workable.

I furnish in this amendment the opportunity to give the farmers a rural-credits bill that will reduce all farm mortgages to 4½ per cent interest. You can vote it in and give the real relief demanded or you can vote it down and give a bill which will not meet the agricultural demands of the country.

NOMINATION OF JOHN RANDOLPH THORNTON.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the appointment of former Senator Thornton, made by the President to-day, be laid before the Senate by the Vice President at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and lays before the Senate the following appointment.

The Secretary read as follows:

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 26, 1916.

To the Senate of the United States:

I nominate John Randolph Thornton, of Louisiana, for appointment as civilian member of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification vice Francis M. Cockrell, deceased.

WOODROW WILSON.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask unanimous consent that the appointment be considered as in executive session, and that the nomination be confirmed without reference to a committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In open session. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the request made by the Senator from Louisiana is a very unusual one but this is a very unusual man. He served his country faithfully in the Senate and he made a lasting impression upon all his associates. As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to give consent to the immediate consideration of this nomination.

Mr. RANSDELL. I thank the Senator for his consent, but I wish to say that it is not without precedent.

On March 3, 1911, President Taft sent to the Senate the nomination of former Senator William Warner, of Missouri, to be civilian member of the Board of Ordnance. On motion by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], with the Senate in open session, but proceeding as in executive session, the nomination was confirmed without reference to a committee.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am well aware of the instance cited by the Senator from Louisiana, but it is nevertheless an unusual request. However, the high character and excellent attainments of the distinguished former Senator from Louisiana amply justify this compliment at the hands of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominee is confirmed. The President will be notified.

RURAL CREDITS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to provide for the investment of postal savings deposits, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the address of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In the main it is the same address that he made a week or so ago. I wish it were as easy and as simple as the Senator doubtless thinks it is. I wish that every farmer in the country might get his land appraised by two of his neighbors and go to the nearest bank and get half its appraised value as a loan. I wish that could be done and be safe. But it would load the Government of the United States with billions and billions of indebtedness. I fear that the Government would never be ready to foreclose on a farmer who was in default. The plan suggested is simple. It has been worked out by the Senator from North Dakota with great care. Those who believe that the Government should borrow four or five or ten million dollars and reloan it to the farmers and take the risk that the farmer would not pay up as he might to a private bank will doubtless vote for it. I do not think that a majority of the Senate will approve a measure of that kind.

Before I finish what I have to say now I wish to state that the committee does not admit that the plan proposed in the committee bill is either cumbersome or complex. It considers that, in view of the vastness of the subject and of the number of loans to be treated, the system is very simple and very inexpensive.

Mr. President, unless some one is prepared to speak, I would like to continue the reading of the bill for action on committee amendments until a quarter to six, and then have a short executive session.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are very few Senators here, and I am quite sure those who are away did not expect any further business to be transacted to-night after the address of the Senator from North Dakota. If we proceed with the amendments, there might be some agreed to to which Senators would object. I do not want to suggest the absence of a quorum, because it is very doubtful if we could get one at this time of the evening.

Mr. HOLLIS. Very well. I will state to the Senator and to those Members who are present that if any committee amendment had been adopted in the absence of those who wished to be heard on it, I would not object to having it reconsidered so that every one would have a fair chance. However, in view of the Senator's suggestion I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 7 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 27, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

Quicken, we beseech Thee, all that is truest, noblest, best in us, that the soul, responsive to the heavenly vision, may spring into new life and bear fruits abundantly of the spirit, that we may glorify Thee and be worthy of Thy care and protection. After the manner of the Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CAPSTICK rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New Jersey rise?

Mr. CAPSTICK. To ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the same request, to extend my remarks on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BEAKES rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. BEAKES. I rise to make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. MANN. Is this a filibuster on that side?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. About what?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman if it is important that these remarks be made at this time?

Mr. RAKER. I will answer the gentleman's question. It seems to me that in consideration of the fact that the immigration bill passed the House with so many votes, and considering the sentiment of the country and of the West, as expressed in messages received from men of all parties, it is worth while to show to our President that the sentiment of the country today is in favor of this immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. I object.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] objects.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the restriction of immigration by inserting an article published in the Yreka Journal, edited by W. Earl Smith.

Mr. MANN. Does that identify the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY—REVISION OF PRINTING LAWS.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 8664, with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8664, with Mr. SISSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8664) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 50. Par. 1. The Vice President and each Senator shall be entitled to order of the superintendent of public documents such Government publications, for free public distribution, as are authorized by this section to the value of not to exceed $2,200 annually; and each Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner shall be entitled to likewise order Government publications, for free public distribution, as authorized by this section to the value of not to exceed $1,800 annually: Provided, That on the 4th day of March of 1916, and of each succeeding year, the superintendent of public documents shall credit the valuation account of each person entitled thereto with the annual amount as herein authorized; but no such valuation accounts or credits shall be available or used for any other publication, purpose, or person than as authorized by this section, and they shall not be subject to transfer or assignment from one person to another or in anywise held to be a personal asset of the individual in whose name such accounts or credits may be recorded: Provided further, That the superintendent of public documents shall distribute on the order of the Secretary and the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, and the Clerk, the Sergeant at Arms, and the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, not to exceed 10 copies each of any publication printed for congressional valuation distribution: Provided further, That in event of a vacancy in any position designated in this act as entitled to a valuation account or quota of Government publications, the valuation amount or documents remaining to the credit of the person who held such position shall go to the credit of his successor, as provided for herein: Provided further, That said superintendent shall not supply publications on any valuation account in excess of the amount lawfully credited to the person having such an account with him; nor shall said superintendent sell, charge to any valuation account, or otherwise dispose of any publication in his charge, except as authorized by law, at less than the price fixed therefor by the Public Printer, which price shall be sufficient to cover the cost of paper, printing from plates, and binding.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 57, line 7, after the word "that," strike out down to and including the word "shall," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The superintendent of public documents shall, on the 1st day of July, 1916, credit the Vice President and each Senator with Government publications, as provided in this section, to the amount not to exceed $1,470, and shall likewise credit each Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner with such publications to the amount not to exceed $1,200, and said superintendent shall, on the 4th day of March of each succeeding year."

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, we would like to know where that amendment comes in. In the confusion we could not hear.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is offered to line 7, page 57.

Mr. MANN. May we have the amendment reported again, Mr. Chairman, so that we can hear it?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment. The committee will be in order. This is an important amendment, and the Members of the House are all personally interested in this bill, because it will affect all of them if it becomes a law. The Chair will ask the committee to be in order and listen to the reading of this amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has fixed the date as July 1 next.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is absolutely certain that this bill will not become a law by the 1st of July.

Mr. BARNHART. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the committee had that under advisement this morning. Evidently it will have to be changed in conference, in any event, but we fixed that time so as to have a starting point.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be practicable to arrange it so that these sections shall not take effect until a certain time in the future, the existing law to remain until that time?

Mr. BARNHART. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I think we will get it all mixed up in this way.

Mr. BARNHART. Not necessarily so.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps not.

Mr. BARNHART. Sometimes the Senate does things with surprising rapidity, and we wanted to fix it so that the membership of the House, in the coming campaign, would have as much benefit as they could under the law without mixing the matter up, so we fixed it at that time. If the gentleman thinks it better, we can fix it at some future date. Evidently it will have to be changed, whatever is done now.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that we change these sections of the bill to take effect on the 4th of next March. Then everyone would have notice of its being enacted into law.

Mr. BARNHART. We talked that over in the previous consideration of the bill, and at that time we fixed it at the 1st of January. I do not recall now just what the suggestion was as to that, or the reason why we did not fix it at the 4th of March, but there was some reason that I do not recall now. I do not know that there will be any objection to fixing it at the 4th of next March, except that if the bill should pass at an earlier date than that, the Members ought to have the advantage of the allotment of the law, which we believe is vastly superior to the existing law and of greater benefit to the people in their districts.

Mr. MANN. I think there is a good deal of doubt on the part of the membership whether this provision is of any special advantage to them personally. I am willing to try it.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman speaks of this allotment, and of the Members having the benefit of it in the approaching campaign. Is it not a little unfortunate to give out the impression that we are appropriating money for these documents to help us in our campaign? I thought these documents were to be used for the benefit of the public, our constituents, and not ourselves.

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly I had nothing in my mind except the benefit to the public.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman used the language, and I thought it was unfortunate.

Mr. BARNHART. I think the gentleman from Tennessee is fully aware of the fact that I have taken the position all the time that these public documents belong to the people of the districts and not to the Members of the House.

Mr. SIMS. But the gentleman did use the language I am speaking of, that he thought Members ought to have it for the benefit of their approaching campaigns, and I was satisfied the gentleman did not mean to leave that kind of an impression.

Mr. BARNHART. I did not mean that. Some Members hold the documents to use them in their campaigns, and it is their privilege to do so.

Mr. SIMS. But the gentleman's remark was that they were entitled to the benefit of it, and that he wanted them to have it.

Mr. BARNHART. What I had in mind was the benefit to the public resulting from a better distribution.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARNHART. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I would inquire of the gentleman whether or not the amendment will reduce the quantity of documents to each Member?

Mr. BARNHART. Not in the least. The purpose of the amendment is to protect the membership of the House fully.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. You are reducing the value of the documents allotted.

Mr. BARNHART. Not at all. This is only for two-thirds of a year.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman's statement partly explains what I wanted to know. If I understand the bill correctly, the allotment of each Member for a full year is $1,800?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And this is simply to pro rate it for the remaining part of the year?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; that is all. It fully protects a Member in his present allotment and in the new one also.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment, if the gentleman from Indiana has concluded what he wished to say.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I think the House ought to consider this section pretty seriously before it adopts any part of it. I think one of the most unfortunate things about the whole section is this division by valuation in money to each Congressman. It can not help but have the effect of producing the impression upon the public mind that in some way or other this is a personal privilege to the Members of Congress. The public will get the impression, in spite of any explanation you can make, that this is just as much a personal perquisite as your mileage or your stationery allowance. In my judgment, you will have just exactly the same trouble in explaining what you did with this $1,800 worth of books as you have in explaining these other alleged privileges that are constantly being criticized. As a matter of fact, public documents are issued for the public and not for the Members of Congress. They do not belong to the Member. They are given to him by allotment, if the allotment feature is followed at all, simply as a convenient method for getting them out into general distribution. The Member, as such, has no claim on them. It is possible that an evil has grown up in the past, fostered by the fact that a man had a certain definite number of documents to his credit.

It is considered that this is in some way a Member's personal asset. That charge has been made often, and is being repeated, and I do not know but it has been repeated by the chairman of this committee, that in some way or other these public documents have been treated as private assets of Members of Congress.

Mr. RAKER. Has there been any complaint that Members have sent out too many documents to their constituents, and is it the purpose of the bill to prevent the public from getting information that is furnished through these various publications?

Mr. BORLAND. That is the point that brings up the whole inquiry. Of course, if the volumes are valuable to the public, there ought not to be a limitation placed on it.

Mr. RAKER. Are you going to foreclose a man because his constituents want to be informed?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly not. In my own district they are interested in a vast number of subjects. In the district I represent, a commercial city of the West, there are business men interested in every branch of governmental activity, and a good many activities not carried on in our neighborhood. They are interested in irrigation; one of the biggest irrigators of Colorado is a banker in Kansas City. They are interested in the Geological Survey; they are interested in the underground watercourses of the Western States; they are interested in the timber letting; they are interested in the Indian allotment; they are interested in oil and gas; and they are interested in the coal strata. I have never found a single, solitary subject, not even the Coast and Geodetic Survey, but there were not some business men in my district who were interested in it. I do not know that I would be limiting myself to $1,800; but if I could, I see no reason why I should limit the people who live in my district.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Not just now. There is now a limited allotment of documents to my credit. I can feel free to say to a man who writes me for documents that I do not have, that my allotment of that book, which was only for the purpose of preliminary distribution, has been exhausted, but he can write to the Public Printer and buy at cost of printing and binding. I feel free to tell him that. But suppose I told him that, when, as a matter of fact, I had an undrawn allowance of $1,500 or $1,800 to my credit at the Printing Office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. I might have an undrawn allotment of $1,000 or more to my credit under this section. Some man might write me for this book on International Law if that were a document issued—I think it rates at $10 or $12—and I might not want to send it to him, I might not want to use $10 on that particular constituent—it might be some student or some casual visitor in my district who chanced to write me rather than some one else, or it might be a curiosity seeker or an agitator. I would write him back a polite letter of refusal. I would say that the document was not available, but if he would leave his address and name with me I would be glad to send it to him if I could in the future. He would find out afterwards that I had $1,000 to my credit at the Government Printing Office. He looks at my allotment and says "BORLAND had $1,000 to his credit," and he would immediately conclude that either I was playing favorites in the distribution of the documents, doing it for political purposes solely, or I had some unscrupulous way of disposing of them, and he would have a basis for that kind of argument. Suppose there was a demand for a certain class of book fostered by newspaper and magazine articles. Hundreds of people will write you about some work on the care of babies or a book on birds, hundreds write for the same book, practically at the same time from the same neighborhood. How much of your allotment are you going to give them? To-day you are free to say "go to the Public Printer and buy them." But suppose they say "Why, BORLAND has $1,800 worth of books to his credit with the Government Printer. Why does he not send us these books?" They would be sending to the Public Printer to get a certified statement of how much there was to my credit. Not long ago a man running against me in my district wrote to the Treasury to find out whether I had drawn my mileage for several years, and he wanted a certified copy. I told the Treasurer to give it to him if it could be given under the rules of the Government. Some man will want a certified copy of the credit that you have at the Government Printer's. The whole thing is vicious. I would very much prefer that all the allotments would be taken away from Members of Congress and make every constituent buy the book at the cost of printing and binding. [Applause.]

There is not a particle of reason why that could not be done. That is the custom in most civilized countries. This thing of having allotment to Members of Congress is difficult to handle, and if you put it on a money basis and allow a man $1,800 worth of books, I do not say that you will find some man who will not draw the $1,800 and distribute them. I will assume that you will be charged with that sort of a condition and would have to explain it. You will not only be called on to explain but perhaps explain also corroborating facts that you are guilty of that thing. Take a district where there is a large demand for a book, a commercial city, and a Member will not be able to keep within the $1,800 limit. They may be districts purely agricultural where the inquiries are limited to a certain class and where they are divided up, and the Member might keep within the $1,800 limit, but if there is a diversified demand and everybody understands that you are entitled to $1,800 worth, the Member never will be able to explain when he can not furnish the book.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Why not allow the Department of Agriculture to distribute the documents instead of the Members?

Mr. BORLAND. I would be willing to agree to that. I would be willing to strike out the whole section. I never would undertake to explain to a constituent of mine that he was not one of my constituents that was entitled to a free book out of my valuation.

Mr. BARNHART. What does the gentleman do now?

Mr. BORLAND. As it is now, it is first come first served. Every man would assume that I had $1,800 worth of books to give away, and I would never be able to convince anyone that that seemingly princely fortune had already been sent out.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, almost every argument the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has advanced against this section can be advanced against the present method of distribution of public documents. There is nothing hidden or concealed as to the purpose of the section proposed here. The law at present provides that so many copies of each public document shall be allotted to each Senator and Representative. The number is necessarily limited because it covers the whole field of Government publications. The fact is that fully one-half or two-thirds of the public documents issued to-day are of no value to the people of Massachusetts, say, to the people of Kentucky or to those of Illinois or South Carolina, because they treat of subjects in which the people of those various States are not particularly interested or about which they do not desire to receive information. In its last analysis this section intends to give to each congressional district, to each State, to the Members of the House and the Senate for their districts and for their States, such documents as suit the demands of the particular locality.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. COX. How much is each Member supposed now to get under the present system, in value?

Mr. FINLEY. I believe it is nearly $1,600. So, Mr. Chairman, I say there is no necessity in Georgia for information respecting deep-water borings, to ascertain the condition of the earth a thousand or five hundred feet down into the bowels of the earth, respecting minerals or oil or the flow of water underground, and so forth. Yet I have hundreds of those documents allotted to me. I have no use in the world for them. The people of South Carolina do not need them. Under this system if a man wishes his entire allotment in Horse Books or Cattle Books or Agricultural Yearbooks or in any other publication or publications that are public documents he can have it, and he can get it to the amount of the number that he orders. There is nothing in the argument of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] so far as the distribution goes. There is every reason in the world to correct the present system, which is faulty in every respect and does not meet the demand of the public generally.

As to whether the gentleman would be charged with favoritism for not giving to this man something that he gave to another, that charge can be made with a great deal more force and effect under the present system. Some one mentioned maps. Suppose the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] were to send out a map to some prominent man. If he should do that without a special request, he would do more than I would. I send out those maps to schools, every one of them, where they can be used and where they are needed, and no prominent man or other person in my district gets a map unless he makes a special application for it. This provision is a wise one, and it is a necessary one. It is one that will serve the House and the Senate and give to the people of the various States and districts what they ought to have, publications that will be of interest, that will be of benefit to the various States and to the various congressional districts. The allotment of documents will be made on a valuation basis. The documents belong to the people of the States and districts, and this seeks to distribute the same in this way.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose this amendment. It is apparent, to my mind, that this is a very dangerous provision to adopt. Here is the truth about this thing as I see it. For instance, take it in the district that I have the honor to represent. I have one very large city of over 200,000 inhabitants and four counties that are purely agricultural. There is a great deal of criticism of Members of Congress indulged in by people who do not understand the exact situation. There is a great deal of misunderstanding in the country about what a Congressman gets in the way of pay and perquisites. For instance, you let some blatherskite, some demogogue run against you, and he gets up and charges that you have $125 allotment for stationery, that you get 20 cents a mile for mileage, that you get this, that, and the other.

From the day I came to Congress up to the present time never has my stationery allowance met more than one-half of the actual demand upon the stationery room, and never has there been a surplus penny left from mileage after I have paid the mileage of myself and family to this city. Yet they think that is extra pay; and now you are proposing to hang a millstone around the neck of every man on the floor of this House by having it said that you get $1,800 a year for public documents, and what is the result? Take the subject of maps. We have 31 maps allotted to us. They come to us through the Secretary of the Interior, and I understand the actual cost of those maps is $2.25 each. I do as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] does, distribute them to my schools, first, to the schools in the country districts, and I have, in my five years and a half service, with six allotments of these maps, not yet gotten around to all of my country schools. The minute you put this $1,800 allotment to my credit I can not say to those people, "I can not furnish you with a $2.25 map," but I have got to go and simply take up my entire allotment in United States maps at $2.25 each. Let us take the Diseases of the Horse; the Diseases of Cattle. They are the most expensive public documents that I know anything about. Every man wants to know how to doctor a sick cow or a colicky horse, and he wants one of these books in his house. This thing of the distribution of public documents spreads like the smallpox. If John Jones sees on Sam Smith's mantelpiece Diseases of the Horse, he says, "Where did you get it?" "Oh, I got it from my friend HOWARD. You write to him," and he writes.

The first thing you know you are overwhelmed here with requests for Diseases of the Horse, and your $1,800 is gone, and your opponent next year will say, "Is he not a pretty Congressman? He could not even get a Horse Book."

Mr. BORLAND. Suppose you had sent a Horse Book to John Smith, and were unable to send one to John Brown, would not Brown feel he was not in the class with Smith?

Mr. HOWARD. It would be a fare-you-well for Brown. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman do about it now?

Mr. HOWARD. Here is the way I do. I do not like to talk about myself, but I have developed into one of the best traders on the floor of this House. This thing adjusts itself now. The gentleman has talked about useless documents. I get a lot of them. What do I do? I study the geography of my country, and I go to some good smiling Republican or Democrat and I say, "I have a lot of documents here that you need, but I am hard pressed for Horse Books and Cattle Books. Let you and me strike a mutually beneficial trade." The trade is struck. He gets what he wants and I get what I want.

Now, gentlemen, you are mistaken about this thing. I think $1,800 is a pretty liberal allowance for books, but I do not want to be put in a position to be criticized for getting something I do not get. [Laughter.] That is what will happen to every one of you.

Now, gentlemen, this proposition is dangerous. You hear this mileage business here every year. The newspapers are full of it. They discuss it. Now, instead of having two propositions with which to go before the country and criticize the Members of the House and Members of the Senate, you are adding another vicious proposition about which we can be criticized, and I for one do not propose to support it. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am in accord with what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] have said in regard to this matter. I think it would be unfortunate to have an amendment of this kind upon this bill for many reasons. I can only recapitulate in substance what the gentlemen have said, but it seems to me that this provision of the bill will not bring about good results. If the people of the country desire publications, desire documents that have been prepared by the best talent in this country, and the Government has made provisions for them, the men of the Congress ought to be able to send them out in such quantities as they are able to procure; and there is no loss of material. There is no duplication, and there is not this proposition hanging over your head that there is $1,800 for the Senate and $1,500 for the Members of the House, and that they should have this as a perquisite, to distribute as they please. At the present time first come first served. There are many valuable documents that we would like to send out, and if this becomes a law you can not make the people believe but that you are showing favoritism to one as against the other, and that many will be applied for, and your whole stock will be exhausted before you can get out the necessary information that you ought to get out.

This is not a matter of the individuality of the Congressman and for his benefit. It is not his property. It is intended that it should not be for political purposes. It is intended to give the people of this country the information which the Government has collected, and they are entitled to it. Send it out where you please and when you please, and certainly there should be no restriction. The provisions of the bill upon their face show that it can not have the effect the committee intended it should have. It says that you can not transfer this assignment to anyone else. Now, let me ask the committee just one question. Suppose I find I have exhausted my entire supply of public documents. I could go to some of my friends from New Jersey and say, "Here are 5,000 names that I can not supply this document to, and as a courtesy to the people of California, not to me, but as a Representative of this Congress and of this country, send these documents out to these people." Is there any inhibition against it? Would you say it could not be done? Would it be violating the law, if there were 5,000 people desiring and seeking information, if a Member from New Jersey should send to California this information if he wanted to do so, when as a matter of fact mine have been restricted and limited and prohibited by virtue of the amount fixed at $1,800 or $1,500, as the bill may provide? The present adjustment is very, very good, indeed. Exchanges can be made and are made all the time. People are writing and asking for these maps, these books, horse books and cattle books, and other documents, that furnish really valuable information to the people who like to learn.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more, and then I will be through on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. There are many people that have not had the advantage of the schooling that they would like to have. They are in the shops, they are in the stores, they are on the farms or in the mills, and I find requests from thousands of people for information and bulletins and speeches upon subjects that would help them along in their business. It makes them better citizens. It puts the country in better shape. It leaves the Members of the House free and clear to distribute this literature to those who desire it, those who ask for it, those to whom it would do the most good.

I feel as though it is a mistake to say that you have $1,800 credited to your account and that you can send it out in the form of documents until that $1,800 is gone. This is what will occur: There are a dozen books; I have been asked a dozen times for books on immigration; how much would they cost? How much would Moore's Digest cost, and books of that character? Eight or ten would exhaust your supply. The way to do would be to send out all you can, and then you would find that other people would exchange with you, and you would get results, and good results. If they are exhausted, as my distinguished friend the chairman of the committee says, if the public wants them, if there is a sufficient demand for the Horse Book and the Cattle Book—which there is—they could be procured by exchange. I suppose I have 500 applications on file for the Horse Book and the Cattle Book from people who want them and will use them, and make good use of them. It is the same way with the report and hearings of the Industrial Relations Commission. There are more requests for those documents than for any other, and it would exhaust the entire supply of a man's allotment here—that one publication itself. This publication should be republished, so that the people who want it might have the opportunity to obtain it.

But the most serious feature of this is that provision that you have $1,800; that it is yours; that you will dispose of it. If you do not use it, of course some one will say something about it. That does not make any difference; but there is no necessity of passing legislation to put Congress—to put the Members of the House—in an unhappy position by enabling people to say, "I don't suppose he will send me that; he is drawing it for his own use, or he wants to supply his own library and those of his special friends." That is how the present provision of this bill will work as it is in its present form. The whole section should be stricken out.

Mr. BARNHART. Do not look in that way.

Mr. RAKER. I could not look in any other way than to the chairman of this committee, whom we all love and admire; and even then, with all those good qualities that he has, I find sometimes that he makes a mistake, and in this particular instance this dear and beloved chairman of ours has made a mistake.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BORLAND. There is an amendment pending before the House, offered by the committee, to perfect the paragraph. Is there not?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Any amendment offered now would have to be to perfect that amendment?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the pending amendment disposed of, and that will clear the way for any other amendments to follow. That is simply to fix the date different from what it is in the bill.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it not in order to offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the committee at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it is.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] would not object to getting this amendment out of the way, I think?

Mr. HOWARD. It is the shortest route; that is all.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, this committee amendment goes to the perfecting of the text in the original paragraph, and will not prevent any gentleman from making a motion to strike out the whole paragraph after it is perfected?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. BORLAND. Then the whole paragraph will be subject to amendment and to strike out?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to be recognized, Mr. Chairman, at the proper time, to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. That is on the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Let us have a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 14.

Mr. BEAKES. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. BEAKES. I withdraw my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BORLAND: Page 56, line 23, strike out section 50, paragraph 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The distribution of public documents shall be carried on as heretofore provided by law."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer a substitute for that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Strike out section 50, paragraph 1, lines 23 and 24, on page 56, and lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and the word "annually," on line 7, page 57, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the superintendent of documents is authorized to keep an exchange account with each Senator, Representative, and Delegate, in order to as far as possible furnish such documents as are desired by each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in exchange for documents not desired for distribution."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's amendment is not a substitute. His amendment is to perfect the text and is not a substitute for the amendment I have offered. He leaves in the valuation of $1,800 and seeks to perfect the text in some way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho will observe that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is to strike out the entire paragraph and substitute another provision. The amendment of the gentleman from Idaho is to perfect the text of the paragraph. The substitute of the gentleman from Idaho, being a motion to perfect the text, would take precedence over the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to strike out.

Mr. BORLAND. That is true, Mr. Chairman, if he had offered it as an amendment, but he offered it as a substitute for my amendment. I make the point of order that it is not germane as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. On the face of the amendment it shows—not the statement that the gentleman himself makes, but on the face of the amendment itself—it is to perfect the text.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I will offer it as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. RAKER. On account of the confusion, may we have the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, what I desire to accomplish by this amendment is simply to continue the present law as it is, as far as the apportionment is concerned, but to establish in the Government Printing Office, under the superintendent of documents, a sort of clearing house, and to keep an account with each Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Commissioner, and permit them to turn in to the superintendent of documents such documents as they do not desire, and to take in exchange documents they may desire as nearly as possible of equal value. I understand that in some instances that system is in vogue. Occasionally a Member can turn in a certain class of documents to the superintendent of documents that he does not desire, and take others in exchange. It seems to me that we would all be glad to get the sort of documents of special interest to our constituents, and to surrender those that are not desired or not of interest to them.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If an exchange service is to be had here, would it be more effective under the superintendent of documents than in the folding room of the House?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I have proposed that it be under the superintendent of documents because he has entire charge of documents in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. MANN. But the superintendent of documents does not have charge of the documents in the folding room. Now, the gentleman's amendment is to strike out——

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman will look on page 34, which we have already passed, he will find the identical provision that the gentleman is now trying to incorporate in this amendment. Look at the bottom of page 34:

Provided further, That the superintendent of public documents is hereby authorized to exchange publications which he may have available for those of equal value which a Member may have to his credit in his respective folding room, and, for the purpose of facilitating such exchanges, the superintendent of each folding room shall advise the superintendent of public documents, on request, as to the number of any documents that a Member may have to his credit therein.

Mr. MANN. That does not answer the question. The gentleman from Idaho has offered an amendment to strike out the valuation plan entirely, and to provide for an exchange department in the hands of the superintendent of documents. But if the valuation plan is to be stricken out, then the folding room is to remain, and have charge of the documents, which would involve various amendments to the bill. If the folding room is to remain, and we are to receive our quota of documents in the folding room, is not that the place to have the exchange department?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Possibly that is so.

Mr. MANN. The superintendent of documents has nothing whatever to do with the documents which we receive through the folding room. Of course you might have an exchange department over there if you adopt the valuation scheme suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, but the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] strikes out the valuation scheme, as I understand.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes; I want to do that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Idaho wants to retain the present quota system, and to authorize the making of exchanges of the documents we now receive.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It seems to me it might be a good idea to consolidate the folding rooms with the superintendent of documents, instead of having these separate establishments up here, as far as the apportionment of documents is concerned.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman evidently thinks he is striking this valuation scheme out of this section.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is what I want to accomplish.

Mr. BORLAND. That is what we want; but the gentleman will find that the words in line 7, page 57, which he has left in the paragraph, go on to speak of this valuation account that the superintendent of documents is required to keep. The amendment does not fit into the text.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I drew this amendment hastily, and I am perfectly willing to have the whole paragraph stricken out.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that his amendment makes no provision whatever for the Philippine and Porto Rico Commissioners? They are included in the act, where Delegates, Representatives, and Senators are mentioned, and I suggest that he modify his amendment so as not to leave them out.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] should prevail, then we have on page 34 the exact provision that the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] is now trying to insert as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri. The provision on page 34 was put in there for the specific purpose of providing for the exchange which is desired by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I was not aware of the provision on pages 34 and 35 when I offered my amendment, and I desire to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss this amendment. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], with whose general proposition I sympathize, whether it is necessary, in view of the clause to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] has called our attention on page 34? Whatever is existing law will continue to be existing law.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] called attention to a provision in the bill providing for an exchange of documents, which is a new provision. My amendment has nothing to do with that. I put into my amendment, out of excess of caution, the provision that the distribution of documents should be in accordance with the law as heretofore existing; but my amendment has nothing to do with the exchange system which the chairman of the committee [Mr. BARNHART] says is in another portion of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand the gentleman has made a motion to strike out and insert that whatever is existing law shall continue to be existing law.

Mr. BORLAND. No; I say the distribution shall be according to existing law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I suggest to the gentleman that that is provided for on page 34.

Mr. BORLAND. Let us see about that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If you move to strike out the paragraph simply, many of us will vote for that.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Pennsylvania thinks that a simple motion to strike out paragraph 50 would accomplish the result without the addition of reference to existing law?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. BORLAND. What harm does the language that the distribution shall be according to existing law do?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it would be unnecessary. Whatever is existing law will remain existing law, and so far as the distribution is concerned, that is provided for on page 34. I am ready to vote to strike out with the gentleman, and I think his motion should prevail; but I do not see the advisability of inserting anything in place of the paragraph.

Mr. BORLAND. I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is right, and inasmuch as the motion is divisible, I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw that part of it, and then the chairman, who is more familiar with this matter than I am, can move to insert if necessary. We are agreed that paragraph 50, with the valuation, should go out. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the matter inserted and leave the amendment simply a motion to strike out section 50, paragraph 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that his amendment be modified by striking out the paragraph, withdrawing that part which inserts certain language. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, may we have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 56, line 23, strike out section 50, paragraph 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The distribution of public documents shall be carried on as heretofore provided by law."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object to the modification at present. All a vote upon the pending amendment would do would be to express the opinion of Members of the House. Under the existing law there is a quota fixed for the various annual publications of the Government. The law provides the number of copies which shall be printed—so many for the Senate, so many for the House, and in some cases so many for the departments. If section 50, paragraph 1, should be simply stricken from the bill and the rest of the bill should be enacted into law, you would get no documents at all, because this bill provides for the repeal of the existing law, which fixes the number of copies which shall be printed of various documents and simply provides for the printing of the documents, without fixing the number. The result would be that if you simply struck out this paragraph and leave the rest of the bill in we would authorize the printing of documents and would not authorize any of them to be turned over to Members of Congress for distribution. I am quite sure that is not the desire of the gentleman from Missouri or of anybody else in the House.

It is true that if paragraph 1 of this section should be stricken out when we come over to the other pages, beginning, I believe, on page 60, we could insert the number of copies which should be printed for the use of the Senate and the use of the House, but that would involve a great many amendments. But to take the sense of the House, the gentleman offers an amendment to strike out paragraph 1—the valuation distribution—and, I think, it would be wise to have the amendment cover what he has already provided for, that the distribution shall be in accordance with existing law. That would be a direction at least to the Committee on Printing to have these amendments inserted in the bill in the proper place.

Mr. BORLAND. I was going to ask whether the gentleman was in favor of the amendment as originally offered, whether he thought it was better than the modified amendment, but he immediately followed it up by saying that the original amendment was the better.

Mr. MANN. I think if you wish to take the sense of the House that it would be better taken on the amendment as originally offered.

Mr. BORLAND. I intended to follow it up with subsequent amendments. Mr. Chairman, I think I will withdraw the request for unanimous consent which was suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not quite as clear upon this as the gentleman from Illinois is on matters of this kind. It seems to me that there is existing law for the distribution of documents.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but if the bill should be passed as it stands now you would not have any provision at all. For instance, here is a provision on page 62, line 15, "Laws of each session of Congress in pamphlet form." We get a quota of that now. If we do, then the law now in existence provides the number of copies which shall be printed and the number which shall be furnished to the Senate folding room and the number which shall be furnished to the House. This does not provide any number at all unless it should be by an amendment. Now, as I say, if the House wants to express its opinion that the distribution should be in accordance with existing law, it might be well to vote on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman understand that this bill repeals existing law with respect to distribution?

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly it does.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Just one more question. It would not repeal existing law if section 50 were taken out?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; it would.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARNHART. I believe a word of explanation on the matter of the amendment would be wise. I would say for the information of the House that it will require, to perfect the bill, if this amendment goes out, 31 distinct amendments.

Mr. MANN. I should think at least that, or possibly more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If you do not include the amendment to be inserted under the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. MANN. Even if it be inserted, the rest of the bill would have to be amended, but that tests the sense of the House. That is the only reason.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not take a Member off his feet to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. I will yield, so that the gentleman may make it.

Mr. BORLAND. I wanted to adopt the suggestion and the idea of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and withdraw my request to modify the amendment, so that the gentleman can discuss the merits of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not withdrawn it, because the gentleman from Illinois objected.

Mr. BORLAND. I just want to put it in that shape.

Mr. MANN. I would not object after I make the explanation, if the gentleman desires to withdraw it.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if striking out section 85, on page 120, which purports to be the section which repeals existing law, would not cover the matter he speaks of in reference to the distribution of documents?

Mr. MANN. I would say it would not, because you do not have to specifically repeal a law. Where you provide in the bill, for instance, with respect to the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, there is existing law covering that point, and this is a repeal by implication. I think there is no question about that.

I want now to discuss for a moment the valuation scheme. I shall not vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], though I have no particular feeling on the subject. I have given a good deal of study to the valuation scheme and was originally quite opposed to it. I recognize the difficulties which exist where gentlemen find some newspaper or magazine has published a statement that the Government has issued a very interesting document, which you can get by writing to your Member of Congress, and that you then get a large number of requests for that document—most of them out of idle curiosity—with which you can not comply because you do not have the quota. You say to your correspondent, "I can not send you the document, because my quota is exhausted; the Government fixes the number, and I have sent those out;" and in the main that is a satisfactory explanation. I do not know what we would have to say if the valuation scheme should be adopted. Doubtless we would find some method of taking care of ourselves in a reasonable manner. As it is now, there are a large number of annual publications. Those do not include the Horse Book and the Cow Book or books printed by special resolutions of Congress.

So far as the valuation scheme is concerned, if we desired in the future—and I think that would be the course adopted—we could provide for those special publications in addition to the valuation fixed by law, if it should go into effect. For instance, Congress, by joint resolution, as it will do, I have no doubt, when we need more books on the diseases of cattle and the diseases of the horse, could provide for the publication of a number of those documents, and, whether the Committee on Printing desires it or not, could provide that they shall be distributed to the Members pro rata. We now get these annual publications under the existing law, fixing the quota to be delivered to the House, and in the main those go to the folding room. There are a few of them where the quota is very small and they go to the document room, and you never have discovered, not one in fifty, that you have them to your credit. Nobody wants them; there is no demand for them. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] says that he is a good trader and that he can trade them off. I will guarantee that he gets lots of documents that he can not give away unless he sends them to his constituents and gets them out before they know what they are. There are a lot of these things that you can not get enough of. I never have yet gotten enough ethnological reports; I never have gotten enough Smithsonian Institution reports; I never have gotten enough National Museum reports. I get a lot of bulletins from the National Museum about the languages of Indians, and so forth, that I have no earthly use for and that nobody else has. We get a lot of geological reports. It used to be in six volumes, and they have finally gotten it down, I believe, to one volume. I have a great university in my district and still I can not dispose of my geological reports. I usually give them to the Bureau of Geology. I get a lot of water-supply reports—used to get a large number of them. I do not know what has become of them in recent years, and nobody ever used them. Those reports we get that we can not make use of we can not trade, because no one wants them. Only a few people in the country want them, and if they want them they do not apply to their Member of Congress, as a rule, for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if somebody wanted these reports we could provide for their exchange through an exchange department. An exchange department in the folding room would be a good thing anyway, in any event. The scheme that is proposed is that you get the value of all the documents we now receive as annual documents placed to your credit, including those that are good and those that are worthless to you, add a little bit to that and then fix this sum as the amount which you can use in getting such documents as you desire. There can be no question but that you will get more documents that you desire under this scheme than under the existing scheme.

Whether you will create a greater demand for documents which you can not supply I can not tell, and nobody else can tell, except time. It is immaterial to me from my personal point of view how the House looks at it. I have been able to take care of myself for years. I believe that it would be wise for the House to try this plan. I think they will get more good documents to the credit of their constituents in that way than they will now, and I feel absolutely assured that the House is quite able to take care of itself and its proper interests in the future as it orders extra publications issued.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to ask the gentleman how it happens that so many documents like the ones to which the gentleman refers that are absolutely of no use can be continued to be printed by the Government and by the departments?

Mr. MANN. That is one of the mysteries I can explain only in this way——

Mr. RAKER. I know the gentleman knows.

Mr. MANN. These documents have to be published. They are reports which are properly published. Certain people in the country are interested in them, but not a large number. We have to publish these things, and Congress has always manifested a desire whenever they ordered anything published to see that Members of Congress had their share for distribution.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that all of the documents that he mentions as useless in his district are valuable to the people out in the Rocky Mountain country.

Mr. MANN. Well, you have nothing to trade to me for them.

Mr. RAKER. I will trade with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Yes; you would take all I have and send them out with a letter. I will not give them to you. What have you to trade? I have sent any quantity of these documents back to the departments, where people apply for them. Sometimes they have more there than they are asked for.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, I believed that when the chairman of this committee, Mr. BARNHART, explained this provision in the bill it would meet with almost universal approval, and I think that the bill as it now stands should be adopted. I think we should not be afraid to go on record to correct any evil that exists. There is no question but that the Government to-day is spending thousands upon thousands of dollars in publishing various publications that are of no earthly use. I want to say to the Members of the House I have what I believe to be about 5 tons of various publications, and any Member can go over the list and pick out anything he wants, provided he can send the publications to any person who will read them.

Mr. RAKER. I will be pleased to visit the gentleman's office.

Mr. KREIDER. I want to say to the gentleman that I shall be glad to have him do so. Now, many of these publications cost anywhere from $1 to $5 to print, and I doubt if anyone has ever read a dozen pages of any one of them. I want to say that here is a loss of thousands of dollars, I believe, that we ought to stop. Now, it seems to me that the only objection that has been offered——

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman permit me to give him the exact figures. There is $125,000 a year lost on junk paper.

Mr. KREIDER. That money should be spent for useful publications that people really want and will read when they get them.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KREIDER. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. How are you going to tell whether a publication is useful or not until you have first published an edition? These editions are small, as a rule.

Mr. KREIDER. What I refer to are not very small editions. They are books that weigh some tons.

Mr. RAKER. In answer to the question propounded by myself to the gentleman from Illinois, which seems to me to settle the question, I want to ask you this. The Government must publish these documents for the purpose of giving information and comply with the law. Now, it becomes necessary to publish a document and a report, so that the man who wishes to enforce the law must know what has been done, and would it be any extra expense to print a few extra copies so that the public, if it desires, may know what is being done?

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, I do not refer particularly to department publications or reports. But I do refer to those books that are being published and allotted to each Congressman and which are not being used. Now, I am not prepared to name each one, but I want to say that the very fact that there is a loss of $125,000 along that line is of sufficient importance to receive proper consideration.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. KREIDER. Not now. I have only five minutes.

The point that has been made in all the arguments against this new proposition is that each Congressman will possibly be accused or charged with having received $1,800 worth of documents for distribution, and the proposition seems to bother some, how they are going to get by on that proposition without supplying everyone with all the documents they want. I do not think there has been a reasonable argument presented along that line that does not present itself under the present methods. But if that is the only objection, I believe it could be overcome in this way: Instead of specifying $1,800, or whatever the amount may be, so many dollars' worth of these documents being credited to each Representative, provide that a certain number of farm bulletins and a certain number of books, or its equivalent in value, shall be allotted to each congressional district, and do away with the dollars-and-cents feature. I believe we ought to perfect this bill in some way that will effect the saving that we are trying to accomplish and let only those publications be printed and distributed that are demanded and are of practical use and value. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Missouri does not mean to say that he is preempting the privileges of the chairman of the committee, does he?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I happen to be the author of the amendment, that is all.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Missouri will withdraw that request. The committee has not yet been heard at all on the amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. I thought I was aiding the committee, but if the chairman wants the debate to run on indefinitely, all right.

Mr. BARNHART. It would be unfair to the committee and to the Members of the House, and I ask the gentleman to withdraw that request for limitation of debate.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the chairman think that it would be possible to agree upon a division of time?

Mr. FINLEY. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina objects.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly believe that this valuation clause is in the interest of constituents of Members, and in the interest of Members themselves, and I know it is in the interest of the Government, because it will save about $125,000 a year right at the start, as soon as it goes into operation.

Now, there is an important weakness in the argument that hundreds of people are liable to write in for some given document and swamp the Members of Congress. The weakness of it is that it is a fiction. The truth of the matter is that the ordinary Member of Congress does not receive on the average, for the 365 days in the year, outside of the requests for farmers' bulletins, more than five bona fide requests for Government documents. For the last few days I have been interviewing the secretaries of Members, and have asked them how many bona fide requests they receive on the average, each day, for documents, and they say not more than five. Some may receive more than that, some less; but on the average I do not believe Members receive more than five. I know I do not, and I try to stir up my constituents on this question of public documents as much as I can.

Now, if you were to put in a page advertisement in each of the newspapers of your district and advertise such documents, you could not get more than 200 people to write for those documents to save your life. I have tried that myself. I did not insert a page advertisement, but I did put an advertisement or notice in nearly every paper in my district about this Horse Book, which is perhaps the most sought for of all the public documents, and in that advertisement I stated that I had some at my disposal, and said that it was an excellent book, and that I would be glad to send out copies as long as the supply lasted. I received only 75 requests, after inserting that notice in nearly all the newspapers of my district; and I know that my people, collectively, had never been told about that document before.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. About how many publications did the gentleman send out on his Navy League proposition?

Mr. TAVENNER. That has nothing to do with this proposition.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes, it has. How many requests did the gentleman get for its distribution?

Mr. TAVENNER. I could not say offhand how many I have received.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. TAVENNER. I regret I have not the time.

Mr. RAKER. I will try to see that the gentleman gets more time.

Mr. TAVENNER. Very well.

Mr. RAKER. By what method does the gentleman arrive at the conclusion that there would be a saving of $125,000 by this provision, to start with?

Mr. TAVENNER. Because that is the value of the books that are being wasted now every year in the document and folding rooms—documents that are not sent out, but which are sold as junk.

Now, assuming that each Member would receive five actual, bona fide requests for public documents, exclusive of farmers' bulletins, each day in the year for 365 days, that would be a total of 1,825 requests for documents; and assuming that the average cost of these documents would be about 40 cents apiece—and that is a fair approximate average cost of these documents—a Member would receive in an entire year requests for $730 worth of documents. This bill gives each Member $1,800 worth of documents, which would leave approximately $1,000 worth of documents outside of the average bona fide requests.

Members of Congress say they do not want to be in a position to have some one in their district write for documents and not be able to send the documents to them. That is a position they will not be in under this bill, because, unless they unwisely give them away en masse, they will always have plenty of documents to their credit so that they can send out the documents requested and the people in their districts will get the documents they desire.

As a general proposition I believe that 70 per cent of all the documents that are sent out now are not sent to people who request them, but are sent by Members who take a chance that some document will interest some one, and perhaps Members do not figure it out very carefully. They just send them out in that way and a large number of them are misfits. Under the proposed plan a larger percentage of documents will go to people who are actually interested in them and who want them.

Now, this provision is not original with this committee. It has been recommended by every Committee on Printing for the last seven years, and also by the special committee appointed by the House and Senate to investigate the question of the printing of useless documents. Every one of the printing committees has recommended the valuation system. This plan has been discussed in every Congress every year for the last seven years, and so far as we know no newspaper in the United States has ever criticized it or said that it would be "pork" or anything like that, and on the other hand quite a number of papers have spoken favorably of the idea.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I wanted to support the committee on this bill, and am going to do it as far as I can, but here is a feature that I fear I can not support. I admit that the theory of this valuation scheme is correct. If we are publishing documents that are useless, that is a distinct loss to the Government, and unnecessary and ought to be stopped; and if this method would stop it and there was no other way to do it, I would readily vote for it, even though I think we are inviting a good deal of embarrassment. I think the theory of this plan is good, in that it gives to the Congressman an opportunity to study the needs of his district and then make his order in accordance with it, and it will entail a good deal of intelligent consideration to find out the requirements of the district.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. FESS. Absolutely.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman would ascertain what documents were desired by the requests that came to him. There would always be a stock in the folding room on which Members could draw. A Member would not have to make any estimate of how many documents he was going to use. He might draw out all his allotment on one single document.

Mr. FESS. This was not a criticism. It was in commendation of the plan.

Mr. BARNHART. I thought the gentleman misunderstood that feature of it. I thought he said the Member would have to make an estimate.

Mr. FESS. I meant that he would have an opportunity to make an investigation of what people wanted, and that this plan would probably further it more than the old plan.

But now, seriously, there is another side of this matter that I do not want to invite, and that is that I am sorry to say we are the subject of unfair criticism on the part of a great many people who are much inclined to find fault. I confess that that is one reason why I have always opposed the present mileage system. In my own State we had a great contest on that and I could not get the consent of my mind, after taking a position at home, to come here and take a position apparently in opposition to what I have stood for at home, although it would not be in opposition, for this was an allowance that is more than simply the payment of mileage for an individual Member.

But no Member can close his eyes to the fact that a lot of people are talking about the perquisities that a Congressman receives; and I do not like the idea of the statement going out to the country that we have an allotment of $1,800, which is not true. The allotment is not to a Congressman. The allotment is to the district that the Congressman represents; but you will find that throughout the country there will be a charge that the Congressman has received $1,800 in perquisites; and then, if some one wants a publication that you can not get, he will say, "Did you put the money in your pocket, or what did you do with it?" Now, I do not want to invite that criticism, and I think I am about as courageous in the refutation of demagogic criticism as the average Member on the floor. I do not want to invite that, and it seems to me this is an invitation of that sort of criticism.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out $2,200 in line 3 and insert $1,800.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is to strike out. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] would take precedence.

Mr. BORLAND. I suppose that would be true if the amendments had been offered at the same time; but after a motion to strike out and insert has been offered and debated, is it then in order to offer an amendment to perfect the text?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the rule is that the motion to strike out is voted on last and that amendments intended to perfect the text are first in order. If the understanding of the Chair is correct, the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is in order.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the Chair rule that a pending amendment under debate can be displaced at any time by another amendment to perfect the text?

The CHAIRMAN. It can, for the manifest reason that if the gentleman's motion to strike out should prevail the committee would have no opportunity to amend the text, and if the text could be amended the legislation might be favorably regarded by the committee and might pass.

Mr. BORLAND. What is the parliamentary situation of the amendment that is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be displaced temporarily, until the amendment to perfect the text is disposed of. The Chair does not think there can be any question about that rule, and so the Chair will hold that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is in order.

Mr. GOOD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. Would the amendment I have offered be in order after the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be in order as a new paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. I do not care to offer it as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman to ask unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. GOOD. No; I do not care to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment for the purpose of perfecting the text. I move to strike out "$1,800," where it appears in line 6, on page 57, and insert in lieu thereof "$2,200."

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 57, strike out in line 6, the figures "$1,800" and insert "$2,200."

Mr. GOOD. There is an amendment pending to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. What amendment?

Mr. GOOD. The amendment that I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to ask to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. GOOD. No; I said I did not care to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair then submitted a request for unanimous consent that the amendment be withdrawn, and there was no objection. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] who has offered an amendment which the Clerk has just reported.

Mr. HOWARD. It is the reverse of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. Is this amendment debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not want to be selfish for my colleagues on the floor of this House at all, and I do not want to be ungenerous to the distinguished gentlemen at the other end of this Capitol. The function of a Senator is to deal with such momentous questions that he has but little time to fool with the distribution of horse books and seeds and the little things that this great Government is doing for a great people. I think the chairman of this committee, one of the most generous and lovable men in Congress, certainly overlooked the discharge of his duties, which he, as a rule, always performs faithfully, by being a little too modest, and practiced a little bit of false generosity when he made up this bill. The truth of the matter is, and the gentleman from Indiana knows it, that a Congressman gets 10 requests for public documents where a Senator gets 1. In other words, it has been recognized for 100 years in this country that a Congressman is the direct representative of the whole people, and when they want anything, when they want quick action, they know that small particles move rapidly and large bodies move slowly, and so they address that request to their Congressman. The result is—I do not know how it is with others, but as far as I am concerned, I find myself at the end of the year wending my way to the other end of the Capitol to beg my Senator to give me a few documents when I have exhausted mine, and I find that he has always an ample supply on hand.

Now, there is no reason in the world why we should give the Senate $400 the best of the bargain. I believe in being generous. If the people want this literature, let them have it. Here is $2,200 of documents to go to the district represented by the gentleman from Indiana. What folks in this country need light more [laughter] than the people that are asking for a little free book from this Government in order that they can learn something?

Now, Mr. Chairman, is there a man on the floor of this House who can get up and give a good reason why a Congressman should be discriminated against in such a manner as this? I want this House to repudiate the action of this committee in giving a United States Senator $400 more for public documents than we are getting.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to know why a Senator should have any quota of documents at all?

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, Senators have to get to the people sometimes, as we do all the time. It is a great body, but I think they are human. They have friends scattered over the States. I admit it is a duplication, because they can not find a man in my district that wants anything that has not got it. [Laughter and applause.] I know of no reason why a Senator should not have some documents. Far be it from me to take them away from him. I want them to have some; I want them to have just what they ought to have and no more, because I do not get enough now. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Georgia is always illuminating and his positions are frequently well taken, but in this particular instance, Mr. Chairman, the House has been deciding all these years that a Member of the United States Senate, who represents his entire State rather than a fractional part of it as Members of the House do, shall be entitled to a certain quota. The proportion given to Senators has been even larger than this. When the bill passed the Senate it provided that the House should have $1,600 and the Senate $2,500 in document value. They are satisfied with this proportion, and it is a fair division. It is not the proportion that now is given to the Senate in public documents; they now take 30 per cent and the House 70 per cent.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to ask if it is not a fact that a Senator drew this very provision in this bill about this distribution?

Mr. BARNHART. No; the Senator drew a provision which gave the House $1,700 and the Senate $2,500 in value.

Mr. HOWARD. My opinion is——

Mr. BARNHART. No; I am incorrect about that. It was $1,600 for the House and $2,500 for the Senate.

Mr. HOWARD. I wonder he did not take more. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I realize that some of the remarks and some of the amendments offered to this section are really against the bill. I trust, however, that this amendment will not prevail because I know that when the bill goes to the Senate, unless we try to be fair with the Senate, as we ought to be, the probability is we will get the worst of it in the outcome and we will not get anything but present unsatisfactory ratio. I say that with all due respect to the Senate and to the merits and just deserts of the House.

Mr. Chairman, the proposed change for the amount of this allowance has been gone over time and time again. As I said in my opening statement on the bill, and I again say it for the benefit of new Members, this bill is not the sole baby of the Committee on Printing in the House; it is the outcome of 12 or 14 years of industrious work by members of the committee of both the House and the Senate, and by a commission that was authorized way back, I think, in 1906, and possibly 1904, to try and discover some remedy for the abuses that have grown up in printing documents. They investigated it, and they realized that something had to be done in order to give to the people the documents for which they are paying and not waste $125,000 a year, as we have been doing for many years in the past.

As the gentleman from Illinois has well said, there is a wealth of old documents printed now that nobody can use. They are printed under existing law, and we are trying to remedy that and prevent the great waste that is going on by printing documents that the public can not use but which it is paying for.

Mr. HOWARD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has made any calculation as to how many bookkeepers and clerks it is going to take in addition to what we now have to keep these accounts?

Mr. BARNHART. I do not think it will take any more than now.

Mr. HOWARD. It will be just like the postal savings-bank law. Somebody sends to me for a bulletin which costs 5 cents, and there has to be a separate and individual charge of that. The consequence will be that you will load the department down with bookkeepers to keep these books.

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HOWARD. It will waste the money just as certain as it will produce more jobs.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In this estimate that it will cost $125,000—that is, that we spend that much money a year—is there a list of the documents that have been destroyed which goes to show that about the same kind and character of documents each year have been issued?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; and the gentleman from California has had them each year. They are sent to him each year by the Public Printer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman another question. If that is true, and I know it is, because the gentleman has stated it, why does the Printing Office print these documents of the same class and character each year?

Mr. BARNHART. Because existing law requires that the Printing Office do that, and that is why we are trying to change this law.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if it is true that the Government has been printing so many useless documents for so many years, and that absolutely no one wants them, if nobody would use them under the plan which the chairman has advanced, and nobody uses them under the present plan, would they continue to be printed?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's question convinces me of just what I have thought from all his statements, namely, that he does not understand the bill at all. Of course they would not be printed as now. They would be printed and kept in stock like a stock of goods in a store is kept, in such editions as the joint committee might authorize from time to time, and when they are exhausted additional copies will be printed as fast as they are needed; and you never would have present accumulation of these useless documents, because the joint committee would not permit it.

Mr. BORLAND. Then the gentleman has answered and admitted, as I knew he would have to, that the prevention or the reduction in the printing of these useless documents is not an essential feature of the change of plans.

Mr. BARNHART. We are trying to abolish the plan, and give the gentleman the documents he would like to have for his people, instead of having these printed up, not used, and sold for junk each year.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman can prevent printing them now.

Mr. BARNHART. How can he prevent it? Can the gentleman from Missouri tell me any way except by changing the law?

Mr. BORLAND. They are printed under some provision of law now?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly; and the chairman of the Committee on Printing can not arbitrarily change the law. We are here before the House at the present time asking that it change the law as it ought to be changed.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman insists, then, that the law is going to remain as it is and these documents must be printed, and yet under his plan nobody is going to draw them to their credit, and what is to become of them?

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, they will be printed in such quantity that there will be comparatively no waste. They would not be printed each year, they would not be printed at all except when needed and in very limited editions, and if there was no call for them they would not be printed any more.

Mr. BORLAND. That can be done now.

Mr. BARNHART. You can do it by changing the law, and that is what we are asking.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is not that what you can do now without involving this proposition of money value to each Member? Change the maximum that has now to be printed and make it very much smaller, and when there is an extra demand have a reprint and thereby get rid of the waste.

Mr. BARNHART. But the difficulty about these matters suggested from time to time to-day is this: Some documents are in demand in one district in the United States that are not wanted at all in another district, and any plan that proceeds upon the basis that we are now going, that prints a certain amount of documents for each and every district in the United States, gives to many districts that which they can not use and denies to other districts that which they can use.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD]. There certainly can not be any good reason advanced why the allotment of these various publications should be greater to Members of the Senate than to Members of the House. No good reason has been advanced and none can be.

The argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] that in order to prevent waste we must place a valuation on Government documents is to my mind ludicrous. Here is a document that is worthless. No one wants to read it. It is not proposed now to stop its publication, but it is only proposed that it will be valuable after we set a money value upon it and charge somebody with it. It is thought that there will then be a demand for it. If it is valueless, why do you publish it? If it is worthless and no one wants it, why do you want to charge it up to a Member of Congress, in order that he can send it out so that it may find a place in some one's wastebasket?

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. That is exactly what is done now, and we are trying to correct that.

Mr. GOOD. But you can make the correction without charging it up to a Member of Congress.

Mr. FINLEY. It is charged up to him now.

Mr. GOOD. Let us eliminate the waste. All that is necessary is to stop publishing useless publications. The gentleman from Illinois says that we will save $125,000, and then he goes on to say in his argument that if a certain number of requests came in each day it would exhaust only $700 worth of bulletins a year for each Member of Congress, and he figures that that would be a normal request.

If that is the case and you are looking for economy, why did you not allow each Member only $700 and save over $500,000 a year on Government publications instead of attempting to save $125,000?

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. He is familiar with the present law by which documents are allotted?

Mr. GOOD. It is not proposed to cut out entirely some of these publications that are useless. How do you know whether a publication would be a proper publication or not? Who is to be the judge of a publication? It is only by a trial.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I can not yield further. I have only five minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman can get further time.

Mr. GOOD. Then I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, just there. The method of printing public documents as proposed in the bill here is that there will be a limited number of publications ordered by law to be published. To the extent that these publications are called for, of course, they will be printed, and the first print, small in number so to speak, will be raised or increased to meet the demand. Under the present law you can not do that. You get your allotment of irrigation bulletins and geological reports, and you must take them. You can not go to any department of the Government and say that you do not wish those, but that you want some other publication.

Mr. GOOD. And now you propose you must take them and must pay for them.

Mr. FINLEY. No; I do not.

Mr. GOOD. Then what are you going to publish them for at all?

Mr. FINLEY. Until it is demonstrated that certain publications are uncalled for you will not know what is necessary to publish.

Mr. GOOD. You are going to publish them anyway, to test their value, and you are going to have $125,000 worth of junk, just as we are now having at the end of each year.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman must know this, that if a publication is limited to 100 copies that would not compare in cost to a publication where there are 500,000 published under the present law.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman mean to say that publications will be authorized where only 100 copies will be printed?

Mr. FINLEY. I will say that is the present law.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows that of all the publications more than 100 copies are printed in every case.

Mr. FINLEY. Under the present law, yes; and the allotment is made to you whether you want them for distribution or not.

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Can we not limit the edition to 100 copies of documents without this provision in the bill fixing a price upon it?

Mr. FINLEY. Under the present law?

Mr. GOOD. No. I mean if we struck out this provision fixing a price upon the document.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman the publication will be limited to a very small edition, and then as they are called for by Members of Congress the printing will be continued and the documents increased in number.

Mr. GOOD. That could be done whether the price was fixed on that document or not?

Mr. FINLEY. We say that in this bill.

Mr. GOOD. That could be done if we eliminated this section?

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman is in favor of that, he is in favor of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. I am in favor of eliminating this section entirely.

Mr. FINLEY. Then you are against this part of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Is that all there is in this bill? Is it bottomed on the proposition of simply fixing a price on these documents and charging them to Members of Congress at that price?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARNHART. I would like to ask the author of this amendment, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] if we can not close debate in five minutes?

Mr. HOWARD. I am ready to close it right now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the request that at the end of five minutes the debate be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. I amend that by adding debate on this amendment and all amendments to the paragraph.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I object.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate close on the amendment to the paragraph in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. On the amendment to the paragraph, in five minutes?

Mr. BARNHART. On amendment and the paragraph in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. On the two pending amendments?

Mr. SHERLEY. I offer as an amendment to that motion that all debate close in five minutes on the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. BARNHART. On this I would like to be heard, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not a debatable motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] moves to amend the motion of the gentleman from Indiana closing all debate on this amendment in five minutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARNHART. Now, Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARNHART. What is the status of the situation now?

The CHAIRMAN. The status of the situation is that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized for five minutes, and at the expiration of that five minutes all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto is concluded.

Mr. BARNHART. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to submit to the membership of this House——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have been recognized.

Mr. BARNHART. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. I shall have to object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has been recognized and is now on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] submitted a parliamentary inquiry; but that, of course, can not take the gentleman from Iowa off his feet. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes, if he wants to make a statement.

Mr. BARNHART. I thank the House for permitting the gentleman from Iowa to yield to the chairman of this committee two minutes in which to make an important statement.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the Committee on Printing [Mr. BARNHART] may have five minutes at the conclusion of the time for which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa consent?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART], the chairman of the Committee on Printing, may have five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, several gentleman have been on their feet several times asking for recognition, and the gentleman from Indiana moved to cut off debate and limited the time to five minutes.

Mr. BARNHART. I did nothing of the sort.

Mr. RAGSDALE. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has the floor. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa yielded the floor for the sole purpose of allowing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to make a request for unanimous consent in behalf of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] shall have five minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]?

Mr. BORLAND. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. GOOD. I will yield two minutes of my time, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa that it will require unanimous consent for him to yield under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that I may yield to the gentleman from Indiana one-half of my five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to be allowed to yield to the gentleman from Indiana one-half of his five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. I trust gentlemen will not object to that request. I want to thank the gentleman from Iowa for according to the chairman of this committee, which has worked so long and arduously during all these years on this bill, the privilege of explaining in two and one-half minutes the details of the proposition of why we should not abolish this section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa, that he may yield two and one-half minutes to the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I might repeat what I have already said, that the Committee on Printing feels that, at least, it ought to have the privilege of presenting the importance of this proposition as to whether or not this section of the bill shall become a part of the bill.

It is charged on the floor that I have made the motion that all debate be closed. I made the motion that the debate be closed on the amendments, but not on the section. The motion that the debate be closed on the section was made by some other Member.

I trust that the membership of this House will be fair to this committee that has been working so earnestly to bring in a bill that will be of benefit to the people and to the public service; and I submit that we should at least be given an opportunity to be heard on this matter. I hope our committee will at least be given that privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized for two and one-half minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to say anything to detract from the great work that has been done by the Committee on Printing, which has reported this bill. I think they have tried to bring before the House a workable proposition and that in many respects they have succeeded. But on the proposition involved in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] I think they have failed. I think we are inviting trouble that will arise every year to embarrass Members of the House when it comes to sending out bulletins and other Government publications that have a value fixed upon them. These bulletins and Government publications that are valuable ought to be given to every man, woman, and child in the United States that wants them; they ought to be sent to them without cost, and they ought to be had for the asking.

When you come to fixing a valuation upon them, as provided for in this bill, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] says that that is the principle upon which this bill is bottomed, you are inviting trouble. I do not believe that the gentleman understands——

Mr. FINLEY. I made no such statement.

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe that the gentleman understands the provision of the bill his committee has reported if that is his contention.

Mr. FINLEY. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I made no such statement.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman does not seem to understand the principle upon which this bill is bottomed. The idea that there are hundreds of thousands of Government publications that are useless, and that $125,000 will be saved every year by not publishing them, simply charging them up to Members of Congress, is the most foolish proposition that was ever submitted to this House. Think of it! A publication is valueless and uncalled for when it can be had for the asking, only becomes valuable when a price is put on it at which Members can secure it.

Why, gentlemen, we are going to have here, as was said by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], thousands of publications with values of 2 or 3 cents placed upon them. There will be bookkeepers galore keeping the accounts of every Member of Congress every day, charging them 3 cents for this publication and 5 cents for that publication and some other amount for another publication; and you will have, when the end of the year comes, the same amount of junk to sell to the junk dealer as you have had heretofore, and in addition you will have paid thousands of dollars for bookkeepers.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARNHART. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BARNHART. Do we not have these clerks now keeping the record of what you order?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; a given number of bulletins are credited to each Member, and as he orders out bulletins they are charged to him; but we do not have an account charging us 3 cents for a bulletin on "The Care of Babies," and so forth, do we?

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. They charge you with the number of bulletins.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; they charge the Member with the number of bulletins only, but they do not fix a value on them and charge you with so many dollars and cents. The amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] ought to prevail. There ought to be no discrimination between Members of the House and Members of the Senate when it comes to the distribution of Government publications. Likewise the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire, as I made the motion to cut off debate, to ask that five minutes be given to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

Mr. BARNHART. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky, but the chairman of this committee can not present an argument on this proposition in five minutes, and I refuse to accept the time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Will the clerk report the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 57, line 6, strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], to strike out and insert.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask that the amendment be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the paragraph beginning with line 23 on page 56 and ending with line 12 on page 58, and inserting the following:
"The distribution of public documents shall be carried on as heretofore provided by law."

Mr. SHERLEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Is that motion divisible?

Mr. MANN. No; the motion to strike out and insert is not divisible.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out and insert is not divisible.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BORLAND) there were—ayes 57, noes 41.

Mr. BARNHART. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. BARNHART and Mr. BORLAND.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 49.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. BORLAND was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCKELLAR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12843) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4764. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved January 17, 1914.

REVISION OF PRINTING LAWS.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 50. Par. 2. The superintendent of public documents shall supply, wrap, and mail or otherwise dispatch all publications subject to valuation distribution upon the written order of the person entitled to the same, who shall furnish addressed frank slips or envelopes therefor; and said superintendent shall promptly furnish each person entitled to a valuation account or document quota under this section with information and the prices of all publications available for such distribution in advance of printing the first edition thereof, if possible, and he shall also render statements from time to time to each person entitled to the same concerning the condition of his valuation account: Provided, That any person credited with a valuation account or quota of Government publications as provided for in this act, or any employee or agent of such person, or any officer or employee of Congress or either House thereof, who shall sell or dispose of for gain or profit any publications obtained either directly or indirectly under the provisions of this section, shall be fined not more than $1,000: Provided further, That, if the Public Printer, the superintendent of public documents, or any other officer or employee of the Government Printing Office shall permit or knowingly be party to any violation of this act, whereby the Government shall suffer any loss therefrom, he shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 58, in line 19, the words "a valuation account."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEAKES: Page 58, line 19, strike out "a valuation account."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BEAKES].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in lines 23 and 24, after the word "same," the words "concerning the condition of his valuation account."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 58, in lines 23 and 24, by striking out the words "concerning the condition of his valuation account."

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this printing bill, for the reason that I believe it will cost the Government of the United States much more money than the present system costs. I am in favor of reforms in the present system, but I do not believe that this printing bill accomplishes reforms in the present system.

Let me give you two or three examples of what this bill does. When I give them to you I do it in the belief that the Printing Committee are laboring under the impression that they can handle the printing of this Government better than any other committee can.

The Post Office Department of this country has a large number of continuing contracts, made when paper cost less than it does to-day, and contracts which this bill would void.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAKES. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. Has the gentleman any contractors for Government supplies in his district who would be interfered with in any way by this bill?

Mr. BEAKES. So far as I know there is not a contractor for Government printing in my district, and there is not a contractor with whom I am acquainted.

Mr. BARNHART. Nor in the State?

Mr. BEAKES. Nor in the State of Michigan. There is a contract for the printing of facing slips. I do not know whether the Members of this House know what facing slips are or not. They are slips that are placed by the postal clerks on the back of each package of letters. They contain the name of the post office to which they are addressed, and the name of the post office from which they come, the railroad, and the name of the clerk. Those slips are printed for this Government by special machinery at a cost to the Government of less than 5 cents a thousand. The Government Printing Office has bid on them at various times, and the last time that it bid upon them its bid was eight or nine times what the Government gets them printed for.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAKES. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. KEATING. Can the gentleman give the House any information as to the labor conditions prevailing in the offices which are handling these contracts, which the gentleman says are effecting such a material saving to the Government of the United States?

Mr. BEAKES. I know nothing whatever about them.

Mr. KEATING. Does not the gentleman think that before he advises the House as to what it should do under the circumstances he ought to investigate as to the labor conditions where this work is done under these contracts?

Mr. BEAKES. Let me say to the gentleman that the reason that this price can be made so low is that the shops that print these facing slips do nothing else.

Mr. KEATING. But the gentleman says he knows nothing about the labor conditions in those shops.

Mr. FINLEY. They are "scab" shops. We have affidavits here to that effect.

Mr. BEAKES. I do not yield any further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan declines to yield.

Mr. BEAKES. The Government has a contract for the printing of postal cards, and if it had to make that contract over again, as it would have to do under this bill, it would cost the Government several hundred thousand dollars more, because, mind you, the European war has sent up the price of paper.

I am talking about the Post Office Department, because I know something about that department. The Government has a contract for printing money-order blanks, and that contract was let for $101,000 less than the Government Printing Office bid on it. The reason is that the people who do this sort of work have special machinery, which the Government Printing Office has not. And I want to say to you that instead of this bill saving the Government $125,000 a year in the printing of useless documents you will find before you get through that you will have fastened upon yourselves a system which will trouble you and which will not properly distribute what you have to distribute, and which will cost the Government more money. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would not take the floor if the gentleman had not referred to conditions in the printing of postal supplies. He criticizes the policy of the Government in recent years in taking from private contractors the printing of postal cards and other necessary postal supplies and having them printed in the Government Printing Office. It was my good fortune and privilege to serve for 10 years altogether on the Post Office Committee, and during that service I took considerable pleasure in looking into the details of that work and of the conditions in the administration of that great department. It is easy for the committee to understand why the Government should control the printing of all of its supplies that partake of the nature of currency or of any value whatever. The gentleman will have to admit, as he is acquainted with postal affairs by reason of his service as postmaster or assistant postmaster in his city for many years, that the character of the postal card is much superior both in its material and in its printing since the Government Printing Office has taken charge than before, when it was printed by private contractors. Bids were called for, and the bid of the Government Printing Office was almost the same as that of the private contractor, but if it is fundamental that postal supplies should be printed at the Government Printing Office because we can get better service, better returns, is it fair for gentlemen to compare the conditions on an eight-hour basis, where men receive good living wages, with contracts from private establishments, where children may be employed and where the contract price must necessarily be less?

It is a question of policy, and department officials generally agree that so far as postage stamps, postal cards, Treasury notes, and everything partaking of value in connection with the Postal Service or Government is concerned they should be printed at the Government establishment, and it needs little explanation to show the committee why that should be so.

Now, as to the valuation plan. The chairman of this committee has labored on this bill more assiduously than many a man could have been expected to labor. The gentleman has intimated that the chairman does not understand the provisions of the bill that has been brought in here. Why, this bill was considered in the United States Senate for several weeks in the Sixty-second Congress. It was considered in this House for five or six weeks—it may have been seven Calendar Wednesdays—in the last Congress.

Mr. BARNHART. It was 19 Calendar Wednesdays.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Indiana corrects me and says it was 19. I remember that I was here most of that time considering the details of the various provisions. If the gentleman from Michigan will study the bill item by item he will find it is a logical, scientific measure and will save the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars. And yet a minute ago, under a bugaboo fear that we would be charged with having something of value to our credit for distribution to our constituents, the House was railroaded, on the spur of the moment, to strike out a section without any opportunity being given to the deserving chairman, who has worked hours and hours on this bill, to defend the vital provision of it. [Applause.] I say it was not fair play. Never before within my service in this House have I seen such methods adopted against the protest of the chairman of the committee, a man who has labored on it long hours and brought us something that would be of value and of service and will protect the interests of the Government and of Members. I say it was only fair that we should have given the chairman an opportunity to explain this provision.

A moment ago some Members were swayed with the belief that it would result in great expense by having a large number of bookkeepers to keep the books. That is a ridiculous proposition when the bookkeepers are already employed. They affected to believe that which every Member knows is an excuse. Here is a workable provision to have public documents credited to the Member, documents which he knows would be the most desirous and suitable for his district.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is enough to say that our constituents are already advised that we have documents to our credit for distribution. What is the criticism from constituents when we send out publications of little interest? We are sending them something that they have no use for whatever. You can not have any exchange bureau under those conditions. You can not exchange something which few Members have calls for. If the gentleman will study the bill he will find that there is a limited edition printed and the recurring editions are not to be printed unless there is a demand made on the part of Members for additional copies.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was going to ask along the line suggested by my colleague [Mr. BEAKES] whether or not the gentleman would think that, in view of the fact that the Agricultural Year Book costs possibly $400,000 to print, it would be a proper item to submit for public bids and get competitive bids, if it could be shown that there would be a saving of $50,000 on that one item alone?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman had studied the conditions he would know that the private contractors would offer a bid cutting down the public-printing price the first year, and after they got the contract would raise it so that the Government would ultimately pay the burden. We know when we contract for the printing of a publication which the Government prints we are getting full value and only asking the employees of the Government printing establishment a fair return for the employment which we demand of them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman does not answer my question whether or not he would be in favor of that?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I am not in favor of having the printing done at private establishments where working conditions may be different, where workmen may be worked 10 or 12 hours a day, and where children may be employed to do the work of men, while it is the policy of the Government to have its printing done at its own establishment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then the gentleman is against economy?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not against economy, but I am not in favor of sweatshop printing establishments over which the Government has no control [applause] while it is the Government's policy of having all supplies of value printed in an office under its own control.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Have not people outside of the Government Printing Office a right to live as well as those in the Printing Office?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; but the Government has the right to conserve its interests, and with a fully equipped plant it is a business proposition as to whether it should be kept running.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman is in favor of the Government printing everything, all of its supplies for its own use?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have already said that the Government established the policy of having its printing done in matters of value at its own establishment. We have been applying that policy in later years, and it would not be good business policy to now let that work out to private contract.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I want to say that I hope ways and means will be found before this bill is enacted into law whereby the paragraph providing for the valuation plan of all printed documents of every name and nature which has been stricken from this bill will be restored. I wonder whether every Member of this House realizes that the bill as framed will give each Member just what he wants and needs for distribution in his district, will give him such publications that are of real value to his constituents and at the same time save to the Government not less than $125,000 per annum. I can not believe that this House, on a purely business proposition, is ready to go on record as unwilling to correct a waste that has existed for years, which it is now purposed to rectify. There is not a Member of this House who would permit a waste of $125,000 per annum in his private business if he knew of it and knew how to stop it; if so, then why not stop it in governmental affairs and save so much of the people's money. The chairman of this committee has given this matter careful and intelligent thought, and there is no question but that the provision affecting this saving ought to be retained in the bill. The only possible excuse that anyone can have, and the only one advanced for voting against this section, is the fact that some Members are afraid their constituents will find out that he has to his credit $1,800 worth of printed material—documents, books, pamphlets, bulletins, and so forth—and that he has failed to send each constituent his proportionate share. I anticipate no such trouble. In fact, in order to distribute my allotment and place them into the hands of those who would benefit by them I sent out these little printed folders, which you all know we have, to thousands of my constituents and have asked them to mark what they would like to have.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. A catalogue of bulletins?

Mr. KREIDER. Yes; and I did it because I felt that those bulletins were really valuable and that my constituents were not aware of the fact that they were compiled and printed at great expense to the Government and that they were available and could be had for the mere asking. I do not object to printed matter, if it is such as the people want, will read, and be of some use, and benefit those who receive them, but I have a number of documents and publications placed to my credit that I have no earthly use for, and unless I can give them to some one who has use for them it is evident that the expense of printing them is a total loss. In order to get rid of them I offer them here and now in a public way to anyone who will take them and read them or send them to some one who will read them, but I do not want to give them to any Congressman who is going to send them out under his frank and let the man who receives them sell them for waste paper at a fraction of a cent per pound. I do not want to put the Government to the expense of transporting them in the mails if they are not going to be of any use to those who receive them.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KREIDER. Oh, I am going to give you a list of them. I have some thirty-odd agricultural experiment station reports for 1903, 1904, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I will take them.

Mr. KREIDER. I will give them to the gentleman. I am perfectly sincere in trying to find some one who has use for them. I am glad to get rid of them, to have them go out and serve the public and the use for which they were intended.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. KREIDER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman has frequently stated that these documents were worthless. Is not that a reflection upon the intelligence of Congress and the administrative officers of this Government when he says that they are spending public money for printing worthless documents?

Mr. KREIDER. I wish to say it is a reflection not only in this respect, but I can point to a number of instances where the Government has expended money foolishly—thrown it away deliberately, almost—and this is only one of the cases where I have raised my voice in an effort to stop such an uncalled-for and needless waste of the people's money.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KREIDER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to say that in my district last summer I found in one house a baby sitting on the compiled laws of Alaska instead of a high chair and the screen door kept closed with a Smithsonian report. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, I have 29 Agricultural Secretary's reports.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. What year?
Mr. KREIDER. 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912.
Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KREIDER. Yes.
Mr. EDWARDS. I want to know if the gentleman has any Horse Books to his credit?
Mr. KREIDER. No; and that is why I am in favor of this bill. I would like to have more horse books, cattle books, bird books, agricultural books, and farmers' bulletins and such things whereby I could impart useful information to my constituents instead of this uninteresting and dry reading that nobody wants or looks at. I have some Alaska laws of 1913. Possibly somebody might want them. I have some Alaska reports; anyone can have them. I have some Army Registers of 1909, 1910, and 1911. Those of you who would like to have those hold up your hands.
Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman may not be aware of the fact that he is reflecting on the industry of his predecessor.
Mr. KREIDER. I do not care on whom I am reflecting. I am giving the facts, and that is why I think the chairman of this committee and his committee have given us a good bill when they provide that this waste shall continue no longer, and they should be supported and commended, and I am going to raise my voice in favor of it, and the reason I do it is to call attention to the fact of existing law and why this bill should become a law; why that paragraph should not have been stricken from the bill. I have some reports of the Attorney General for 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, and 1911—46 in all. Do you want them? I have some canal reports, interoceanic, 1901, Senate report; some Senate reports of the Isthmian Canal, of 1899 and 1901—34 of them. I have a lot of civil-service reports of 1907 to 1912—45 of them. I have been trying to get rid of this stuff, but I could not find anybody who would take it and read it.

And I have some commerce reports of 1913. I will pass over a number of these. Also, Reports on Commerce and Labor, 1909, 1910, 1911; Reports on Commercial Relations, 1906 to 1912—about 30 of them. I have some forty-odd reports on Commerce and Navigation. I have a number of Congressional Directories of the Sixtieth and Sixty-first Congresses. I have 222 reports on the cotton tare—a special consular report. Some of the Members from the South may be able to use them.
Mr. EMERSON. How many of those old Congressional Directories have you?
Mr. KREIDER. About 90.
Mr. EMERSON. I will take those.
Mr. KREIDER. All right. I have 27 education reports of 1909, 27 of 1910, 14 of 1911, and 21 of 1912. Does anybody want them? I also have some copies of the Annual Report on Ethnology of 1896 and 1897, the eighteenth and ninteenth annual reports, in two volumes—15 in all. So I might go on and enumerate. I have 6 copies of Ethnology Bulletins No. 46, Choctaw Dictionary—a good book for anyone who desires to speak the Choctaw language correctly. I have also 5 reports of the Physiography of the Rio Grande Valley, N. Mex., in Relation to Pueblo Culture, and some 11 Bulletins No. 56, Ethnozoology of Tewa Indians; 6 Bulletins No. 57, Introduction to the Study of Maya; also 55 Reports on Finance, from 1906 to 1912.

I also have about 600 Geological Bulletins of every name and nature, which I do not seem to have any call for. Also, about 90 Geological Annual Reports, from 1908 to 1912. I have over 500 geological water-supply papers. I do not know what to do with them. So I might go on and enumerate hundreds, perhaps thousands, of other publications, all of which has cost the Government thousands of dollars to compile and print. I am speaking in all seriousness. It is because of the actual waste that is now going on which this bill, if enacted into law, will stop that I favor the bill, and I regret that it should meet this serious and seemingly determined opposition. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.
Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I would like to call attention to some of the publications that my friend from Pennsylvania has referred to as worthless.
Mr. KREIDER. I do not say they are worthless, but I have not found anybody who wants them.
Mr. FESS. I can not complete my set of geological reports——
Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to make a point of order on this matter, but it seems to me, with the amount of work we have to do, we ought to confine our remarks to the subject that is pending.
Mr. FESS. I have never made a point of no quorum; I have never objected to anybody or anything; and I do not intend to do so now.
Mr. BARNHART. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] mean to threaten?
Mr. FESS. No; I was just wanting to say that I have never obstructed. I am sweet-spirited. I do not object to anybody, and I think there ought to be something said in connection with what has just been said in regard to the value of certain reports that have been suggested are without value.
Mr. Chairman, I will take it for granted, however, that the House understands what I was going to say, and in the interest of procedure and my respect for the chairman of the committee I will desist.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BEAKES].
Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. In answer to what the gentleman from Michigan said to the effect that the Government Printing Office bid for printing a small contract was eight or nine times higher than the bill of the private contractor secured to do the work he mentioned, I want to read this. It is only a paragraph from a letter from the Public Printer. He says:

An examination of the original estimate made here shows the price to have been 11 cents and not $1.11.

So the gentleman from Michigan is mistaken in the figures and the percentages that he gave to the House. His amendment is based on what he states. Here is a letter from the Government Printing Office——
Mr. BEAKES. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.
Mr. BEAKES. Has the gentleman seen a letter sent by the Postmaster General to Senator FLETCHER, chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, in January last?
Mr. FINLEY. This letter, or the part of the letter I have read, is in answer to that letter, where the Post Office Department states the bid of the Government Printing Office to have been $1.11, and it should have been 11 cents.
Mr. BEAKES. The department does not state how much it was a thousand. It does not say anything about 11 cents.
Mr. FINLEY. I am giving the facts here.
Mr. BEAKES. You are referring to something different from what I am referring to.
Mr. FINLEY. I am referring to a positive statement made by the Government Printing Office.
Mr. BEAKES. I doubt if it has any reference to what I have been referring to.
Mr. FINLEY. There is no question about its referring to it and being a complete answer.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment stated by the gentleman from Michigan.
